CARDINAL LAVIGERIE AND SLAVERY.—Rev. J. C. Bracq, of Philadelphia, in The Missionary Review of the World, for October, says:—"One of the special features of Cardinal Lavigerie's work is the bold endeavour to stop slave-hunting by the sword. He proposes for Africa the revival of some of the old religious military orders of former days, moving about interrupting the work of the slave traders. Whether or not this part of the programme is realised, the campaign will take place, and volunteers are preparing for it. Will not these volunteers be a danger to Protestant establishments in Africa?" The Cardinal has described his work in a volume to which the writer refers as follows: "Great as his services have been to the anti-slavery cause, his anxiety to give the history of a work in which he is one of the chief factors; his parsimony in dealing with those who preceded him and prepared the ground for him; his finesse in making his Œuvre antiesclavagiste Roman Catholic; and his self-glorification, have led us to ask ourselves if this modern Urban II., this contemporary Peter the Hermit, has not much of Loyola in his spirit, and something of Boulanger in his methods? Be that as it may, it is certain that Protestants would do well to reflect before giving the Cardinal their money or their praises."

MRS. AHOK, OF FOOCHOW.

Rev. R. W. Stewart, C.M.S., whose wife interpreted for Mrs. Ahok when in England, writes to us:—

Many will be grieved to hear that this lady, who hastened back to China to her sick husband, did not arrive in time to see him again in this world. The last mail brought word that he had gone to be with his Saviour, and that she had not yet reached Foochow. What a bitter home-coming for that poor soul! She needs our prayers sorely.

It was a feeling of intense pity for her fellow-country people still in heathen darkness that led Mrs. Ahok to leave her home, her husband, and her only little boy, to plead with the women of England to go and "save them," the burden of her addresses might be summed up in these words, so frequently on her lips: "The Chinese are like lost sheep, you must go quickly and find them; they are in utter darkness, give them the light of God." With her whole heart she gave herself to this work, not caring to spend any of the precious time in seeing the wonderful sights of England. "Let me have she said, "or two, if possible, that I may tell a great many people, and then go back quickly to China." In about 100 days she had over ninety meetings. Even before she had finished all that were arranged for her, letters from China made her feel anxious about her husband, and she felt she must at once return home.

Mr. Ahok was fully in sympathy with his wife's object in coming to England; indeed, she often said she came as his "substitute." During his illness he wrote as follows:—"I realise how great God's grace is in allowing Mrs. Ahok to visit England, and I am so thankful to all the Christian friends who have helped and been kind to her. Many good people rejoice with me in this visit of hers, while others laugh and say my wife has been stolen away by the Christians. Tell Mrs. Ahok that I have been a little sick for some weeks. I find it very restful staying quietly at home. This slight illness has greatly benefited me, and drawn my heart nearer my Saviour. Tell Mrs. Ahok, please, not to worry at all about me."

When this letter reached England Mrs. Ahok had started on her way back to China, feeling impelled to return thither, yet sorry to leave before her work was finished. With much earnestness she implored those who were to take her place at the remaining meetings to give as her last message the words, "Come over and help us. The people of China are dying, dying! They are without God; oh, quickly come and save them." How solemn do her words seem now,—"dying," passing away day by day out of our reach.

"A million a month in China are dying without God." Oh, that the words might ring in the hearts of all Christ's servants rousing them to self-sacrifice in the cause of the Master we profess to love; leading some to follow the example of these dear Chinese servants of Christ, who only ten years ago were bowing down to idols of wood and stone, but who now show a love and devotion to the service of the Master that puts many of us to shame. May our pity and prayers be called forth for Mrs. Ahok in her terrible bereavement. She will have yet other sorrows to bear. Many will sneer and ask "Where is now thy God?" Our letters tell us of the heathen relatives standing round like vultures, watching for her husband's death, to seize on his property before she should return, and that it was possible she might, on reaching home, find herself almost penniless. May the Friend of Widows protect her!

SAILORS AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

No one acquainted with Constantinople can fail to realise without hesitation the great need that exists for the Rest there, under the superintendence of Miss H. L. Green-Armytage. The sixth report of the work, just issued, states that, in spite of manifold obstacles, last year's endeavours were attended by encouraging results.

Among the lost sheep found was a young Swede, who had learned too sadly that "the way of transgressors is hard," and who came out boldly on the side of Christ. Another attended the meetings very regularly, but could not find peace. A little tract called "Faith or Feeling" was given to him, which was the means, in God's hands, of bringing him to decision. He came the next morning, saying "It is all clear now; God has heard me and taken me. Now I must write to my old mother; she has been praying for me eight years. It will be the best letter she ever received from me, I'm sure." One who was really anxious about his soul attended the meetings, and found the seeking Saviour. He said: "I have got the Lord now in my heart, and no one will be able to take Him away from me; and even should my ship go down, I am not afraid, for I know I shall go straight to Him. How I love this place, and thank God for bringing me here. It was all his doing." The boatswain, shipmate of the former, who was brought to the Lord about the same time, told us how he had thrown all his novels overboard; "I don't want them now," said he.

The temperance work is fruitful; those signing the pledge have been led to join the Bible Reading Union. Copies of the Scriptures have been distributed, and ships visited as usual. Peculiar difficulties beset the work, for wrongdoing is unrestrained in the city, and the road to ruin is made attractive in various ways. Miss Green-Armytage writes:—"We who labour in the Rest are made to feel the almost overwhelming opposition of the enemy of souls in every effort we put forth to save the seamen from the traps and dangers which abound. This consolation, however, we have in it all, that the Lord of Hosts is on our side, and does save souls in our midst; otherwise the great enemy would not give us the trouble he does." Miss Kool, a lady from Amsterdam, who has had considerable experience in mission work in London, renders valuable assistance at the Rest.

THE MISSIONARY BUREAU.

From the time of its inception to the present, I have been keenly interested in this agency, and rejoice at the amount of good it has effected. To have aided thirty-nine this year into the missionary field, and to have counselled some 150 more, is no slight result. We have now before us the following candidates:—

Five missionaries for Mexico; the work is waiting, and they can be self-supporting. All that is needed is their passage money. Two for Cape Verde Islands. They are waiting to go as soon as funds permit, to work with a missionary already in the field. One for Eastern Bengal, where he will be afterwards maintained. Two for Johannesburg, who will be able to make their own way there, as soon as they reach their destination. For these, we need about £300.

Careful investigation has been made into all these cases, and it seems grievous that the work should be at a standstill for want of funds.

All communications to be addressed, The Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street.

MISSION TO WOMEN IN ST. GILES'S.

As we have previously shown, the Mission to Women which Mr. George Hatton commenced about two years ago, in connection with the St. Giles's Christian Mission, is a comparatively new departure. In a time of great public excitement, consequent on the non-discovery of the Whitechapel murderer, the incentive to go forward in the new enterprise seemed to be nothing less than a providential call. Happily the poorlost women who were now sought were not wanting in friends to subscribe funds for their reclamation! The gifts of those who had ample means were supplemented by the smaller offerings of others, so that three Homes in connection with this department alone were successively founded. These are now in full working order, and during 1889 no fewer than 750 women and girls found shelter in them, and thus had an opportunity afforded them of regaining an honest footing in the world.

As many friends and helpers will be aware, two of the Homes are actually in St. Giles's parish. The roomy old house in Drury-lane could not be more conveniently situated for its purpose, and it affords accommodation for fifty or sixty inmates at one time. The smaller establishment at Seven Dials, and once a disreputable public-house at that notorious centre, will receive about half as many. This is not only a house of refuge for many who find no other open door; it is besides a veritable Gospel lighthouse in one of the darkest quarters of Western London. The Training Home at Kentish Town is an old-fashioned house, with an exceptionally large garden; and, being admirably adapted for its purpose, it provides accommodation for about thirty inmates, who are carefully trained for domestic service.

It should be remembered that this is no mere local work; the helping hand is extended to all in need in all parts of London. This fact has been recognised by the police authorities, who have co-operated with the Mission in the most cordial manner. Both by day and by night there are always found some friendless women and girls without homes, and without means to get even a temporary lodging. Who shall take pity on these to save them from the perdition which threatens them? The policeman or the mission agent is more than likely to be the only friend in need who will confront such in the hour of distress; and hence the ex-Commissioner at Scotland-yard humanely ordered that "all such are to be at once taken to the nearest police-station, in order that the inspector on duty may communicate with the secretary of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, who will receive them into one of the Mission Homes until permanently relieved and cared for, the Mission defraying all the expenses." Those who assist in such an enterprise will realise that nothing could approach nearer to the truest Christian charity. Those who have given once, when they hear of the hundreds who have been saved, will be prompted to give again.

Of course it will be borne in mind in connection with such a work as this that a proportion of those who are reached are not all "lost" in the conventional sense. Whenever the opportunity occurs, a young woman who has not fallen at all, will be saved for life from the fate which threatens her. The work is necessarily a somewhat costly one, and money from the general fund may at times need to be given to keep the exchequer replenished; but it is one which the Christian friends of erring young women will not allow to be minished and brought low for want of supplies. There was a worthy man who contributed largely to such work, and who was wont to say that he could not bear to think of any young woman being turned away through lack of means to meet her case.

As might be expected, the most valuable testimony to the value of the work comes from the girls and women themselves. The letters received from many who are now doing well in the world are of the most encouraging character, and their gratitude will at times find expression in their solicitude for relatives who have not experienced similar happy deliverance. It need hardly be added that the Mission seeks the salvation of the souls as well as the bodies of these unhappy creatures. It deserves to be still farther extended, because it is carried on in the name of the Lord, who came "to save that which was lost."

Mr. George Hatton has returned to 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C., and though he has not recovered his health the work will still be carried on with vigour.

GOSPEL WORK IN SPITALFIELDS.

Many of our readers will recollect that on the retirement some time ago of Mr. W. J. Lewis, on account of ill-heath, from the Spitalfields Gospel Mission, his place as superintendent was taken by Mr. James Sharpless.

The Mission premises have now, however, passed into other hands, so that in future Mr. Sharpless will carry on home visitation, lodging-house and open-air work, under the general title of "Home Visiting Work."

He writes from 14, Sidney-square, E.: "I am glad to say our people have not been scattered through the closing of the hall, as Mr. Holland has kindly taken them into George-yard, where they now feel at home. Mr. Holland will also gladly answer any inquiries respecting myself, or the work I am now engaged in, having known me intimately for over twenty-nine years."

TEETOTAL VITAL STATISTICS.—Dear Sir,—With a view to the demonstration of the benefit of abstinence from alcoholic beverages in the promotion of longevity, I am endeavouring to obtain as full a list as possible of abstainers of forty years' standing and upwards; and I shall be greatly obliged if your readers who come under this category will kindly forward to me their names, with residence, age, year of signing the pledge or of beginning continued abstinence, and occupation. And I shall be happy to send forms to any who may be generously disposed to help in the procuring of signatures.—I am, yours faithfully,

Thomas Snow.

Underbarrow Parsonage, Kendal.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Mr. A. Draper writes from the Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues:—"A rich wave of blessing has been poured out upon the men in barracks here. We have just concluded an eight days' mission, held at the Home. The gatherings were good each night. Several soldiers were truly converted to God; believers were quickened and strengthened in their Christian life. Leading men of the town conducted the services. We praise God for his goodness, and give Him the glory. At the Home two Bible-classes are held weekly, and largely attended. We should be thankful if some kind friend would send us a few Bibles, Sankey's hymns, tracts, or help us in any other way to carry on this noble work among our soldier-friends in this garrison."

THE GREAT AFRICAN FIELD.—Rev. J. Vernall, C.M.S. missionary, Lagos, West Africa, writes:—"In Africa some 700 languages are spoken; the great Negro family, living mostly in the Southern Soudan and around the Gulf of Guinea, speaks 195 languages and 49 dialects. If we were to send two missionaries to each people speaking a distinct language, we should want 1400 workers, whereas I suppose there are not as yet more than 500 all told in Africa. The Soudan is a great belt stretching 3500 miles across the continent, with between 80 and 90 millions of people. At Lagos there is, in connection with the C.M.S., a self-supporting native church of six congregations, of which the largest has a membership of 1300. There is a Native Church Missionary Society, employing eight native agents for work in the regions beyond and around. God has done great things, whereof we are glad; but more remains, for there are still in the island of Lagos some 3000 heathen and Mohammedans.

Young Men and Vice.

ADDRESSES AT THE Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE, BIRMINGHAM, SEPT. 25.

IN the absence of Lord Lichfield, the president of the Birmingham Y.M.C.A., the chair was taken by Mr. A. M. CHANCE. He said there were many signs of encouragement in the present day in connection with temperance. Many now consider it "bad form" (1) To exchange drinks over trade bargains. (2) To take "nips" between meals. (3) To enter a public-house bar unless as bonâ fide travellers.

The wide-spread establishment of cocoa-houses was another happy indication. In closing, the chairman made a spirited protest against the fact that eight columns of one of the leading local newspapers were filled on the previous day with betting and sporting news. It was his conviction that nothing but the grace of God can eradicate the passion from the heart of the gambler.

The Hon. and Rev. Canon LEIGH said that the heroes selected by God, as recorded in the Old Testament, were all young men. He quoted a number of instances in which doctors, sailors, miners, and others had died for the salvation of their fellows. Surely Christians above all men ought to be ready to make some sacrifice to save some poor brother from ruin. This is the argument for total abstinence: ready to deny oneself for the sake of Christ and our fellow-men. The ruin wrought is so awful that it causes men to bind themselves together to withstand it. He appealed to the members of the Association to do all in their power to advance the cause of temperance.

GAMBLING.

The Hon. and Rev. EDWARD LYTTELTON said it is hard to say where gambling begins.

What does a man say when he plays for little sums? It makes the game a little more exciting. Of what is that excitement composed? It is born and bred of covetousness. Gamblers say, No; they do not want another man's money. But if you ask, "Then why not play with counters?" they make no reply. Gamblers are not sportsmen enough to play a game unless it is to save their own money or to win somebody else's. Gambling stands on a different footing to drink and gluttony. They are only sin when carried to excess; but a man cannot gamble without sin, even in moderation. If total abstinence from drink is needed, much more from gambling. When we understand the matter rightly, we see that we are not possessors of our money, only stewards. Few subjects occupy so much space in the Gospel as the use of money. Is it good stewardship to risk one's money to get excitement, at one's own expense, if need be, but preferably at the expense of another?

A corpse of a suicide was lately found. Beside it was a letter in a bold handwriting. In it the dead man pleaded with young men to keep away from gambling as from poison. Suppose you and I came across the body of a suicide. I ask, "Why, who is this?" You say, "A friend of mine." "Why dead?" "Through gambling." "Who taught him?" "I, for little sums." Where would be your refined and subtle arguments then?

What about trade and investments? Trade may be mixed up with gambling, but it need not be. Trade, in its essence, is honest service of our fellow men. In investments, the first consideration should be, not is the interest high, but will the use to which it is put be good or bad? Gambling begins in every case where covetousness comes in. The same holds good with the Stock Exchange. The speaker believed that the committee do their best to keep the house pure. They were nearly sued at law the other day for blackballing a gambler. Stock and share investments are honest and useful operations of trade. They are so, so long as the investment is connected with good and honourable uses. Gambling and betting

RUIN EVERYTHING THEY TOUCH.

They have ruined all the associations connected with that noble animal, the horse. They are now going on to ruin two of the noblest games we have in England—cricket and football. Umpires and referees at football matches have had to be escorted from the field, in fear of their lives, by policemen, because a fair decision caused discontent amongst the gamblers. Let us band together, and endeavour at all costs to keep these noble games pure.

IMPURITY.

Rev. F. W. MACDONALD said: Next year the census will be taken throughout our land; but the supreme question will not be in the schedule. It is not, how many? but, what sort? The moral quality of our people is terribly deteriorated by the evils protested against to-night. But this question must go unanswered; for a sin-ometer has yet to be constructed.

Impurity, "the pestilence that walketh in darkness," is the cause of endless misery, sickness, suffering, and death. It is the root of every crime in the calendar. Its record is in every hospital, asylum, and gaol; and often on the gallows. It is not, however, by its fruits that this evil can be gauged. In itself, in the moral and spiritual defilement, is its chief curse. Almost every evil man may survive. Poverty, sickness, and even death may shoot their last bolt, and there is nothing more that they can do; the man himself survives. But, if rotten in heart; if lust is his lord, the man has suffered the supremest loss—he has lost himself. Redeemed for oneness with the Son of God, he has thrown himself away on lust.

Let us renew our covenant vows to-night, that, by God's grace, we will keep ourselves pure.

Impurity is not likely to disappear before education and culture, as intemperance, in a measure, does. Impurity is in no sense the sin of the slums. A high state of civilisation, a cynical disregard of religion and philosophy, these are the conditions under which it thrives. What humbling lessons we have learned during the last few years. There is hardly one of the more favoured and higher levels of English society that has not given humiliating demonstration of the fact. No exalted position gives a guarantee for even decency of behaviour. The only hope for the world concerning this great moral canker lies in bringing to bear on human life the distinctive power of Christianity. One touch of the hand of the Saviour of men will cast out more devils than whole centuries of philosophy. The religion of Jesus Christ is the only one that seriously CONCERNS ITSELF ABOUT IMPURITY.

Under all the religious systems of the world lie vast sinks of impurity.

This matter of impurity is the central conflict for each man in his life's probation. The dread question for each man is whether this lust shall destroy him, or he shall destroy it? This appeal must be met by resources which Jesus Christ places at the disposal of the weakest believer.

It is recorded of a British statesman that when at one time the equilibrium of the European Powers was threatened, looking at the North American Continent, he resolved to call in the New World to reduce the balance of the Old. The power of the sensual is terrible. How can we bear up? Let us call in the other world; take hold on new sources of strength, by becoming humble, loving disciples of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. We, on a sinful but redeemed earth, receive help and strength from heaven to work out the heavenly ideal here; and by and by heaven will give us our welcome and furnish our home.

A GOOD WORK NEAR HARROW.

THE Parish of St. John's, Wembley, about three miles from Harrow, has been visited lately by Mr. W. R. Lane, who conducted a tent mission in the village of Alperton. The vicar of Wembley, Rev. Alfred M. Maynard, had for a long time been anxious to reach the people in this part of his parish, and when he met Mr. Lane three months ago, and succeeded in gaining his promise to come with his tent, he had great hopes of the result, and he now feels that his most sanguine hopes have been realised.

From the very commencement to the end of the series it was evident that the Lord was working mightily. After the first night the attendance increased; night after night the tent was quite full. During the second week the borders had to be enlarged—part of the canvas wall being taken down—as many came who could not find room inside. The attention was most marked, a large number being those who never attended any place of worship.

After the first two or three days, several professed to have given themselves to the Lord; but during the second week the power of the Holy Ghost was most manifest, and the after-meetings were very impressive. One night particularly, after Mr. Lane had been urging those who had decided for Christ to confess Him openly, one after another rose to testify to the saving grace and love of God. Then an invitation was given for those to rise who desired to be prayed for. One mother rose and with tears begged that her son might be prayed for; then others for themselves, and the deep feeling, the tears, and the earnestness of purpose, were most touching, and hearts appeared to be broken down all round; many that night proving for themselves the truth that "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise."

On the evening of the closing meeting the tent was crowded to excess inside, there being from fifty to sixty who could not find room, and more of the canvas had to come down. From 7 to 7.30 was spent in praise, and after the meeting had been opened with prayer by Rev. I. F. Andrewes, of Roxeth, the Vicar spoke a few words of thankfulness and earnest counsel, urging those who had accepted Christ to join themselves to some body of Christians. After a few words by Messrs. R. C. Morgan and R. Paton, Mr. Lane delivered an address, based upon Isa. liii. 1. Hearts were deeply moved by the impressiveness of his words. He urged, he entreated those who had not yet decided for the Master to do so. Having spoken in most plain and unmistakable language of the danger of those who rejected the call, he closed with a few hearty words of encouragement and counsel for those who had accepted. The effort throughout was supported by many Christian workers of various denominations from the district, foremost among whom was General Copland Crawford, who, in spite of his advanced age, was present with his daughter at almost every meeting.

"REGIONS BEYOND" (Partridge).—The current issue of this serial gives deeply interesting details of the work of Mr. McKittrick and his fellow labourers on the Congo. Miss Guinness describes, with much power and beauty, a journey from the province of Honan to Shanghai, after a year's labour inland. The pictures this month include a portrait of Mandombi, a Congo native suffering from sleeping sickness. This is a terrible malady, very prevalent among the natives on the banks of the lower Congo; and no medical treatment for it is at present known. Mandombi, a devoted young Christian, has come to England to die, in the hope that medical observation, as well as the results of a post-mortem examination may prove of benefit to others who may fall victims to this singular, but fatal disease.

American Notes.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

I HEARD a beautiful story recently. As the pastor of a new charge mounted the steps of his pulpit, his eye caught a design made by white lilies, with the words formed by scarlet carnations, "Sir, we would see Jesus." The idea took full possession of him. He faced his congregation, and with tearful face said, "You want to see Jesus? Well, let us seek a view of Him." Whereupon he poured out his soul in prayer with this end in view. His sermon was greatly blessed, and many souls believed in the Lord. Oh, that every preacher may hear this inquiry, "Sir, we would see Jesus!"

The New England Evangelistic Association, with headquarters in Boston, continues its onward movement. The spiritual destitution of such States as Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire is deplorable. Whole villages and hamlets are sadly neglected, and where churches exist, orthodoxy is well-nigh choked by the rude hands of Unitarian scepticism and prevalent indifference. The Evangelistic Association is sending earnest men into these needy fields, and precious results follow. As incidental work it has provided pastors for twenty-nine churches, and temporarily supplied about eight hundred pulpits. As the outcome of one evangelistic visit in a destitute region one hundred and sixty-seven persons publicly confessed Christ. More than a hundred families were represented by these converts.

A ride of 1500 miles from Boston has brought us to the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota. Already this city numbers nearly 140,000 souls, while its twin sister city of St. Paul, ten miles away, has a population of about 120,000. The Missionary Training Institute founded by Dr. Guinness is in the former city. It is at present without a president, as Dr. Mabie, its first president, has gone on a tour of the mission fields round the world. There is a stirring missionary spirit in these quarters. The Churches and Missionary Boards are deeply exercised over the difficulties of encouraging and utilising this great movement.

No doubt the old methods will become more elastic to meet the new demands, and possibly independent societies will be organised in many sections. The American Board represented by the Congregational churches will meet soon in this city, when great missionary problems will receive careful and prayerful attention. Of this we will speak hereafter.

The Union Evangelistic services now going on are encouraging. The daily Bible lectures are well attended. The next Evangelistic campaign of this scribe will be held in St. Paul. Other Evangelists are at work. Messrs. Moody, Whittle, Munhall, Hammond, Thomas Needham, &c., hope to send cheering reports from the fields where they labour.

A blessed Missionary Convention was held recently in Indianapolis. There were present representatives of several Missionary Societies, and missionaries representing seventeen languages. A wonderful spirit of consecration came upon the delegates. The Convention appeals for one hundred thousand missionaries to enter the ripening fields of the world. Is not this a day of great things? Shall we limit the Holy One of Israel?

MANCHESTER WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION has recently had the benefit of addresses from Mrs. Nye, of Coventry, Miss Needham, of Openshaw, and Mrs. Hind Smith. Work is carried on among prisoners, and a new Home for Inebriates has been established at Fallowfield. Mr. Samuel Lamble, of Higher Broughton, is treasurer.

RUSSIAN JEWS FOR PALESTINE:

SOME FACTS AND SUGGESTIONS

(BY AN EYEWITNESS.)

PERHAPS the testimony of an eyewitness to some facts connected with the present influx of Russian Jews to Jerusalem may be welcomed by your readers. Reference has recently been repeatedly made in these columns to the persecution of God's ancient people in Russia. It is harrowing to hear details from the refugees themselves, as they pass southward along the Syrian coast en route to Jaffa. It appears they have great difficulty, in some provinces at least, even to escape from the land of their sorrows. The commonest rights of humanity are denied them there; but not only so, they are not at liberty to migrate. Extermination, not banishment, is the merciless design of their enemies. So that, even where the expenses of the journey to Palestine or elsewhere can be met, escape through the frontiers or at the ports, is only effected through some system of false passports which money obtains. So some of the Jews, themselves just escaped from Russia, tell me. As to this point I am not informed from any other source.

Some twenty to fifty families are landed weekly in Jaffa, the seaport of Jerusalem. There are three or four lines of steamers having a weekly or semi-monthly service from Constantinople and Russian ports. These are crowded with refugee Jews. The writer recently had occasion to take passage in an Austrian streamer from Beyrout south. I was a "deck" passenger, and found myself in a crowd of Israelites, who, with their effects, filled and more than filled every available place on the ship. Many were old men and women. There were many families; some were apparently very poor, and others not so. A number were to be seen at the hour of prayer, with the light wrap worn at prayer over head and shoulders, with phylacteries on forehead and hand, with their sad faces turned towards the holy city, praying and reciting in concert. Many of the older women were also devout.

It was pathetic to see how these people, so terribly "scattered and peeled," "a nation wonderful from the beginning hitherto," had only escaped the greater oppression of Russia to encounter the lesser cruelty of others. Everywhere they are a prey. Every other race and religion may heap indignities upon them which they must bear. This I witnessed. There were some comely maidens among these Jewish passengers. One of these I saw insultingly caressed by some young sailors—Austrians I think. Another shrank back as the coarse hand of a Mohammedan boatman at Jaffa chucked her beneath the chin. She and her friends were unresisting, but the writer promptly interfered to prevent its repetition.

It was also heart-rending to see the treatment of these homeless ones in disembarking. No expostulations availed to prevent the Mohammedan boatman from throwing their boxes and packages from the deck or ladder into the boats below, by which everything breakable suffered. But this was of little moment compared with the handling of the passengers themselves. To say they were treated like cattle would fall short of the truth. I saw little babes passed from boat to boat, hanging by a limb just as happened, while the mother shrieked in a frenzy of terror. I saw old men, after getting down the ladder into one boat, laid hold of by several rival boatmen and pulled back and forth in a most painful way, while the terror on their faces is indelibly fixed on mind and heart. The helplessness of all, in their ignorance of the language (Arabic) was pitiable.

I give these facts, not only to show to those who are looking for our Lord's return how the beginning of the end has indeed come, but to make a practical suggestion or two. One has reference to the needs of these poor emigrants upon their arrival at the port of Jaffa. Through the bounty of some Christians in England, could not some suitable person be stationed at Jaffa who would meet each steamer with all arrangements made for landing them without imposition, insult, or needless suffering, and who would also arrange for their journey by waggon to Jerusalem from Jaffa? Such a one must know Arabic and Russian, if possible. He must be so introduced and so circumstanced as to command respect, and be able to call for consular interference if necessary. Probably one of Christian and not Jewish nationality would be best. This, it seems to me, should be done, if for no higher reason, on the principles of common humanity. If the representative in question was also able to use the golden opportunity of their stepping for the first time on the sacred soil of Immanuel's land, to speak to their hearts of their Messiah, how great would be the gain! A Jewish citizen of Jaffa did come off to meet some of his co-religionists. But he was able to accomplish little on their behalf in comparison with what the occasion called for.

Another suggestion is that the opportunity of this Jewish exodus be embraced by there being sent forth one or more Jewish missionaries, equipped with the needed languages, whose work would be to join these steamers as they moved, say, from one port to the next, speaking to the Israelites of their Messiah. After a day or two thus spent on one steamer, the missionary could go northward again to meet and accompany the next steamer. The exceptional opportunities each steamer affords for getting the Hebrew New Testament into the hands of those for whom it is intended, could be made use of by the missionary. He should be willing to endure hardness, taking, like most of the Jews he seeks to reach, a "deck" passage on these coast steamers. He might find in their exiled condition and great suffering a mellowing preparation for his message.

Is not all this a work within the ability of Rev. J. Wilkinson, the honoured director of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews and his co-workers? The writer would heartily commend it to him. Would not such a service, wrought continually in the present chief route of Israel's prophetic return to their own land, leave an indelible impression upon them as a whole, as they continue by hundreds and thousands to crowd homeward? And how great would be the honour of any who contribute toward the enlightenment of those who, though they may not now be converted, will yet constitute the faithful "remnant," which, in the fast approaching time of "Jacob's trouble," will withstand the claims and blasphemous pretensions of the Antichrist—"the third part," which will be brought through the fire, and for whose deliverance and full conversion Christ will "suddenly come to his temple!"

FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE IN PARIS.—The Committee in Paris of the Evangelical Alliance have arranged for a Conference upon the work of the Gospel in French-speaking countries, to be held from October 14 to 17. The circular of invitation says: "These meetings will have a two-fold object. They will be meetings for consecration, and for the study of practical matters (among them the work of evangelisation). It will be a happy thing to ask for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit at the beginning of a new year of work, and will also be very useful to study together various questions in view of the urgent needs that press upon us." The subject proposed for meditation and exposition is: "Jesus our salvation, our hope, our model, and how to develop the Christian life and activity in and among us." The subjects for discussion include—evangelisation, after-meetings, visitation, and tracts, special difficulties of work in Catholic countries, temperance, medical missions, &c. All communications respecting the meetings should be addressed to M. Louis Saulter, 14, Avenue de l'Alma, Paris. Friends from England and Scotland will have a cordial welcome.

LITTLE KATHLEEN;

OR, SUNNY MEMORIES OF A CHILD-WORKER.

II.—Life in Switzerland.

When Kathleen was six and a half years old, her father's health obliged the family to go and live in Switzerland. For Kathie this change was delightful. Young as she was, she had eyes and a mind to admire the grandeur and beauty around her, as well as a heart to adore the God who had made it all; and the three years spent in the Rhone Valley and in Lausanne did much to develop her innate love of nature. To her the glorious mountains, the smiling valleys, the sparkling lakes, were all objects of unceasing wonder; and she revelled in their beauty until her little being seemed to thrill with delight. It was a pleasure to call her attention to anything lovely in nature, for one was sure of a ready response.

But, with all her admiration for the grand and beautiful, there was a simplicity about Kathie, which was very refreshing. Such a child-like child she was! To gather hedgerow and field flowers and make "surprises" with them for her friends—this was an unfailing delight. How constantly she would wreathe all the plates on the breakfast table with flowers, putting, perhaps, in the middle, texts which she had written.

Nature to Kathie was full of "treasures." It furnished her with "collections" of dried leaves, pressed flowers, and "precious stones" (i.e., pebbles and crystals of pretty colour or shape). Or she would, maybe, come bounding in with radiant face to exhibit some tiny mosses which she was about to plant in her garden.

"There, now, look, papa! isn't that little one beautiful?"

And just like a rill on its way to the torrent would the merry musical voice prattle on about the grand findings of the day.

Several brothers had by this time been added to the family, while, later, came a warmly-welcomed little sister. With these younger ones Kathie's influence was wonderful. With all of them she was thoughtful and kind. In her they had a truly wise little mother-sister.

As Kathie had a decided mind of her own, and a superabundance of life, energy, and inventiveness—a perfect wealth of resource—she was bound, whether with older children or younger ones, to be recognised as leader. But they always loved to follow her lead; no clashing of wills was possible in the presence of her gentle tact, persuasive powers, and unselfish spirit. The boys would be turned aside from doubtful pursuits, and engaged in a dozen pleasant ways before they had time to think about the matter. Sometimes she would bring them in dressed as strolling minstrels in odds-and-ends attire, and with musical instruments taken from the fireplace or selected from amongst the kitchen utensils. How her merry eyes would twinkle! And the fun would finish up in peals of laughter.

Sometimes rough romps and trials of strength, with a give-and-take accompaniment of cuffs and bumps, would be the safety-valve by which a little of the superfluous steam of her exuberant vitality was let off.

Anyone who had seen the buoyant natural life of this little child might have echoed in all good faith Hetty Bowman's lines:—

> Not a bit too good to live;
> Mother need not fear.

And yet, with all her buoyancy, she had a very timid, nervous temperament, from which she might have had to suffer much as years went on. Few, perhaps, seeing her power of self-control of late years would have guessed how she had to struggle to attain it. If any small accident happened to her brothers, she would first break the news quietly to her mother, and then go backwards and forwards quickly to fetch water or sponge, or anything else that was wanted. But when the necessity for exertion and self-repression was over, her mother usually found herself with a second little patient on her hands.

"Mother dear," she would say, "I tried to say it as quietly as possible, so as not to frighten you."

Light-hearted as our little Kathie was, too, her conscience was sensitive to any approach of sin, even when it took a form which would not have troubled many another child.

For instance, when she was about five years of age, a friend came to the house, who brought a box of pain d'épices for the children, which they, of course, very much enjoyed. Some time afterwards the same friend came again, and that night, after her prayers, Kathie burst into tears, saying—

"Oh, mother, I have been such a wicked little girl to-day!"

When asked what she had been doing, she confessed that when she saw Madame V—— the thought came into her mind that, perhaps, she had brought them some more pain d'épices; and she could not forgive herself for the naughty, greedy thought.

Another time, the Christmas of 1887, the girls at the school which Kathie went to were in great distress because their holidays began later than those of other schools; and one of them said:

"It would be better for Mademoiselle to go and 'feed geese'* than to be keeping us here when everyone else has holidays."

This speech amused Kathie, who always saw the comical side of everything, and she laughed heartily; and the next day some of her schoolfellows coming up to the house, they laughed over it together again.

After the girls had gone, the little one's conscience reproached her, and, going to her mother's room, she, with nervous haste, induced one of her little brothers who was there to run away; and then she locked the door and burst into tears, saying, with an intensity of feeling which almost frightened her mother,

"Oh, mother, I have been so wicked!"

Then she told all that had passed, and the mother said,

"But, my darling, did you say it, too?"

"No," she replied, "I didn't say it; but I laughed, and I reminded them; and that was just as bad."

Poor little child! She felt that she had been disloyal to the teacher whom she really loved.

Once, to a teacher's inquiry as to whether she had done all her lessons, she hastily replied that she had. She remembered immediately afterwards that there was one which she had not finished, but she was just rushing out to play with some of the girls, and did not go back to say so. She came back that night very quiet. Her mother saw that something was wrong; and, as usual, Kathie soon told her everything. On being advised to tell her governess all about it the next morning, she said:

"Do you think I might write a little letter? It would be easier than saying it."

She was told to do whichever she liked best; and she went away and wrote a most touching note, signing herself, "Ta malheureuse petite élève." †

"Happy little Kathie," rather, we should say, with a loving Heavenly Father and wise earthly parents to whom at once to unburden any passing grief. For, the trouble once confessed, every cloud rolled away from the sunshiny little spirit, and all again was brightness.

Yet the guileless soul which so shrank from sin in any shape or guise in her own heart might have had much to suffer as years went on and brought her in contact with the unavoidable evils of "this troublesome world."

The Lord knew better than the dearest earthly friend what was best for her. She is safely shielded now—"rid of all those things that were in her an annoyance to her," and happy with the spirits of just men made perfect.

It is impossible to describe Kathie's enjoyment of her Lausanne school-life experiences. Her sociable, loving nature expanded in contact with other girls; and her frank, sunny ways took the hearts of both teachers and scholars by storm. The principal once said that, even when out of the schoolroom, she always knew when Kathie had arrived. From every side bursts of laughter would immediately arise, while above all rose the sound of her clear, merry, little voice.

All the girls wanted to be friends with her; and school-girl quarrels subsided quickly into peace when it was known which side Kathie had taken. Every one must needs side with her!

"My little girl quarrels with all her other companions, but never with Kathie," a lady said once.

Kathie entered into her studies with the same enthusiasm that she threw into her play; and her industry, intelligence, and very remarkable memory, enabled her always to keep ahead of companions older than herself.

"I never had a pupil like Kathie," said one of her teachers: "so good and studious, and so thoughtful for me!"

"Elle babille trop."* Whatever might be Kathie's inward sense of sin, this was the only fault that others, whether at school or at home, could find with her.

* Paitre les oies is a French idiom for which there is, perhaps, no exact English equivalent.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Oct. 12, Exod. vii. 14—25; Mon., Oct. 13, Exod. viii. 1—19; Tues., Oct. 14, Exod viii. 20—32; Wed., Oct. 15, Exod. ix. 1—12; Thurs., Oct. 16, Exod. ix. 13—26; Fri., Oct. 17, Exod. ix. 27—35; Sat., Oct. 18, Exod. x. 1—15.

CHILDREN'S MISSION AT BRONDESBURY.—Special services for young people were held at St. George's, Brondesbury, from September 21 to Oct. 3, by Mr. T. Lewis Sayer. The attendance increased nightly, and great blessing rested on the work. Several competitions were held, and in these the young people took keen and active interest. A marked feature of the mission was a "White Cross" service for boys only, and special addresses to girls and young ladies. At the final service Revs. E. Welsh, Duncan Sillars, and J. Durran gave addresses to a crowded audience.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Tyler, Victory-place, Walworth, Oct. 12—14; Thorner, near Leeds, Oct. 19—24; St. Saviour's, Preston, Oct. 26—31. Mr. T. L. Sayer, Haverstock Hill Presbyterian Church, Oct. 12—24; Christ Church, Coventry, Oct. 26. Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Lecture Hall, Sunnyside-road, Hornsey-rise, Oct. 12—17. Mr. C. H. Collier, Cornwall-road Hall, Brixton, Oct. 20—22. Mr. Ed. Hughes, Trinity Chapel Lecture Hall, Brixton, Oct. 20—22. Mr. George Goodman, Matthias-road Mission Room, Stoke Newington, Oct. 20—22; Baptist Chapel, Dawes-road, Fulham, Oct. 27—31. Rev. Martin Hall, St. James' Church, Taunton, Oct. 18—23.

The Annual Meetings for Seaside Reports will be held at Princes Hall, Piccadilly, W., on Mon., Oct. 13, afternoon and evening; and at Strangeways Hall, Manchester, Oct. 20.

A RETROGRADE MOVEMENT.—A Bill is shortly to be brought before the New South Wales Assembly having for its object the repeal of nearly all existing legislation for the preservation in the colony of the sanctity of the Sabbath.—The Rock.

Dublin Christian Convention.

The seventeenth of these annual reunions took place last week in the Christian Union Buildings. A conversazione on Monday evening was a fitting preliminary. The chairman, Mr. John R. Fowler, J.P., referred to the first of these conventions, held in the Exhibition Buildings during the first visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Numerous testimonies come to them of the great help the meetings of the Convention had from time to time been to clergymen in remote districts and to Christian workers in various parts of Ireland, who had come to this city for spiritual strength and refreshment. He regretted the absence from the meetings of the Archbishop, who was attending the Church Congress, at which his Grace was to read a paper on "Home Reunion." This subject, in which the Archbishop took such a deep interest, would have been brought before them by the Archbishop had he been able to be present.

There was a pleasant freshness about the subsequent meeting, inasmuch as the speakers were other than those who are usually met with on similar platforms. It seems desirable that there should be an increasing number of speakers as these Conventions increase, rather than that the teaching and exhortation should be confined to a few men, however devout and however able.

The first speaker was a veteran missionary of the Church Missionary Society in Ceylon, Rev. J. Ireland Jones, M.A., of Trinity College, Dublin. He has laboured in Ceylon since 1857, and after having been detained at home from ill-health for several years, is returning next month to his post at Kandy. He is well known for the stand he made in Ceylon against the Ritualistic tendencies of the Bishop of Colombo. Mr. Jones is the author of a handbook of Singhalese, and was chairman of the committee of revision of the Singhalese Bible.

The other speakers included Rev. J. J. Luce, Gloucester; Rev. Geo. Davidson, B.Sc., Edinburgh, and minister of Free St. Mary's in that city, under whose ministry the membership of the church has been raised from 250 to 1200; Rev. G. P. Taylor, M.A., an able and valued Presbyterian missionary in India; Rev. J. A. Macdonald, who has been a Wesleyan missionary for upwards of eleven years; Rev. Peter Thompson, director of the Wesleyan East End Mission in London, who gave additional zest to the Conference; Rev. Thomas Graham, M.A., Incumbent of St. Bride's, Liverpool, a writer and an able and spiritual preacher; Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, of London, whose paper on "Deleterious Literature," which we reproduce at length, is a highly useful and timely manifesto on the abuse of one of the most important factors in our national life; Rev. Henry Simon, M.A. successor to Dr. Raleigh.

The subject of the first address, by Rev J Ireland Jones, was second to none in importance and interest—the consecration to Royal Priesthood. The Priesthood of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of those whom He has made a kingdom of priests to his God and Father, though it lies at the foundation of the Scriptural teaching in regard to holiness, has been conspicuous by its absence from the programme of conventions of this character. The truth of Christ in us has been affirmed, but the provision which God has made for us in our Great High Priest in the presence of God, and of the priesthood of all believers, has not received equal attention. With deep interest, therefore, we listened to the lessons drawn from the consecration of Aaron to the priesthood, in Levit. viii., and the ordinances of Exod. xxviii. We purpose to extend our notes of this valuable exposition in an early number.

We regret that want of space prevents our reporting even briefly the many excellent utterances of other speakers. A very interesting episode was the meeting of a few friends to meet Rev. J. T. Hallowes to discuss the and the attempt of the priests there to put down that form of the testimony of Jesus. It was suggested that nothing would do more to end the disturbances than sketches of the open-air meetings in the illustrated papers.

Mr. Hallowes is a quiet and resolute man, evidently not seeking notoriety, but having been divinely led, as he believes, to take this stand for the Gospel, determined to maintain his ground. It was felt by all present that the right and liberty of open-air preaching in many parts of Ireland was at stake, and for this reason they could not allow themselves to be howled and mobbed down.

Rev. Thomas Connellan (whom our readers will remember as the priest who swam ashore, leaving his boat on Lough Ree, came to London, and came out into the light under the teaching of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe), said that when asked about this work at Arklow, he had replied that he would be slow in starting it, praying and waiting on God for counsel, but once led to enter upon it he would hold on to it. He would be proud to stand by Mr. Hallowes. How are the Irish people ever to hear the Gospel? A most material help to Mr. Hallowes would be for others to do what he had done. The struggle would be short and the principle of open-air preaching would be affirmed.

This little gathering will have important results. Some who came questioning the wisdom and prudence of the movement, left convinced that God is in it, and that a forward step had been taken, the consequences of which, if his people are faithful, will be fraught with blessing to Ireland. The influence of the priests is on the decline, whether the Gospel or infidelity is to take precedence depends upon the faith and courage of the people of God.

A further interesting narrative by Mr. Connellan will follow in our next issue.

CHINESE TRACT SOCIETY.

The Chinese Religious Tract Society was organised in 1878 in Shanghai, for the purpose of circulating Christian literature throughout the empire. Missionaries and native Christians of different denominations took part in the organisation. The late Bishop Russell, of the C.M.S., was elected first president, and held the office during the remainder of his life. The Society has long since gone beyond the limits it first assigned itself—following the Chinese in their migrations to the Straits Settlements, India, Australia and New Zealand, to Japan, the Sandwich Isles, and America.

At a recent public meeting where the importance of tract distribution was being discussed by missionaries, all acknowledged the value of tracts to help the missionary to secure an audience or to introduce a conversation. Tracts are also highly prized because useful to leave for the purpose of deepening the impressions. Rev. Dr. Davis, of Soochow, the first recording secretary of the Society, said he had sent a printed circular to every missionary in China, to obtain information to make up the statistics for the missionary conference, lately held in Shanghai, and he was surprised to learn that so many conversions could be traced to reading tracts, to say nothing of innumerable cases where the tract paves the way for Christian work. He stated that the Chinese Religious Tract Society had issued more than a quarter of a million of books and tracts during the last year.

Rev. Charles Leaman, of Nankin, testified to the Christian life and triumphant death of one member of his church who was brought to Christ by reading the late Charles Schmidt's tract, "The Way of Salvation," and added that a man had taken a tract from a street chapel in Chefoo to a distant region where it was read and created an interest. Rev. Dr. Corbett followed up the work thus begun, and more than a thousand souls have, it is hoped, been converted in that region.

The heathen, in utter ignorance of everything pertaining to the Christian religion, might not understand a Bible given to him without note or comment, but he would comprehend the plan of redemption presented in a simple and plain way, and further, might, through reading a tract, accept Christ as freely offered to him in the Gospel, to the salvation of his soul.

The Chinese Religious Tract Society is composed of foreign and native Christians of all denominations. It has its headquarters in Shanghai. Its work is carried on by voluntary unpaid efforts, and the Rev. J. E. Cardwell, of the China Inland Mission, is its treasurer.

MADEIRA.—Mr. W. G. Smart writes to us from 29, Rua do Conselheiro, Funchal:—"You will be glad to hear of a Portuguese Protestant named Andrade and his happy death. Two priests, one a Jesuit, tried very hard to make him recant, but in vain. The Jesuit was very boisterous, ordering the man's wife to leave the room and take the Bible with her. The woman declined to go, however, but the priest was compelled to leave. The President of the Town Council refused the right of burial in the parish churchyard at St. Roque, and insisted that the body should be conveyed to the town cemetery, 3½ miles distant. This was done at night, the mourners being very much insulted along the route."

THE BRISTOL UNION OF EVANGELISTIC MISSIONS, embracing some thirty-five bodies of Christian workers of many denominations, has issued an appeal to all workers to devote the month of October to prayer for special definite blessing on the city and neighbourhood. The circular of invitation states: "In all ages the Holy Spirit is outpoured in answer to believing prayer, and, while God's time for this is the present, it should be our time as well. For this purpose we are inviting all evangelical clergymen and ministers to unite with us in arranging, say, three mid-day prayer-meetings per week (Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays) during the dinner-hour between 1 and 2 o'clock p.m., at their specific churches, both in the city and suburbs, through the month of October." There has been a very encouraging response to the appeal, and an incense-cloud of prayer is rising day by day to the God of all grace.

THE MORMONS have come out with a new profession of faith, the result of a conference of Elders, which has lasted several weeks. This declaration says:—"We believe in God the Father, in Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost; that men will be punished for their own sins, not for those of Adam, that mankind may be saved through Christ, and obedience to the laws and ordinances which appertain to the faith in Christ and through repentance; in baptism by immersion and laying on of hands. We believe in the same organisation as that of the Primitive Church—namely, apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, and evangelists. We believe in the gift of tongues, in prophecy, revelations, visions, and healing. We believe the Bible to be the Word of God, so far as it is translated correctly, and also that the Book of Mormon is the Word of God. We believe all God has revealed and is now revealing, and we believe that He will yet reveal many important things regarding the Kingdom of God. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel, in the restoration of the Ten Tribes, and that Zion will be built on this continent." Article 12 of the declaration abandons the system of polygamy.

GLASGOW.—Miss Radcliffe, of Liverpool, recently conducted an eight days' mission in connection with the Young Women's Department of the Grove-street Institute. The meetings were held nightly in the Mill Girls' Hall, and well attended. Many were spoken with at the after-meetings, and it is believed that not a few passed from death into life. A special effort was made to reach the young women employed in the various mills in the district, and, through the kindness of the employers, arrangements were made to hold a short service each day during the dinner hour. It was most cheering to see the numbers who responded to the invitation earnestly and attentively listening to the message of God's love. Miss Radcliffe was assisted by a number of lady workers and friends.

Rev. W. H. Goold, D.D.,

Secretary of National Bible Society of Scotland.

To write a sketch of Dr. Goold is to open a broad and suggestive page of history. His friends celebrated his Jubilee on the 7th inst., carrying us back to 1840; but that is not all. When ordained, fifty years ago, it was as colleague to his father, whose ministry began in 1804, so that the two ministries cover eighty-six years—years rich and eventful in the history of the Church of Christ throughout the world, and in Scotland. And the congregation (Martyrs' Church, Edinburgh), which father and son have served for so long a period, has had a continuous existence since 1681, that is for 209 years.

Can the reader call up to his mind the state of religion in the northern part of our island in 1681? The palmy days of the Lord Protector and the Westminster Assembly had ended more than twenty years before; Charles II. had been brought back; Baxter and the Puritans of England were groaning under the Act of Bartholomew's Day, 1662; Archbishop Sharp and Claverhouse had been for weary years riding rough shod over not Presbyterianism merely but vital religion in Scotland. There were still eight years of darkness and persecution to run before peace and freedom were secured by the expulsion of the Stuarts, when this congregation was formed in Edinburgh. It was not then called the Free Martyrs' congregation, for no Free Church existed till 150 years later, and the martyrs were still being hanged, or burned, or drowned—the time had not come for doing them public honour. But the continuity is unbroken from the old days in which the persecuted remnant formed the "societies" for the purpose of preserving spiritual life under very trying conditions. "In the course of two years eighty of these societies had been established, each with its minute book for the record of its transactions, and with its delegate or representative to what was called 'The General Meeting,' a council which endeavoured to meet quarterly so far as opportunity could be obtained in those days of darkness and blood." The Edinburgh "Society" was the seed-form of this congregation; and after the Revolution it was combined with the Pentland "Society," a little village nestling under the slope of the neighbouring hills. The followers of Richard Cameron and James Renwick, by whom these societies were formed and maintained, did not regard the ecclesiastical settlement of Scotland under William and Mary as adequately conserving the high attaintments of the Second Reformation, and therefore stood aloof from the Church of Scotland, thus anticipating the many secessions and the Disruption out of which the present United Presbyterian and Free Churches have grown, and anticipating also quite recent modifications of the Church of Scotland in the matter of patronage.

Dr. Goold's record as minister of this historical congregation, as a public-spirited citizen of Edinburgh, and as a Scottish Churchman, has been one of high honour.

Born December 20, 1815, he became distinguished even in boyhood as Dux of the Edinburgh High School, and similar distinction attended his career at the University. The home influences moulding his early life were heroic traditions, fervent piety, and gracious example. His father lived for four years after his son had been associated with him, dying very suddenly in July of 1844. Under the son's ministry—marked by learning and eloquence in the pulpit, and faithful pastoral care—the congregation has thriven and maintained effective spiritual influences during the long course of years, ever changing, as all congregations must, in the individuals composing it, but maintaining, as not all old congregations do, its life and fruitfulness. While Dr. Goold has done much Christian service, and of a more conspicuous kind, beyond the sphere of the congregation, it deserves to be distinctly said that he has maintained his pastoral work with unwearied zeal and efficiency, of which the gift of £1000 presented to him on Tuesday last is the grateful recognition.

In 1854 Dr. Goold was appointed Professor of Church History and New Testament Exegesis to the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Dr. William Symington of Glasgow, his father-in-law, being at the same time placed in the chair of Systematic Theology. Himself a thorough and successful student, he continued for twenty-two years to train successive bands of young men, many of whom, no longer young, gathered gratefully about him on Tuesday. These men are in many parts of the world to-day, some of them on the mission field, and one, Dr. Laidlaw, Professor of Theology in the New College, Edinburgh, took part in the proceedings as not only an old student but also an elder of Dr. Goold's session.

In 1863 the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland were graciously visited with an impulse from the One Spirit of Christ moving them to seek visible union, and the oldest of these, faithful to the principles of the Solemn League and Covenant which aimed at joining the Churches of the three kingdoms, went heartily into the movement. Dr. Symington having died the year before, Dr. Goold was its able and wise leader. For twelve years the foremost men of other denominations became familiar in the Joint Committee with his business faculty, his clear judgment, his spiritual fervour, his gift of luminous and eloquent expression. Though failing, as yet, to unite all, the movement resulted in the organic welding of the old Church of the Covenants with the Church of the Disruption in 1876; and the year following Dr. Goold occupied the Moderator's Chair. Until a year or two ago he held the important position of Convener of the College Committee in the Free Church of Scotland.

For good reasons Dr. Goold has not taken that place as an author which he might well have taken. One reason is that he devoted all the attainable leisure of several years to editing the works of John Owen in twenty-four volumes, and theological students everywhere know how much they are indebted to his learning, laborious care, and logical clearness, for help in consulting the great Puritan divine. This immense work was not long out of his hands when Dr. Goold was led to take special interest in the great enterprise of diffusing the Word of God over the world, and he has been for thirty years Secretary of the National Bible Society of Scotland. One of the gifts presented on this interesting Jubilee was a copy of the Scriptures from that Society, "in grateful appreciation of his life-long efforts for the world-wide diffusion of the Word of Life." The presentation was accompanied by an address from the directors, part of which we have pleasure in quoting.

Almost from the beginning of your ministry you recognised the claims of the Bible to world-wide diffusion, and with a devotion that has never wavered, gave your heart to this great aim. Having joined the Committee of the Edinburgh Bible Society in 1848, you became its secretary in 1860. ...Amid the discharge of other duties in Christian service, any one of which would have taxed the powers of many, your consecration to this Society of your time and experience, stores of learning and weight of character, with all the resources of a well-balanced and cultured intellect, has shed lustre on your office, and left a distinct mark on the history of Bible circulation in Scotland.

Entering on this service at a time when Scottish interest in the Bible cause had somewhat lost its first freshness, amid the din of controversy and the growth of other missionary claims, you have, especially within the present generation, seen and helped to develop in the community that larger sympathy and sense of privilege through which Scotland, in proportion to its population and resources, though still far short of its duty and opportunity, now comes behind no other nation in effort to give the Word of Life to the world. It is our prayer that, by the Divine favour, you may yet see greater things than these.

Six addresses besides this one were presented to the venerable minister at the same time, representing the warm regard in which he is held by old students, by his brethren in the ministry, by his congregation, and by the Continental agents of the National Bible Society. Dr. Gordon Gray of Rome was spokesman for those last named; Principal Rainy, Dr. Alison, Dr. Andrew Thomson, Dr. Alexander Whyte, and others were present to show how heartily Dr. Goold is esteemed by all denominations of Christians.

It is well that public honour should be put on a career so full of evidences of the Master's abundant grace. All may learn from it how the strictest fidelity to principle in theology and in ecclesiastical work is not merely consistent with progress, but itself requires, where it is genuine and intelligent, a constant expansion of Christian love and labour. Though possessed of scholarship and gifted with eloquence above many, Dr. Goold has been distinguished during his long life by a singularly gracious combination of rigid faithfulness and plodding diligence with a sympathy that knows no limit except the "wall of fire" which marks the ever-widening and glowing circumference of that "Jerusalem which is from above, the mother of us all."

A CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE IN JAPAN.—One of the "signs" following the entrance of a soul into the light and liberty of the Gospel is set forth in the good work which Dr. Irchii has set himself to inaugurate and conduct. In his earnest desire to labour that others of his countrymen might partake of the blessings of the Gospel which has made his heart glad, he found that so many children were in their orphan condition fearfully neglected. He therefore founded an orphanage on the model of Mr. Muller's, in which, although it has only been opened two years, there are fifty-five little ones.

DR. PENTECOST'S FAREWELL.

All who are interested in Dr. Pentecost's new enterprise for God will be glad to learn that cordial sympathy was manifested on the part of many who gathered in Mildmay Conference Hall last Friday night to bid the voyagers farewell and God-speed. As already announced, Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Stebbins accompany Dr. Pentecost.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, expressed the mingled feelings with which English Christians part from a valued and honoured worker. Sir Charles Aitcheson spoke of the splendid field for evangelisation among Englishmen in the large commercial centres of India, and among highly educated natives earnestly groping after truth. Rev. James Johnston testified that a wonderful change has taken place in India during the thirty-seven years' interval between his two visits. The present condition of the country is one of material, moral, and religious transition. The matter and effect of public native utterances prove that, from their admiration for Christ's character, Hindus would at once enthrone Him as chief over their despised gods, but are staggered by Christ's exclusive claims. There is a tendency towards an easy philosophy of religion, a combination of different systems, with Christianity as the prominent feature, showing that the mind of India is unhinged from its old beliefs and is longing for something better. The need is not for eloquence or argument, but for the presentation of following appeals which shall awaken conscience, through the instrumentality of workers supported by the prayers of God's Church.

Dr. Pentecost said that, after looking toward the East for more than twenty-five years, he found that India, always ready for missionary effort, is now peculiarly ripe for evangelisation. He traced the line of providences which have prepared that land for the Gospel. God's hand is seen in heathen history as much as in that of Israel. Every race and every religion is represented in India. He believed that the next great outpouring of the Holy Ghost would be, not in the west, but somewhere in the east; and there are signs that God has specially prepared India for receiving a demonstration of his power in these last days. God had as distinct a purpose in Britain's conquest of India as in the conquest of Canaan by the Hebrews—namely, the final evangelisation of the whole heathen world. England's first intercourse with India was exclusively for trade; but other nations with political ends were providentially removed from the land; and Lord Cornwallis, after failing to accomplish his purpose in America, was forced to take possession of a colony over which Great Britain did not desire to rule. The Anglo-Saxon race may be compared to John the Baptist, and its forces are concentrated in India, where Brahminism or Hinduism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity confront each other among 270 millions of souls. Christianity is there as David before Goliath; and there can be no question as to the outcome of the battle, when God's people shall put off their philosophical harness, and take in the sling of faith. It is said that, notwithstanding all our missionary efforts, there are more pagans in the world than ever. But nothing connected with God's command can fail. India may resent our conquest, but appreciates the material benefits we have conferred upon her, representing her highest conception of morals, a feeling which the Brahmin has immense difficulty in counteracting. We cannot estimate what a hundred years of persistent missionary effort has done by looking at three white spots in a great black map. The young men who stood by when God's truth touched the heart of Saul of Tarsus could not estimate God's purpose by one more convert.

Thirty years ago there was a scheme for clearing out the rocks which impeded traffic in New York's east river. Government appropriated 50,000 dollars for a preparatory survey. On a favourable report, 100,000 was devoted to the works; and, as a result, there was seen on either side of the river derricks and portable engines. After repeated grants, the lapse of fifteen years showed the same derricks, a pile of débris on either side of the channel, and a demand for 500,000 dollars. Small economists caused a delay of five years. But during all that time, engineers, out of sight, were channeling, boring, and running unseen lines of work. At last New York was startled by the announcement that Hell Gate was to be blown up. Folks did not believe it. But there were thousands of ramified channels packed full of dynamite; and when the finger of General Newton's little daughter touched a button, a hundred feet of water sprang into the air, a million tons of rock was torn from its bed, and Hell Gate was gone.

GOD'S SAPPERS AND MINERS

have been at work in India. We must not judge of their work by the little piles of mud. Wherever a convert has been drawn out of heathenism, it has left a channel which God has packed full of the Gospel. The Greek word translated power, in Rom. i. 16, suggests dynamite. The day is coming when some company of men and women with the spirit of a little child will cause an explosion which shall rend heathenism from its foundations. When the Gospel has broken a Brahmin's heart, then the caste will easily be broken. God's Gospel is a hammer that can break any heart, a fire that can melt any fetter, and a sword that can pierce any harness that the devil ever made to keep a soul from God.

If men, prayer, and means be devoted to this divinely prepared field, we may hope to see rocks rent, and to build the fragments into the temple of God. The work, without condition or limitation, will begin at Calcutta, continue there as long as God should seem to direct, and work out elsewhere as doors shall open. Workers go forth with no confidence in the flesh, hoping to be used as the least of God's instruments clothed with his greatest power, and specially asking that their hands may be upheld by much prayer at home.

This request found fervent response at the close of Dr. Pentecost's stimulating and hopeful address, which proved intensely interesting to a large company of sympathetic and earnest hearers.

COTTISH CONFERENCES.

HOLINESS CONVENTION, GLASGOW.

(Concluded from last week.)

ASTOR STOCKMAYER'S MEETINGS.

he pronounced foreign accent of this good ss pastor and his peculiar delivery render somewhat difficult of apprehension to the ltitude, his meetings at the Glasgow Con- tion now form a sort of annexe to the bigger herings in the Queen's Rooms. Twice a day ing the Convention he spoke in the pillar- l of the same building, and always had a dly and highly appreciative company of eners. The general theme of his series of s was the mystical life of the Church as the de of Christ, and the manifestation of that in the world. On the first evening he canted with great unction and clearness spiritual vision on the wondrous love of the avenly Bridegroom in taking to Himself a le from the very depths of that degradation which mankind had fallen by reason of sin departure from God. It was a very nbling presentation of truth; but one cal- ated at the same time to throw into rious relief the exaltation of the Church as bride to her place of privilege in the risen ascended Lord, and the claims which that d has upon her fealty and service during s period of waiting for the marriage supper the Lamb. When the soul really under- nds its position as a sharer in the Divine of its Lord, then all talk of sacrifice be- nes folly—sacrifice and suffering become an ation of praise. The life in Christ may not an easy one, speaking after the manner of n, but it is one of unspeakable glory. In the nds of the Bridegroom the Church finds not y redemption but a place of this earthly interval between her betrothal a bride and her reception as a wife, the urch has to gain a fuller knowledge of the dom and beauty of her Lord, and to dis- er Him more and more to be the desire of heart. Let her but understand her divine ling and she will live a separated life of ser- e and of waiting for her Lord's return.

On the morning of the third day the Pastor elt, in his profound and thorough expository hion, on the essential oneness of the body of rist, and the need for a greater outward mani- tation of that oneness. In the evening of the me day, he unfolded the comforting truths at relate to the second advent, as a powerful otive to holiness of life and wholeheartedness service. On the morning of the fourth and st day, the Pastor delivered a very searching hortation as to the calling of the Church, the Bride of Christ, to partake of the fferings and share the interests of the Bride- oom. It may be that the Bridegroom is iting for a fuller manifestation of this fore He can return and claim his Bride for imself. The whole creation is described, by e Apostle Paul, in Rom. viii., as waiting d expecting this manifestation of the sons of od. Shall the Church be confounded and ndemned by the unconscious groaning of e creation? The speaker went on to show w, because the Bride of Christ is in herself, rough inherent infirmity, unable fully to prehend these things, the Spirit is promised d given that He may help our infirmities d intercede for us and in us. All this, that e may more fully understand her calling to be sympathy with her heavenly Lord. In these days we need to cultivate more of the spirit of sitting quietly at the feet of our Lord, that we drink in of his spirit, and get to know the desires of his heart for ourselves and for the world. This sympathy with Christ may be for us, as it was for Paul, a pathway of sore trial and persecution and suffering; but, like him also, we may say that in all these things we are more than conquerors through the power of his marvellous love. The depths are much less to be feared in the Christian life than the heights.

In delivering his message, Pastor Stockmayer gives line upon line, going back frequently to the ground he has already trodden, and repeating in outline his profound and thorough statements of spiritual doctrine. This method demands very concentrated attention from the hearer; but it is a method that must be fruitful in engraving the truth on the tablets of the heart, as well as the memory. At his last meeting on the Friday evening (which our representative was unable to attend), the Pastor conducted a communion service to which all disciples of the one Lord were affectionately invited.

THE CITY HALL MEETINGS

in the evenings were, of course, the largest of any during the Convention. Those in the forenoon and afternoon in the Queen's Rooms, were designed for the more cultured and leisured classes, while those in the eastern division of the city were attended mainly by that section of the community that has to earn its daily bread by sweat of brow and skill of hand. The audiences were large, and the attention shown was worthy of a Scottish audience, perhaps the most patient listeners in the world. The evening addresses were chiefly in the same line as those of the morning; but, as the congregations were of a mixed order, the evangelistic element was not forgotten. On Wednesday evening Rev. J. B. FIGGIS expatiated on the POSSIBILITIES OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

There are some things we cannot do; we cannot change the constitution of our nature so that it shall become absolutely sinless. But, within the limits of sanctified common sense, we may be sure that all things commanded, all things promised, and all things provided, are possible of attainment to him that believeth.

Following Mr. Figgis, Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM told something of his own conversion when he was the vicar of a Cornwall parish, and how his testimony from his own pulpit was the means of sending conviction to the hearts of many in the congregation. The great point of the address was that we are saved to save others. The tongue-tied soul is never truly free. There are so many like one who, when asked to testify for Christ, replied: "Oh, no, in my church they don't do that." If believers are only stirred up, there is no fear of the opposition of sinners. What a work might be done in Glasgow if the professing Christians were all fully consecrated. There is little use in talking about the higher life, if we are doing nothing to save those who are living and dying in sin around us.

A MEMORABLE MEETING.

The third meeting in the City Hall was a season of remarkable soul refreshing and stimulus. The evening was very wet, but a large congregation nevertheless assembled. The first address was a very vigorous and fresh presentation of holiness teaching by Rev. C. INWOOD from the text, "A man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost." He termed this "a full-length portrait of a holy man." Emphasis was first laid on the expression, "A man," and it was urged that a man loses none of his true manliness because he is a saint. Further, we have no right to expect the holiness of a sinless angel from a mere man, however sanctified he may be. Nothing better is possible to us in this world than the holiness of damaged human nature. A saint is not necessarily a wishy-washy, namby-pamby sort of man, with no force of character or backbone in him; that is not at all the Scriptural idea of a holy man. Nothing is more striking than the "humanness" of the Bible saints; they were not ascetics or mystics. When God comes to a man and makes him holy, He does not hack, and smite, and torture, and kill every faculty of his soul. God does not slay our natural faculties when we become saints; He only desires to kill the disease that is paralysing and threatening to ruin us. There is a remarkable distinction between the way in which God regards human nature in itself, and the way in which He regards that human nature damaged and weakened by sin. Let not our young people be persuaded by the devil that there is anything unmanly about real Scriptural, Spirit-given holiness. Mr. Inwood, speaking on faith as the operative agent in sanctification, said we are not justified by faith and sanctified by struggle. Faith is the faculty that receives, and rests upon, and appropriates, the promises of God. The man who, like Stephen, is full of faith, is the man who trusts God fully; who believes that God means all that He says about holiness and that He means us to believe it all and accept it and use it. Then, the fulness of the Holy Ghost is not a sudden transient impulse or inspiration of the Spirit; it is an abiding thing. The outcome of this was seen in the way in which Stephen met his persecutors and prayed to God on their behalf. As one lately remarked, it is about the greatest triumph of Divine grace when a man is able really to love his enemies and to pray for those that despitefully use him. True holiness fits us to live and also fits us to die, so that, like Stephen, we can fall asleep in Jesus, even in the moment of the sorest suffering and trial.

Another address came from Rev. F. B. MEYER, who gave a strong autobiographical flavour to his utterances, telling how he was led fully to consecrate himself to God, and also relating an experience of the recent Keswick Convention. This latter had reference to the late meeting in the tent for prayer when many professed to have had a definite sensible access of the Holy Spirit's filling and power. He said that he had no such experience, but had to content himself with the exercise of faith that this blessing was for him apart altogether from feeling and sense. After a season of solitary meditation among the hills, he forgathered with several young ministers who had been at the meeting and were rejoicing in the blessing experienced. They adjourned to a quiet spot, and were earnestly discussing the matter, when a young Glasgow merchant, who was one of the company, intervened and said, "Are you not laying too much stress on how the Spirit comes, and thinking too little about the Lord Jesus whom He makes manifest? I do not mind whether the Spirit comes to me like a spate or like the water that fills the wells in the spring. The one thing I care for is this: Does the Holy Ghost make Jesus real to me?" Mr. Meyer added that all were constrained to agree with the words of this young merchant. He proceeded to urge on the great gathering the immediate reception by simple faith of the Spirit's power, though there might be no accompanying outward or inward manifestation of feeling.

In the after-meeting the various classes represented were addressed, and admonished to make full surrender of themselves to God, and a very large proportion of those present stood in their places as bearing public witness to their resolve to be henceforth fully the Lord's, resting by simple faith on his eternal Word. It was felt to be a very solemn and heart-searching time.

A GLASGOW MISSION CONFERENCE.

Among the many earnest and successful efforts for the evangelisation of this great city, the mission church gathered at Garscube Hall is worthy of grateful mention. It is situated in the western portion of the city, but is surrounded by a populace that greatly needs such a Gospel testimony in their midst. It is not our present purpose to describe the general work of this Mission, but rather to give a brief report of the Conference held the week before last in the tent erected near St. George's Cross. Every summer for the past eleven years a tent mission has been held for greater or shorter periods at this central spot, and the close of the summer season has been signalised by a Conference of the friends engaged in the tent work, and other sympathetic workers from a distance. This year the meetings were held in the tent on the Saturday and Sabbath following the Holiness Convention, and that arrangement enabled some friends to be present at both Conferences. The conductor of the Garscube Mission is Mr. D. J. Findlay, a son-in-law of Mr. Quarrier, and one of the most genial and out-and-out Christian men that we have ever been privileged to meet. He combines in an eminent degree the shrewdness and solidity of the Scot with the warm-hearted, happy fervour of the Southerner. His presidency of the Conference meetings helped largely to make them the genuine treat that they were felt to be.

Mr. Findlay believes in a big programme and in seeing personally that it is all carried out. Meetings for united prayer were set down for both days, early and late, and these were seasons of spiritual refreshing to the friends who were present. The first meeting for set conference took place on the Saturday afternoon, when the large tent, which accommodates a thousand people, was well filled.

After the opening exercises, Mr. John Anderson, of Ardrossan, editor of The Reaper, gave a very clear and powerful exhortation on as the great work of the Christian Church. To be qualified for this work the believer must be in touch with God in his great sympathy on behalf of fallen humanity; we must have an experience of his presence and power within us; and our life must be consistent with our speech. The methods of soul-winning vary with the varied needs and circumstances of sinners. Some are best reached through the understanding, others can be won through the affections, and yet others by way of the conscience or the will. A study of the Word of God and of human nature will enable the worker by God's grace to suit the message to the individual hearer. This work of soul-winning may have to be done in the home circle, or in the far-off heathen land; but every living Christian ought to have a hand in the work. Let there be specific and stated prayer when possible for those who are specially desired to be won, and also for those who have been led to decision.

A MISSIONARY ADDRESS

from Mr. A. Orr-Ewing was full of interesting and encouraging facts met with in his mission experiences in China. He said he thought that the greatest power of soul winning is the overwhelming constraint that comes from an experimental knowledge of the love of Jesus in the heart. Such constraint will enable the worker in China to put himself alongside of the native, however unlovely or even repulsive his life may be. Incidents were told illustrating the power of the Gospel in saving those deeply caught in the toils of the opium habit. The tremendous spiritual destitution of the Chinese people, and the vast tracts of territory, embracing many populous cities, without a single witness for Christ, were described. While this is the case, there is in Glasgow a Christian church in almost every street, with workers jostling each other, so to speak. God wants his Gospel to be taken to every creature; what are the Glasgow Christians going to do in order to obey the Divine call?

Mr. Findlay having read parts of a letter from Miss Bessie Leggat, who is now in China as a fruit of last year's Conference, a very stirring address followed from Dr. Main, a medical missionary from China. He is a regular red-hot Scotchman, and his impassioned calls for recruits for China were very thrilling. In the most strenuous terms he scouted the idea of its being any sacrifice to go to the mission field; he regarded it as a most glorious privilege. He declared that he must have some of his hearers as new helpers in the work; he would take no refusal. That is the sort of appeal that one loves to hear as being commensurate with the urgency of the case, and we do not doubt our fiery brother will get the desire of his heart.

Another word of great weight and intensity of earnestness came from Miss Campbell. How can you stay at home? was the poser she put especially to her Christian sisters; and she counselled those of them between nineteen and twenty-five to be getting ready for the time when the call would come to arise and go. Many sad and pathetic things she said (as did Dr. Main before her) of the deep degradation and the accumulated sorrows of womanhood, wifehood, and widowhood in China. With Spirit-taught eloquence she pleaded that those sisters, sitting in the gloomy shadow of a great darkness, should have carried to them the consolations of the Gospel.

From the claims of heathen China we were brought by Mr. J. Govan to the claims of God on our adoring worship, and his desire that we should find in Him alone our satisfaction and delight. As an evangelist, he confessed that he often felt how people, hearing him preach the Gospel, would be disappointed if they knew him intimately in private. He said he had no faith in the excuses that so many Christians offer for not finding sufficient time for prayer and meditation, and the study of the Word. Nothing, however important, must usurp the place of God in our lives. Mr. Govan gave a most doleful account of the moral condition of some of the southern Scottish agricultural districts, and declared that the words "home heathen" were anything but out of date.

After tea there come one of those rousing, rugged appeals from

MR. REGINAND RADCLIFFE.

He said it seemed to him as if the angels in heaven must be dropping floods of tears because of the unbelief and lack of obedience in the churches on the earth. Is it not high time that the believers in Great Britain and America and Germany, and other Gospel lands, should give themselves to fasting and prayer, if so be that the Lord will be favourable to his people and send on them a spirit of obedience and consecration? How important that the right people should go out as missionaries; and for this also there is need of much waiting on God. Then the speaker uttered another serious protest against the idea that only those who are highly cultured are fit to go out as Gospel messengers. If Paul could with his own fingers minister to his bodily necessities while he acted as bishop of so many churches, why should not the same thing be possible now? If our methods were simpler and more Apostolic, what a saving of expense there would be, and, consequently, greater facilities for the multiplication of the workers. These and other points were expanded by Mr. Radcliffe in words of burning earnestness. Let us begin to believe in God (he said), and have no confidence in ourselves, and surely we shall see greater things than we have ever yet dreamt of.

Rev. J. H. Horsburgh came on the platform attired in full Chinese costume, and in some opening remarks vindicated the adoption of the native dress as bringing the workers into close contact with the people and preventing prejudice. Much information of a very interesting kind was imparted by the speaker as to work in China, but our readers are already tolerably familiar with it. We may say here that we have heard privately, and with much pleasure, that Mr. Horsburgh has had many favourable and sympathetic responses to his recent letter in The Christian, in which he advocated the new departure of the C.M.S. forming a band of missionaries to go to Chi under a more economical régime than is cu tomary. Mr. Radcliffe told the friends Glasgow several times that Mr. Horsburgh hir self of late had been living comfortably i China at the yearly expenditure of £25.

A few words followed from Miss Radclif (who had been holding a Gospel mission amon young women close by); from Mr. McMath, young man about to go to Morocco as a mi sionary; from Mr. Lethaby, of Kerak; an last of all, a cheery talk from Mr. Carr, Carlisle, in which he said many encouragin things to those quiet, hidden workers wh cannot for various reasons leave home an country to go to far-off fields of service.

The following day, Sunday, was a very ful day, but our limited space does not admit o giving details. There were early and pro tracted prayer meetings, two further conference forenoon and afternoon, a procession an open-air preaching in the early evening, a evangelistic meeting later on in the tent, an finally a united communion service to round o the day and the Conference. Mr. Findlay an his friends look for much fruit, both from wor at home and abroad, from these numerous an interesting engagements. Let our reader strengthen their hands by much believin prayer.

THE MISSIONARY MEETINGS.

These came last on the programme, and formed a very fitting pendant to the subjective teaching of the previous days. Too great thankfulness to God cannot be expressed fo the way in which He has guided the friends in charge of these gatherings to lead the revived and reviving spiritual life of the Churches into the most practical channels. We are strongly of the belief that the missionary outcome at Keswick is the salvation of the movement there; the same must be true of Glasgow and elsewhere. If our Churches were to settle down in a self-centred and self-satisfied fashion, congratulating themselves on their so-called consecration, would not God speedily blot them out of existence, or suffer them to perish of atrophy? Let the streams of heavenly grace be thrown into fructifying and living channels, for the blessing of the ends of the earth, and yet larger streams will come from the exhaustless fountains of Divine blessing and power.

These Glasgow missionary meetings were excellent in almost every respect. The thing we missed most in them was the outburst of generous giving for the missionary cause that marks the meetings at Keswick. It is no use blinking the fact that it is hard work to unscrew the money-bags of the average Scotchman. His pocket is the last place that gets the benefit of his consecration. But the Lord can work miracles still, and probably there is much given by these cautious and reserved Northerners that the outside world knows nothing about.

Great interest was shown by the Glasgonians in the appearance and speech at these missionary meetings of who caused such a stir in commercial and Christian circles five years ago, when he relinquished the brightest of business prospects and laid himself on the altar of service for the evangelisation of some of China's teeming millions. That is a sort of consecration that the most phlegmatic and canny Scot is compelled to recognise and admire, even if he has not grace and courage enough to imitate. Mr. Orr-Ewing's addresses did not show the least trace of regret at the step he took five years ago; quite the contrary. His words were always marked by an air of triumphant joy at the privileged path on which he had been permitted to enter; though that joy was chastened somewhat in view of the many difficulties he had been compelled to experience in actual Gospel work among the Chinese. In his earnest address on the Friday evening at the City Hall, he

e of the manifest power of the devil in all rtments of the governmental régime of the stials. But every soldier who goes to war- looks for difficulties; and why should the er of the Cross be exempt. Some striking direct answers to prayer in connection the work of the China Inland Mission, in the field and at home, were related by Ewing, as showing the faithfulness of God. ntensely earnest appeal was made to those stians who had been receiving an access of sing at the Convention to obey the voice of calling them either to personal service or e dedication of their children as messengers e Cross to distant and heathen lands. We r get blessing to hoard it up, but to give it freely to those who need it most.

e Mildmay Mission to the Jews, was the speaker. We never hear Mr. Wilkinson k without marvelling how one head can ain such stores of Scriptural knowledge, how one mind and tongue can array and them forth. Our friend had arrived in sgow with a bad cold, but that did not ent him from pouring out a stream of derfully forcible exhortation to his fellow stians, and of equally telling facts experiences in connection with his ial work among the sons of Abraham. One suggestive point in his expository remarks must repeat. Speaking of the consecration s through which Isaiah passed, he observed God's question was twofold, "Whom l I send, and who will go for us?" God ted volunteers. Isaiah in his reply showed ly taught wisdom, for he did not simply to go, but he requested that he might be of God. This is the spirit into which all consecration in these days ought to be ized; then the right men and women would their way to the right fields of labour. r a cogent statement as to the place of the in the scheme of modern missions, Mr. kinson told the oft-repeated tale of the ulation of Hebrew New Testaments among s on the European Continent, and of the st developments of this movement, which aims at reaching the chosen race all the ld over with the printed Gospel message. Wilkinson has not a shadow of doubt in mind that God's plan is to save the Gentile ld through the restored and converted Jew; , his haste to convince the Jew of the true siahship of Christ the Saviour of the world gave the closing address, proved a very able and earnest advocate of Gospel work ng the Moslems of North Africa. He took he old world story of Hagar and Ishmael parable of what ought to be the attitude he modern churches towards Ishmael's de- dants. Hagar wept over her lad when she him dying of thirst in the wilderness; so ld the Christian Churches weep over the itual parchedness of the Mohammedan world. directed Hagar to the well of life-giving er for the reviving and nourishment of her So is God calling on the Churches to take water of life to the dwellers in these Moslem ls so easily reached from Christian England. pecial call was sounded for lady workers, in of the deep and unspeakable degradation Moslem womanhood. The open doors of ice are many; who among the favoured ghters of this land of Gospel light will enter nd help to possess darkest Africa for King is?

MR. E. L. HAMILTON,

A SECOND MISSIONARY MEETING

held in the Queen's Rooms on the Satur- forenoon, when Mr. ORR-EWING presided. passed on to his hearers for personal cogita- the unanswerable questions asked by Paul: ow shall they call on Him of whom they e not heard? How shall they hear with- a preacher? How shall one preach if he ot sent?" He could not honestly say, from own experience of five years, that the great mass of the Chinese people are longing for the Gospel; they are very proud and self-satisfied as a nation. Yet the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the only thing that can elevate and save them, and every English Christian ought to covet the possession of that beauty that radiates even from the feet of those who go forth as messengers of peace and salvation to darkened and degraded peoples.

DR. TORRANCE, OF GALILEE, had a very attractive story to tell about medical mission work on the shores of that lake, around which there cluster so many sacred memories of our Lord's earthly life and work. Jews, he said, are flocking back to Palestine in immense numbers, and their prejudice against the so-called "Christian," because of evil treatment in the bygone centuries, is very strong and deep-seated. Will not the real Christians of to-day do all they can to remove this hindrance to the Jews belief in the Messiah? A very interesting sketch was given of medical mission work at Tiberias and Safet, and also of school work among the boys and girls. There have as yet been no open professions of faith in Jesus Christ among the adult population, and Dr. Torrance seems to anticipate terrible Moslem persecution for those who do make such profession. Yet he looks forward in faith to the redemption of all Israel.

From Galilee we were transported across the Jordan to the land of Moab by whose truly wonderful work at Kerak has often been referred to in these pages. It deserves to be better known than it is. Mr. Lethaby is a heroic soul, and has an equally heroic wife, who is now holding the fort (with another lady, Miss Arnold, as companion) till her husband's return. Into a brief talk our devoted brother managed to squeeze much welcome information respecting the land of Moab, the fierce, haughty, and unscrupulous peoples that inhabit it, and the good work that has been begun at Kerak during a four years' sojourn there of himself and his wife. They are having wonderful access to the Moslem children, and are also finding ample occupation in Scripture distribution and simple medical work. If any readers covet the privilege of replenishing Mr. Lethaby's medicine chest (homœopathic or allopathic), let them send on to his transport agent in England, Mr. G. Hawkes, Peninsular and Oriental Company, 25, Cockspur-street, London, W. One great advantage is the unity of the language. By the aid of Arabic the missionary can make himself understood all the way to the Persian Gulf. Surely there will be some consecrated men and women within our borders who will go forth as pioneers in this noble mission of taking the message of salvation to "Arabia's desert ranger."

COMMISSIONER TUCKER

and his gaudily attired comrade in Salvation Army warfare, Musa Bhai, have been conspicuous figures on the platform at some of these Scottish Conferences. At Glasgow the Commissioner was afforded an opportunity of telling his tale about the claims and needs of India's millions, and how these needs are being met by Salvation Army methods. As he has recently done the same thing through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN, it will be enough to state here that he has been touring in Scotland in the hope of enlisting sympathy on behalf of his life work. Naturally enough he deems that the Salvation Army campaign in India ought to find hosts of supporters in Christian Scotland; but in his speech at Glasgow he hinted that open-handed millionaires in these northern regions are hard to catch.

CHINA AND GIBRALTAR.

Rev. J. H. HORSBURGH, of the C.M.S. in China, next told us in words of much feeling and impressiveness about the millions in that great land who have never so much as heard of Jesus Christ. He thought such a fact ought to sink deep down in the Scottish Christian heart; and yet he feared the rumour of a scarlet fever epidemic would produce more stirrings of heart. He entreated his Christian hearers not to wait for a special call to China or elsewhere, but to regard the call as one to be obeyed if God in his providence had made obedience possible.

Miss CAMPBELL, of the China Inland Mission, with her wonted fervour and force, besought her Christian sisters to make the most of their talents and lives for God, and the good of their fellows. What is our life worth if it be not devoted to the winning of souls for the Saviour? Speaking of the recent appeal for 1000 male and 5000 female missionaries for China, she told how the German town of Barmen has given ten whom they are to support. Surely the great city of Glasgow can at least do as much as that.

Mrs. OSBORN spoke with intense feeling of the spiritual needs of Gibraltar and places adjacent, and told something of the way in which God has owned past labour there among soldiers and others. Then Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE prayed as though he would take the kingdom of heaven by storm. In the course of his prayer he thanked God for the meeting just closing, and every true Christian heart must have joined in that ascription of thanksgiving.

THE FINAL MEETING

of all was in the Queen's Rooms on Sabbath evening. A great crowd of people sat for two hours, in an atmosphere that was almost stifling through the absence of ventilation, and listened intently to the rousing appeals of Mr. Radcliffe, Mr. Wilkinson, and Mr. Orr-Ewing. In his opening remarks, Mr. Radcliffe read the prayer of our Lord for such a manifested oneness of the Church on earth as would make the world believe in his Divine mission. The first and most crying need of the hour (said our intense Liverpool brother) is not the sending out of more missionaries so much as the blotting out of the sharp sectional divisions in the one Church, so that as believers we shall be sent almost into each others arms. What wondrous works we might do if the devil did not come in and separate us as Churches from one another; ay, if even those who are members of the same Church were knit together in their hearts as the Lord prayed that they might be. How can God use us if we are divided? Oh, for a rivalry among all to get the lowest and humblest place! Another mistake we are making is this—we think that if a man is ignorant and unlearned and ungrammatical he is not fit to be on our platforms, or to preach the Gospel in the mission field. Our blindness and shortsightedness is staying the blessing. We seldom hear now of simultaneous conversions on a wide scale at home or abroad. Mr. Radcliffe expressed the very strong conviction that in order to a large success in the foreign missions there must be a revolution in the methods of living and also that many more workers must go out to far-off fields who can support themselves by their own toil or resources, so as not to be dependent on any missionary society whatever.

An address of the most thorough-going kind followed from Rev. JOHN WILKINSON; it was largely on the same lines as that he gave in the City Hall two nights before. The thing we want, he said, is not more knowledge, but a more ready obedience to the knowledge we possess. We call ourselves Christians, married to the Lord Jesus; and yet we have passed a sort of Married Women's Property Act, and have used for ourselves what belongs to our Lord. The prior and pressing claims of the Jew were of course pleaded with intense fervour and weight of argument. The story of the Hebrew New Testaments was retold. Mention was made of a new religious movement in a certain part of Russia, in connection with which 500 Jews are said to have banded themselves together to make the New Testament the rule of their lives, though they will not formally associate themselves with the Gentile Christians around them. The present prejudice against "Christians" on the part of many Jews is so great that if the Lord Jesus Christ were to return to-day, they would not acknowledge Him if they saw Him in the clouds of heaven. But God is still on the side of the Jew, and He will bring them as a nation back to Himself, so that they may in turn become the great evangelisers of the world.

A half-hour's earnest and very interesting speech from Mr. A. Orr-Ewing brought the impressive proceedings to a close. He gave many graphic and encouraging details of Gospel work in China, drawn from his own varied experiences of the past few years in the large province of Shansi. The singular veneration of the Chinese for anything in the printed character is found to be most helpful in the distribution of Gospel literature. The power of the truth, in the hands of the Spirit of God, to change the hearts of men and remove their prejudices is very manifest, while there are many difficulties to be fought. If the Churches will but put themselves whole heartedly at God's disposal, He will hear prayer and gather multitudes into his kingdom.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. A. M. Bannatyne, Free Church minister, Aberdeen, is about to resign his charge as a protest against the decision of last General Assembly in the Dods-Bruce cases, and against the new formula prescribed for deacons.

Special services were held in Edinburgh on Sabbath last in connection with the ministerial jubilee of Dr. Goold, whose portrait appears in our present issue. Dr. Andrew Thomson and Professor Laidlaw preached in the Martyrs' Church.

A contributor to The Scotsman of Monday last strongly condemns the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland for waste of its resources and lack of aggressive enterprise in the most needy districts.

Special sermons were preached in many Glasgow churches on Sabbath, in preparation for the S. S. Convention held in that city this week.

The Queen of Roumania, at present on a visit to Scotland, attended service at St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh, on Sabbath last.

The ninth annual Conference of the Established Church of Scotland Guild is being held at Hamilton this week. There was a discussion on young men and gambling.

The brothers Bradlaugh have been in Scotland on very different errands. Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, the sceptical M.P., spoke on "Myths in Religion" in Glasgow last Sabbath. Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, the evangelist, is holding a Gospel mission in Dundee with not a few tokens of the Divine presence and blessing.

Rev. H. Price Hughes preached to a crowded congregation in St. Andrew's Halls, Glasgow, on Sabbath evening in connection with the anniversary services of Anderston Free Church. He took "Zaccheus" for his topic, and delivered a very pungent discourse.

The struggle between capital and labour is very keen in some parts of Scotland at present. Out of sixty iron furnaces all but six have either been damped down or put out, and between 3000 and 4000 men are thrown out of employment. There is a strike, also, among the shipbuilding operatives at Leith. As amicable arrangement appears so difficult these trade disputes ought to be settled by compulsory arbitration.

THE "WAYSIDE" BIBLE-CARRIAGE, under John M. McAuliffe's superintendence, and with two other brethren, is still going through the Sussex villages. During the summer it has visited over eighty places, and two hundred meetings have been held. The workers have received several applications for winter missions, and Mr. McAuliffe hopes to revisit during coming months some of the centres in which he has begun Gospel labour. A good work is also carried on in John-street Bible Mission Room, Tunbridge Wells; a large mothers' meeting, Gospel services, Bible-classes. Visitation of the district is carried on by Mr. McAuliffe and his five helpers. Gospel literature is distributed in the surrounding villages. Recently several young persons have confessed Christ as their personal Saviour; and the workers are much encouraged.

THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.

The annual report of this Association refers to the circumstance of the year 1890 being the hundredth anniversary of John Howard's death. There is in some quarters an increased attention to the class of questions in which he was specially interested. The report contains much valuable information and suggestion upon various topics connected with the prevention and treatment of crime and pauperism. Although much has been done since John Howard's time, yet much remains still to be accomplished in the way of prison reform. For instance, the separation of some classes of prisoners from corrupting association with others, without going to the opposite extreme of isolation, is as yet only carried out to a very limited extent. Much improvement it is stated, has been effected with regard to the accommodation in the cells of assize and sessions courts, but some local bodies are still very slow to do their duty in this important particular. With respect to other defects (not to say "scandals") in prison administration, the Association considers them due rather to the excessive secrecy and autocracy of the system itself than to the officials, and advocates a complete change in the mode of appointing inspectors, who, it is alleged, cannot at present be strictly impartial. The subject of capital punishment also continues to engage the careful attention of the Society.

The First Offenders Act, enabling magistrates in petty cases to allow a first offender to be at liberty for a certain period without the stigma of being committed to gaol, is a valuable piece of legislation, and we agree with the Association in urging that magistrates should make more use than hitherto of its provisions. The inequality of sentences and uncertainty of adequate punishment is a blot upon our criminal law which has long engaged attention, and the report therefore pleads for the introduction of "a regular system of sentences, with very moderate but also very certain cumulation for the repetition of offences."

We have frequently called attention to the great advantages, moral, physical, and economical, of the plan of boarding-out pauper children as compared with that of herding them together in huge district schools and institutions. This is another reform urgently advocated by the Association, which at the same time wisely insists upon due regard being had to regular and suitable supervision and to careful selection of foster parents. Wherever this method has been adopted, whether in Great Britain, Ireland, or Australia, it has worked well; and economical considerations alone should be sufficient to secure its general adoption, for the average cost per child is stated to be only five shillings a week, as against twice that sum—and even more—in the district pauper schools.

Such are the main points in this weighty report. The Association is also carrying on a valuable educational work by the circulation of ooks, pamphlets, and papers on temperance, vagrancy, indiscriminate almsgiving, overcrowding, juvenile offences, and the like. It would be well if the principle upon which Mr. Francis Peek and his colleagues act were more widely recognised by philanthropists and reformers, viz., that, "both in the case of juvenile and adult pauperism and crime, it is incomparably wiser to endeavour to remove the chief root of these evils, rather than by large institutions or by an undue estimate of mere legislative power, to seek to limit their results." And what is this root? "Incontestably," says the Report, "the chief root of modern crime and pauperism is intemperance."

We regret to learn that the small income of the Association has been £110 less than in the previous year. An organisation which "recognises the Bible and its principles as the only secure and abiding basis of social progress" is assuredly working on true and safe lines and is deserving of greatly increased support. The office of the Association is in Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.

BIBLE WORK IN CHINA.

There are now five missionary societies represented in this city, and we greatly rejoice in the large accession to the numbers of those who are working for the Lord in West China during the last twelve months.

Chung King is the dividing point, where reinforcements for the provinces of Szchuen, Yunnan and Kuei Chow separate, and is a great centre of missionary activity.

Bible work goes on apace. During the past eighteen months our Society has circulated from Chung King 71,000 portions of Scripture and 157,000 Christian tracts. For the advance made during that time we are greatly indebted to the hearty co-operation of all the missionaries in Szchuen, Yunnan, and Kuei Chow.

The books are bought readily, and we have reason to believe are well used, as the Chinese have a great reverence for the printed page.

A NEW MISSION STEAMER.

Dear Sir,—You were good enough to put into one of your numbers an appeal for our mission steam launch last autumn. I am glad to be able to inform you and "Well-wisher," who sent five shillings in response to that appeal, that the Day Spring is now afloat in the waters of Hong Kong harbour, and is out of debt.

With the contents of a bottle of pure water sprinkled upon her bows, she slipped off the ways into the water on August 2. Mrs. J. J. Keswick kindly performed the ceremony of naming the vessel, after a short service of prayer and thanksgiving had been conducted by the Right Rev. Bishop Burdon and Rev. A. G. Goldsmith (seamen's chaplain). All went well at the launch, and we trust that the prayers of many of your readers will follow the course of the Day Spring as she picks up from the vessels every Sunday her living freight of seafaring men coming to worship Him who rules the raging of the sea at St. Peter's Seamen's Church; or on week days cruises around this great harbour, bringing the good message of the Sun of Righteousness to the 75,000 British and foreign seamen who annually visit the port.

The fact that £300 out of the total cost of about £900, was subscribed by the shipping alone, indicates an appreciation by seamen of that which ministers to their truest and greatest needs. To God be all the praise.—Yours,

A. Gurney Goldsmith.

St. Peter's Seamen's Church, Hong Kong.

"WILLIE RUSSELL."—Last year you were kind enough to insert a short appeal in The Christian on behalf of a Chinese boy, named after Bishop Russell, who is being educated in England. As the time for my departure from England is drawing near, I am very anxious to secure some definite promises for the next four years, £35 per annum being required for that period. Willie Russell has now been a year at the South Eastern College, Ramsgate, kindly admitted on reduced terms. It would be obviously unwise to say much about him in this letter; he has done fairly well in his studies, and has shown sufficient ability to make it work while giving him further opportunities. I hope that he will become a medical missionary, the best way I can think of atoning for the deadly poison we have so long imported into China by our countrymen.

PRAYER FOR ISRAEL.

The "All Day of Prayer" for Israel at Mildmay on Tuesday, the 30th ult., consisted of four meetings. The first was presided over by Colonel Morton, the subject being "Confession of culpable neglect of Israel by the Church of Christ." The Chairman touchingly confessed his own neglect, and gave the keynote to the meeting, which was felt by all to be a solemn time of humiliation before God. Rom. xi. was read, and Rev. J. M. Eppstein gave an earnest address bearing upon the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles, which was being celebrated at the same time. The subject, or rather object, of the second meeting was, "Prayer that the Christian Church may be aroused to an interest in the Jews warranted by the Word of God." Mr. J. E. Mathieson read Ezek. xxxvi. Rev. Dr. Bullinger spoke of the frequent prayers of our Lord as recorded by Luke, and urged his hearers to follow the example of the Perfect Man. Rev. Theo. Meyer also spoke, and many engaged in earnest prayer.

Again, in the afternoon, No. 6 Room was crowded to its utmost capacity for prayer "for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Jews throughout the world." Rev. John Wilkinson read Jud. x. 16, "His soul was grieved for the misery of Israel"; Amos vi. 6, "But they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph"; 1 Sam. xii. 23, "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you," and Ezek. xxxvii. Rev. Fuller Gooch gave a deeply spiritual and helpful address, exhorting prayer for Israel. About ten minutes were devoted to texts by brethren and sisters all over the room, bringing out the blessed promises of God for Israel. Many hearts were burdened with Israel's needs and poured out fervent supplications.

At the closing meeting the Spirit of God seemed even more manifest, and the whole company of believers specially burdened with the heartfelt desire for Israel's blessing. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided, and announced the object of the meeting. "Prayer for all missions to the Jews, that men and women engaged in this work may be filled with the Holy Spirit, and that modes of work may be those approved by the Word and Spirit of God." A telegram was read from Canada with the simple words, "We unite, Amen," and this, with the other meetings which were being held in various parts of the United Kingdom for the same object, gave encouragement to prayer and faith that God meant to answer these united supplications by large blessings to Israel.

Two young Jews who had selected this day of prayer to confess their faith in Jesus Christ were baptized early in the meeting by Rev. John Wilkinson and received Bibles and earnest exhortations from Rev. James Neil, formerly of Jerusalem, and Rev. Thornley Smith.

Rev. Mr. Nachim, in a short address, enjoined more love among Christians, and the last word was spoken by Rev. James Neil, who impressed upon his hearers their duties in relation to Israel in words that will not soon be forgotten. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, in his own earnest way, reminded the meeting to watch for the blessings to Israel that will assuredly follow the united supplications in the name of Him who said "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it."

THE WEST LONDON CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE will be held in the Congregational Church, Castletown-road, West Kensington, on October 6 to 8. The subjects afford scope for stimulating thought, being "Christian Communion," "Personal Religious Life," and "Christian Work," in our homes and the Church, in relation to prevalent vices, and in missions to the world. The conference is organised in connection with the Free Churches within the boundaries of Notting-hill, Chelsea, and Brentford.

CHILDREN'S MISSION IN LIVERPOOL.

A very successful eight days' mission for the young has just been concluded at St. Benedict's, Everton, Liverpool, by Mr. Henry Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission. For weeks beforehand many of the Sunday-school teachers and others were praying for a special blessing upon the children of the parish and congregation. Three meetings for the young were held on Sundays, Sept. 28 and Oct. 5, and two every day during the week. It was intended to hold the meetings in a large school-room, but the children came in such numbers that after the Monday night we were obliged to hold them in church. Each evening after-meetings were held, sometimes as many as two hundred staying behind, and many went on their way rejoicing in the Saviour they had found.

Our branch of the Scripture Union has received a great impetus, since numbers of young people now desire to read God's Word every day. The blessing has not been confined to the children; many of the workers have had their love for the Master and his work greatly increased. This was manifested by their presence and earnestness at a prayer-meeting held each morning at the early hour of seven; it was most encouraging to see fifty or sixty present, and to know that many had come a considerable distance and at no small inconvenience. Throughout the week the presence of "Jesus in the midst" was felt, and to Him we would render all the praise. Gerald H. Lander, Incumbent.

The Temperance Cause.

The French Temperance Society, Paris, has offered a prize of 1000 fr. for the best original work on alcoholism and its cure. Essays to be sent in by December 31, 1890.

The Russian Duchy of Finland has a Temperance League, a Blue Ribbon movement, a form of Good Templary moulded by Government orders, and a coffee-house movement.

The Blue Cross Total Abstinence Society, Switzerland, originated twelve years ago, now numbers several thousand members, and has branches in Belgium, France, and Germany.

The fifty-third anniversary of the Western Temperance League has been held at Frome. 353 societies are now in affiliation. The League's operations extend over a wide area.

At the meeting of the Bristol Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church of England, it was decided that, to be sound and useful, temperance work must be on the basis of total abstinence.

The Voice (New York) attributes the disgraceful scenes that have recently taken place in the American House of Representatives "to the fact that many of the statesmen have indulged in the poison sold in the nation's bar-rooms."

Rev. John Robertson, of Edinburgh, in a recent temperance address, said the churches were only beginning to wake up on the subject. Owing to moderate drinking ministers and elders the Church has long been asleep, but all that is being changed.

At a great Gospel temperance demonstration at Carrubbers'-close, Edinburgh, on Saturday evening, Professor Marcus Dods spoke strongly in favour of the forcible suppression of the drink traffic. Dr. Main, of China, gave an earnest address on the evils of the opium trade in that land.

Father Zieger, of St. Louis, Missouri, on a recent Sunday, announced from the altar that he had prepared a list of the habitual drunkards in the parish, and handed it to a committee of sixty ladies of the congregation. The ladies were to keep a watch on the drinkers, who were to be socially ostracised.

Mr. Stanley Newman, who has been studying the temperance question in the United States, declares that the high licence tends to hinder the prohibition movement. The money being applied to educational purposes, many rate-payers are opposed to prohibition, lest the education rate should again fall on them again.

Personalia.

Sir S. Arthur Blackwood has been preaching in the Free Church, Fortingall, N.B.

The Bishop of London's eyesight, which occasioned much anxiety some time since, is said to have returned in a marvellous manner.

The Archbishop of York is making rapid progress towards recovery from his recent illness, and hopes to be able to resume his duties at an early date.

Mr. Charles Inglis sails for New York in the s.s. Majestic on October 15, for mission work, and will be absent from England till the end of the year. Letters to him should be addressed, 99, Clinton-place, New York City.

Dr. John Hall, of New York, staying recently at Carlsbad, preached in the little hall in the Kurhaus, in which Presbyterian services are held. The text was 1 John iii. 1-3, the heads being: (1) the present position, (2) the future, and (3) the present duty of the children of God.

Rev. John Knox Leslie, on a recent Sunday at the third Presbyterian Church, Cookstown, co. Tyrone, preached the same sermon which he had preached in the same church fifty-five years previously, making use of the same old manuscript. Mr. Leslie has been the pastor of the church during all that period without a break. He is still in the enjoyment of full health and vigour.

Dr. Thain Davidson.—The Bulletin, the organ (to appear quarterly) of the new National Anti-Gambling League, gives the place of honour in its first number, just published, to a sketch (with portrait) of Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, of whom it says that, although, "according to orthodox modes of reckoning, his age is fifty-six, yet in largeness of heart and buoyancy of spirits he is about twenty-one." Dr. Davidson has been a warm friend of the Anti-Gambling League from its initiation, and is advertised to address a number of public meetings in its behalf during October and November.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Oscar Owers has been conducting special services at Elm Grove Church, Cricklewood. His addresses have been very helpful to all, and a true spirit of revival has been created.

Mr. Newton Jones, Sunday-school Union evangelist, has been working during the summer at the Stockwell Orphanage, Kentish Town, and Chatham. Christian workers, senior scholars, and others have been manifestly blessed.

Rugeley, Staffs.—Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has commenced a fortnight's special services in the Town Hall. A week previous to this, he concluded a fourteen days' mission in one of the Society's tents, which was greatly owned and blessed of God. Large gatherings of people have already met to listen to the preaching of the Gospel.

Marden, Wilts.—Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a month's barn meetings. Some persons came who for years had not been in a religious gathering. Although the inhabitants of the village number only 200, there was on Sundays an attendance of between 300 and 400, many walking several miles to be present an hour before service. God's Word has been with power.

Dowlais.—The Lord has graciously visited this town through a mission just held by Mr. Chas. Inglis. Believers have been wonderfully united, and over a thousand people have nightly attended the meetings. It has been a cheering sight to see the pitmen and ironworkers flocking to hear the Word of Life. Lady Henry Somerset, through whom the meetings were arranged, gave two addresses which will not soon be forgotten.

Dawlish.—A ten days' mission has taken place in the Shaftesbury Hall, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Meetings were held every evening, and Bible-readings on most of the afternoons, the whole conducted by Mrs. Dorin, of Clapham. The attendance was good throughout, and many received blessing. At a concluding praise-meeting, a request was made that all who had received good from the meetings should present a thankoffering, and a sum of over £12 was given for the benefit of the Association.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIANS AND THE THEATRE.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Algernon Coote's letter reminds me of an interesting conversation which I had with a young man in Dublin shortly after Mr. Moody's visit to that city. I had held an evangelistic service in Kilmainham district, and among those who remained for the after-meeting I noticed an intelligent young man. In answer to my question if he was a Christian, he said "No; and what's more, I could not be one," and his reason for this strange statement was that he had accepted an engagement in a London theatre, and was going to enter upon it on the following Thursday. I begged him to accept the offer of salvation which had just been made, and to trust the Lord to provide for him. He hesitated and reasoned, but towards midnight, as we walked the streets together, he decided for Christ. I had a Bible-reading at my house on Thursday, and I asked him to it. When the day came he was there radiant with joy. I said, "Are you not going to London? This is the day you were to have taken up your appointment." His reply was, "Not for worlds." He very soon got work in the Custom House, and had to run the gauntlet in the "Long-room" with Romanists and others, but he lived down opposition to a great extent, and was witnessing boldly for Christ when I saw him last.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully, F. Hobbs, Lieut.-Col.

"ANGLO-SAXONS IN INDIA."

Dear Sir,—I trust the "distress signal" hoisted by "Zenana Missionary" may not go unheeded by God's people here, for such a plea, coming from those who are labouring in the midst and have the opportunity of observing the influence of the lives of godless but nominal Christians, European and Eurasian, should command attention. From my own observation and experience in Madras I am fully convinced that something should be done for the evangelisation of India, beyond what is being done by the existing mission agencies. I have no desire to criticise the noble men and women who are serving so faithfully, but their best efforts are neutralised by the baneful influence of the representatives of Christianity in both military, naval, and civil life in India.

Since present methods do not meet this difficulty, why should not evangelists be sent forth to work and evangelise the European and Eurasian settlers? I do not advocate the founding of any fresh society for this purpose, but that the existing societies should add to their present staff of missionaries to the heathen a band of earnest mission workers, men possessed with sound common sense and tact, but above all with a burning desire for souls, and the extension of Christ's kingdom. Of such there are hundreds, among the working and other classes, who would joyfully give themselves to the work. Do not reduce the numbers of educated persons with college passports who may be ready to give themselves to the Master for service in the foreign field, but add such a band to the number for this special work.—Yours truly,

H. W. Knight.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to point out what an encouragement is contained in Dr. Smith's successes (as indicated in your sketch in a recent issue) to all those who are engaged in the work of Christian education. There is no incongruity or incompatibility between true Christian spirituality and the highest attainments in study. I have a very distinct recollection of W. S. Smith as "Senior Prefect" at Marlborough College. Under his fine, manly bearing, and his high school distinctions, we knew that there was a sincere Christian character. He was not the only instance by many (thank God) in the College at that time, in which, along with high intellectual excellence, was exhibited the proof of a careful home training. As it was of old, "Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts vii. 22); but he had enjoyed an earlier religious education from his mother (Exod. ii. 9), which led him to "choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward" (Heb. xi. 25, 26). The early religious education preceded the intellectual success

Let, then, parents and teachers take encouragement. Their work may sometimes seem hard and discouraging. But with such an example as this (and many more that I could mention), who can recall the chapel services at Marlboeough College, or, in fact, any large school, without reflecting that among those upturned faces listening to the preacher's voice and drinking in the words of life there are many destined by God to be "as arrows in the hand of a mighty man" (Ps. cxxvii. 4) ready to be shot forth in God's own time, under the impulsive power of personal redemption, to do battle for the Lord's cause? "Happy is the man"—happy is the family, happy is the school, happy is the country—"that hath its quiver full of them. They shall not be ashamed when they speak with their enemies in the gate."

Formerly Assistant Master at Marlborough College.

Obituary.

MRS. WILLIAM BOOTH.

After intense suffering, extending over a lengthened period, Mrs. Booth has entered into rest. The anguish of cancer and the trial of steadily decreasing strength are now over. Several times during recent months her friends have surrounded her bed, thinking that the end was near; but until Saturday last Mrs. Booth rallied in a wonderful manner.

"Rejoicing in tribulation," Mrs Booth bore a grand testimony during her illness. Sustained by the grace of God, which the prayers of thousands never ceased to invoke, her heart often overflowed with praise to her ever-present Saviour. The calm and restfulness of the last hours are now a source of great comfort to her family; but although long expected the blow has come very severely upon General Booth and Mrs. Booth-Tucker. The secret of all the calm and restfulness lay in the beautiful confidence of the sufferer; God was at her right hand, therefore she was not subject to the slightest agitation. In her last moments, scarcely able to speak, owing to bodily weakness, she whispered the name of Jesus, and then said "Victory." The General, Mr. Bramwell Booth, and three of the daughters were present. Their mourning is deep but mingled with great joy; this paradox of experience being, of course, explained by a knowledge that what to them is loss is to the departed one great gain. We hope next week to give portraits of General Booth and his wife, with a biographical sketch.

"I cast myself on God—I must—I do—over the past and into the present, and for the future I trust, I trust, I trust."—Mrs. Booth, when thought to be dying.

Over the past where my feet have trod,
Wandering oft from the paths of God;
Leaving a track in the yielding sand [hand;
And shells that have slipped from my feeble
O'er its tangled weeds and its blinding dust,
The tide rolls brightly—the tide of trust.

Into the present its waters roll,
Filling the depths of my inmost soul;
Washing the caverns of fear and doubt,
Bearing the refuse of earth far out;
Lifting me, bearing me up, as I thrust
My bark on the waters of perfect trust.

Into the future I launch away,
Seeking the sun of the dawning day;
Scarlet the flag that I wave as I go,
Bidding farewell to the world below;
Lifting my sail to the wind's first gust:
Follow me, soldiers, in childlike trust.

I cannot trace where the course may be,
For there are no tracks on the trackless sea;
I cannot plan of my future course,
With bridle and rein on the sea's wild horse;
But God is faithful, and God is just,
So I do what the weakest can do—I trust.

I trust, I trust in unbounded love,
An ocean beneath me, a sky above;
The sunshine by day, and the stars' pale light,
God's beacons of love in the darkest night.
I trust the waters of love, and must Be ever upborne, for I trust, I TRUST.

Her bark is anchored! the storms are past;
On the sea of glass she is Home at last.
Her work on earth, and her hope above,
Is trusted still to eternal love.
May we repeat, as we follow, "I must,
I will, I do on the Saviour trust."

William Luff.

MR. WILLIAM C. LESTER.

We regret to hear of the death of this gentleman who was for many years secretary of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society. He passed away on September 29, in the 73rd year of his age. His death will be deeply deplored by the blind of London. Deprived of sight in his early years, he was keenly susceptible to the sufferings of others. He was skilful in organisation, a laborious worker, and excellent in counsel. He threw his energies into the work of the Society with such effect that it has largely grown in prominence and usefulness. He was at the helm well-nigh to the last, and his labours will still live in the future of the Institution. The funeral took place on Saturday last, at St. Marylebone Cemetery, East Finchley. The blind visitors and others closely associated with the desceased in his work were among those who gathered with the widow and relatives at the grave. Rev. Gordon Calthrop specially attended to read the burial service. Wherever the blind of this great city are found, there will be no memory more truly cherished than that of Mr. Lester. Such lives as his bear practical lessons of fortitude in affliction, love of fellow man, and faith in the goodness and wisdom of God.

Y.M.C.A., ALDERSGATE-STREET.—Amongst the new departures in the arrangements of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., is a training class, conducted by the general secretary, designed for the instruction of members and other young men who, with a view to honorary or stipendiary service, desire better to understand the nature, object, and scope of the Young Men's Christian Association. The session commences on Monday next, 14th inst., at 8 p.m. We trust the class will prove helpful and successful.

METROPOLITAN MUSIC-HALL.—Mr. Charles Cook reopened his Gospel services in this hall on Sunday last for the winter season. There was a good attendance. Miss Burford and a choir sang some pleasing solos, choruses, and an anthem; indeed a special feature seems to be made of the Gospel in song, which has, in past years, proved very attractive to the many who are gathered in here Sunday by Sunday. Gospel addresses were given by Mr. Charles Cook, Mr. Harry Sidford (of Wimbledon), and Mr. R. Allsworth Elvey (of Regent's Park College), to an immense audience. Many real conversions have taken place within these walls, and we hope our readers will strengthen Mr. Cook's hands in this responsible work.

NORTH AFRICAN MISSION.—A large meeting has been held at Cumberland Hall, Hotwells, Bristol, to take farewell of Miss Grainger and Miss Alice Case. The former, after successfully labouring for some years among the Moslem women at Constantine, had returned for the benefit of her health. The latter has been engaged for the last few years in work at Hotwells, and now accompanies an old school companion for joint work in Tunis. After mentioning that the Mission is labouring in Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, and North Arabia, Mr. E. H. Glenny, hon. sec., dwelt on the need of the work, and said that North Africa affords a wide field for Christian sisters, as they only, as a rule, could enter the homes of the Mohammedans and reach the women. The Mission is entirely dependent on the free will offerings of the Lord's people, and those who go out to labour have no gnaranteed salary, but share in what is given.

"LIGHTS ALONG THE LINE."—Within 100 miles of London, a new railroad has been opened, and when visiting the stations last week for the purpose of having a text of Scripture (John iii. 16) placed in each, I was thankful to meet with a station master who was not only a total abstainer, but a follower of the Lord Jesus, and gladly received Gospel and temperance literature to distribute among his Sunday evening congregation, which assembled in the large waiting-room, well filling the place, as on the previous day 150 were present. Several educated and converted agriculturists have come to reside in the neighbourhood, and these, with the clergymen (having pro. tem. cast aside their sectarianism), have joined heart and hand in the good work of preaching Christ. When distributing tracts, &c., in the village, I found a Christian, who said how greatly the services at the station were appreciated, as they were more than five miles from the nearest chapel. Truly, this is a much needed "light" in a dark place, and may we have much of the Master's presence and blessing, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 12.—Proverbs VI.

A CHAPTER of warnings. Wisdom directs us not only what to do, but what to avoid. The hidden rocks upon which we may strike are all marked. Obedience to the Word of God, whole-hearted and continuous (20-23) is our only safety. If we stray, it is not for want of clear direction, but of care in following it.

Suretyship (1-5).—All suretyship is not forbidden; such, for example, as that of Reuben and Judah for Benjamin (Gen. xlii. 37, xliii. 9); and still more, that of Jesus for his people. He became answerable for our liabilities, with the full intention of having to meet them for us. Without this suretyship we would be in despair. But the warning is against rash engagements involving responsibilities which cannot honestly be met.

Indolence (6-11).—A wise man will readily receive instruction even from ants. Their industry and providence powerfully reprove the indolent man. "Guides" are parents, teachers, ministers, the Bible. God is the constant "Overseer." "Thou God seest me." And He is the "Ruler" and Judge before whom our account must be given.

Mischievous wickedness (12-19).—The poverty of the sluggard comes because of his slothfulness (11), that of the "naughty person" because of his unwearied activity in evil (15). All the members of his body—mouth, eyes, feet, fingers (12, 13) are used as "instruments of unrighteousness," because the "heart" (14) is wrong. With a slight addition all these features reappear in the description of the seven "abominations" (16-19). "The sower of discord" (19) is put in strange company. The God of Peace hates strife and division.

The evil woman (24-35).—Her attractions are her "flattering tongue" (24), and "her beauty" (25), and these are snares into which man easily falls. Yet for this sin there is no excuse (30-32). He who commits it condemns himself as "lacking understanding" (32); and brings upon himself poverty (26), certain injury (27-29), dishonour and reproach (33), and death (26, 34, 35). Strange that men will seek a brief present pleasure at the cost of eternal reproach and shame.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 13.—Proverbs VII.

1-5. These directions for keeping the Word of God are very explicit. "Lay it up" (1), not on the shelf as unnecessary; not in the memory for repetition; but in "the heart" (3) for life. To "write them on the heart" is God's work (Jer. xxxi. 33). "The apple of the eye" (2). Eyebrows, eyelids, eyelashes are all intended to preserve the pupil. Thus carefully God keeps his own (Deut. xxxii. 10; Ps. xvii. 8; Zech. ii. 8). The slightest neglect of that law should pain us as a mote would pain the eye. "On thy fingers" (3).—Ready at hand for constant use (iii. 3). "My sister" (4).—Claim kinship with wisdom. Regard her with affection.

6-23. The social evil again; this time in very graphic delineation. In Solomon's view it is evidently a matter concerning which young men need frequent and faithful warning. Perhaps the simple youth intended only to go near the woman's house (6-9). It was dangerous ground. He who needlessly enters into temptation is sure to fall. The "dark night" (9) was not only a convenient cover for his sin; it was a terribly "dark night" for him (John xiii. 30). Possibly he wished, yet feared to see the woman. The wish was speedily gratified (10-13), and he became her victim. His fears, if they were connected with his conscience, she sought to remove by the guise of religion, with which she covered her sin (14). "She durst not play the harlot with man till she had played the hypocrite with God, and stopped the mouth of her conscience with peace offerings."—Gurnal. Vice is never so hateful to God nor so easy to man as when varnished with religion. How skilfully she tempts (15-20), and, alas! successfully, too. And he follows, as he thinks, to his pleasure; but in truth to his own doom (22, 23).

24-27. To hear wisdom's voice is the only way to be deaf to the temptress. Note the contrast: wisdom gives life (2); sin destroys it (27). Over the gate of wisdom is written "the way to heaven"; over the entrance to the house of sin, "the way to hell" (27).

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14.—Proverbs VIII.

It is not the wisdom of Solomon that speaks here; nor is it merely the attribute of Divine wisdom. It is a Person, who claims wisdom as one of his own attributes (14); who loves and can be loved (17); who existed from eternity (22-24); who is separate from God—for God delighted in Him, and from men—for He delighted in them (30, 31); and who was associated with God in the creation of the world (27-29). There is only one Person to whom this description applies—Jesus, the personal embodiment of the wisdom of God. Comp. John i. 1-4; 1 Cor. i. 24; Col. ii. 16, 17.

Men will go out of their way to hear the tempter's voice; but they are so deaf to the voice of wisdom that she needs to cry loudly (1), persistently, and in every place (2, 3), in order to be heard. Learn the extent of the danger to be shunned, and the value of the blessings to be gained from the affectionate earnestness of wisdom's appeal. Learn, also, that in public life (2), in business (3), and in the home (3), wisdom's counsel is needed.

Wisdom's message is for all (4). Note the progression. Hear (6), receive (10), then love (17). No one can know the joy of wisdom's ways except by beginning to walk in them. There is everything to induce us to hear (6-8). Strange that such a voice should be unheeded! Prudence is wisdom's companion (12). How unspeakably valuable the blessings we receive through that grace "wherein He hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence" (Eph. i. 8). Who does not long for a life in which righteousness, wisdom, strength, and prudence appear? (10-16).

Invaluable blessings result from hearing wisdom (18-21). He who is without Christ has neither riches nor honour that will last; he who possesses Him has "substance," which "fills his treasures." Love of this world's riches is covetousness, and the root of all evil; but without limit we may covet "the unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph. iii. 8). Wisdom makes good her claim to be heard (22-31). "Possessed" (22) is the same word as "gotten" (Gen. iv. 1), suggesting parentage, and recalling Ps. ii. 7 and Micah v. 2. The margin of the R.V. reads: "as the beginning of his way, the first of his works of old." See Rev. iii. 14; Col. i. 15. The words do not explain—for no human language can explain—the mystery of the eternal sonship; but they assert it. As a Divine speaker He commands our attention. Yet his incarnation is here also (30, 31). In anticipation of this He rejoiced with the sons of men, among whom He was to become the Son of Man in condescending love.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15.—Proverbs IX.

Wisdom's banquet (1-5).—Compare with this Matt. xxii. 1-4, and contrast it with the tempting woman (vii.). Wisdom's "house" (1) is the Church of the living God (Matt. xvi. 18; 1 Tim. iii. 15). The "seven pillars" are wisdom's (1), and refer to the sevenfold grace of the Spirit possessed by Jesus (Rev. i. 4); and the servants of God are pillars in the measure in which they possess this Spirit (Gal. ii. 9). Wisdom provides no feast without sacrifice (2). The atonement is the basis of all Gospel blessings. The harlot's religion was without this (vii. 14). This has always been the grand distinction between man's religion and God's (Gen. iv. 3-5). Spiritual blessings are a "feast" (Ps. xxxvi. 8; Isa. xxv. 6). It suggests not only satisfaction, but fellowship, and joy. "Her maidens" (3) are the messengers who proclaim the Gospel. Yet, note that, though these are many, it is wisdom that cries through them all (3). So does the Lord identify Himself and his servants (Matt. x. 40). While the world lures the simple to sin and death (vii. 18); wisdom invites to her better banquet (Isa. lv. 1, 2).

All do not accept wisdom's invitation. The parable is again true (Matt. xxii. 5-10). The "scorners" (7, 8, 12) are hopeless. They will not receive, so it is useless to give reproof. See Matt. vii. 6. Such men are lost, not because they do not know, but because, though knowing, they deliberately despise. There is no greater proof of true wisdom than readiness to receive reproof (8).

As far as possible "the foolish woman" (13) competes with wisdom for the capture of the simple. The same place (3, 14), and even the same words (4, 16) are appropriated. But with what a terrible difference in her intention! Both these voices invite; both seem equally in earnest—the one to destroy, the other to save. A brief pleasure is offered by the one, culminating in "the depths of hell" (18); the other offers truer though less exciting joys now, with eternal life at the end. To which will you give heed?

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16.—Proverbs X.

From this chapter, Wisdom, the great Teacher, who has already been introduced to us, begins to instruct us in short antithetical or illustrative sentences, often unconnected. It will be possible to make only brief reference to some of these proverbs.

1. The greatest joy and the heaviest grief a parent can know are connected with children. Joseph and Samuel are illustrations of "wise sons"; Cain and Absalom of the foolish. Note, righteousness is wisdom; wickedness is folly.

4. An idle, indolent Christian is a contradiction in terms. Trust does not encourage sloth. For the wise use of present opportunities (5) diligence is needed. To sleep now is irreparable loss (xix. 15).

6. "Be good, and do good, so shall thy name be heir to thy life."—Trapp. (See Heb. xi. 2.)

9. There is no safe travelling except upon "the highway of holiness" (Isa. xxxv. 8-10). He who walks in the light (1 John i. 7) stumbles not (John xi. 9, 10).

13, 14. How important are our words as revealing what we are! "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh" (Matt. xii. 34-37). If our speech is to be a "well of life" (12), we must have the "well of living water" within (John iv. 14, vii. 38). To "lay up knowledge" (14) by attentive hearing is the only way to speak "a word in season" (Isa. l. 4).

15. This is a surface contrast. Wealth seems to be, and, rightly used, is an advantage. Poverty seems to be, and, but for the grace of God, would be a disadvantage. Both conditions have their temptations (xxx. 7-9). But the contrast is literally true of the true wealth and spiritual pauperising (viii. 21; Jer. v. 4).

19-21. Another sin of the tongue contrasted with its opposite blessings. Babbling is an indication of an empty heart (20, 21). The wise man knows when to "keep silence." He speaks with caution, and his speech is as silver (xxv. 11).

26. A sluggard is a vexation to any master. Has our great Master no such servants? Comp. Rom. xii. 11; Rev. iii. 16.

28. Distinguish between a well-grounded hope and a delusive expectation. A man's delusion may last even to "that day" (Matt. vii. 22, 23). It is possible to dream of heaven, and wake in hell!

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17.—Proverbs XI.

1. God's eye is upon every little detail of our life. Burning the false bushel is a good evidence of conversion. Righteousness before God requires strictest rightness in our dealings with men.

3-7. Righteousness—a single desire to know and to do the will of God (Matt. vi. 22, 23) saves a man from the perplexity into which the wicked fall. Not only during life, but at death (7) and in "the day of wrath" (4) transgressors are the losers. Even "rich men" cannot deliver themselves from "the wrath of the Lamb" (Rev. vi. 15-17). Is not "the way of transgressors hard"?

8-11. Further proof of 1 Tim. iv. 8. The ungodly fall into the troubles from which the righteous are delivered. Haman was hanged upon Mordecai's gallows; the accusers of Daniel were slain by the lions from which he was delivered. Not to themselves only, but to the community (9, 11) the wicked are a curse, so that their death is a cause of rejoicing (10). The saints are "the salt of the earth."

12, 13. "Tale-bearers," who "work not at all" are "busy bodies" (2 Thess. iii. 11), and go from house to house (margin) making mischief. Trust every secret with the Faithful Friend. You can fully confide only in Him.

15. Is this only a warning against careless suretyship? Or, is it not the Gospel of Jesus Christ? For strangers—even for enemies—(Rom. v. 8-10) He became surety. Did He not smart for it (Isa. liii. 5)? Was He not urged to make Himself sure by avoiding suretyship? He would not save Himself, because He came to save others (Matt. xxvii. 42).

18. Sin is well described as "a deceitful work." What labour (Isa. lv. 2) it often involves. The devil is a hard taskmaster.

22. Beauty divorced from discretion is an evil thing. Honour and integrity are infinitely more to be prized. Cultivate "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit" (1 Pet. iii. 4, 5).

24-26. Dig channels for the fount of love,
Where its blessed streams may run;
And know that love has copious streams
To fill them every one.
For only while we share we keep
That blest thing from above,
Ceasing to give, we cease to have,
Such is the law of love.

30. The righteous flourishes as a branch (28; John xv. 5), and his fruit is a tree of life. (See Rev. xxii. 2). Such a man "wins souls." This is work the wisest may attempt, and that only the wisdom of God can enable a man to do. Considered as to its result how wise a work it is (Dan. xii. 3)!

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18.—Proverbs XII.

1. "Instruction"=discipline. We can only love this because of its results (Heb. xii. 10, 11). To refuse it because of present pain is brute-like (Isa. i. 3).

2. Note that wicked thoughts are condemned as well as the deeds to which they lead. Hence in true repentance "thoughts" must be forsaken.

3. Nothing can establish the wicked, nor disturb the righteous. He is "rooted in Him" (Col. ii. 7).

4. Ruth is described as "a virtuous woman" (Ruth iii. 11). This is a crown that does not sit uneasy on any man's brow. A woman who is a shame to herself is as a perpetual and painful disease to her husband.

5-7. The outward life depends upon the thoughts of the heart. As is the fountain so are the streams (iv. 23). Words indicate what is in the heart.

9. Better no worldly display with the necessaries of life than mere outward pomp with nothing. Does not this apply also to the Christian, now despised, yet fully satisfied in heart, in contrast with the worldling, who seeks present honour while his soul lacks bread?

12. The avarice of the wicked, who desire to make use of any net to ensnare their victims, in contrast with the unselfishness of the righteous. While seeking to ensnare others, the wicked by their own lips ensnare themselves (13).

14. Mouth and hands of the righteous are employed for God. All our members may be instruments of righteousness (Rom. vi. 13).

18. Job (xiii. 4), David (Ps. lii. 2-4), Jeremiah (xviii. 18), all felt the piercings of this sword. Every slanderer, backbiter, tale-bearer is making his tongue into a sword. Yet who would not covet to speak as "the piercings of a sword" in the good sense; and then by the same tongue to heal the wound? See Hosea vi. 1.

21. "No evil"—absolutely none. There may be "many afflictions" (Ps. xxxiv. 19); faithful correction (Heb. xii. 5, 6); "manifold temptations" (1 Pet. i. 6), but nothing shall hurt them (Rom. viii. 28; Luke x. 19).

25. A heavy heart results from conviction of sin; the Gospel is the "good word that maketh it glad." Find the heavy-hearted, and give them this gladdening message.

26. "God knows how much rather I would be the obscure tenant of a lath and plaster cottage, with a lively sense of my interest in my Redeemer, than the most admired object of public notice without it."—Cowper.

"TRUST IN THE LORD."

When your way seems all so cloudy,
And the mists keep hovering near,
And your soul is filled with sorrow,
And you droop 'neath care and fear;
Then keep simply trusting Jesus,
When one step you cannot trace;
Soon, so soon in heavenly brightness,
You will see his unveiled face.

When your way seems all so stormy,
And the billows loudly roar,
And your little bark seems drifting
Nearer to the rocky shore;
Then just fly to Him for refuge,
In the hollow of his hand;
He will still the raging waters,
And will bring you safe to land.

When your way seems full of sunshine,
And you have no doubt or fear;
When you learn in sweet communion,
On the Lord to cast your care:
Then, oh! then, draw closer to Him,
Nearer to his bleeding side;
Listening to his faintest whisper,
There in peace you may abide.

Thus in sunshine, or in sorrow,
When thy way is bright or dark,
"Calmly wait for God's to-morrow,"
Pressing onward to the mark:
For He'll soon come out to meet thee,
Take thee to his home above;
Where through everlasting ages,
Thou shalt sing of all his love.

Sunday Afternoon, October 19.

The Spirit of True Service.—Luke xxii. 24-37.

Golden Text: Phil. ii. 5.

What a wealth of incident was crowded into the last night of the Saviour's life; and what "wonderful words of life" fell from his lips then! The thought of his death is before Him (37), yet his chief concern is, not to obtain sympathy for Himself, but to correct what is wrong in his diciples.

True Greatness (24-30).—How common were these strifes among the Apostles! See ix. 46; Matt. xviii. 1, xx. 20-23. Pride is man's besetting sin. It led to the Fall (Gen. iii. 5), to the degradation of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. iv.), and has never ceased to trouble the Church (3 John 9). Beware of unsanctified ambition. The mere desire to "get on" has led to the blackest crimes ever committed. How unseemly at such a time! Their spirit and aim are so directly opposite to his. He is self-forgetful for their interests; they seek only exaltation for themselves. Contrast this strife with their previous inquiry (23). What a difference!

Our Lord's reply contains: (1) Reproof.—They were reducing his kingdom to the level of Gentile heathen kingdoms (25). The ideas of greatness that prevail in them cannot be introduced among his followers. Their concern was to be "accounted" great (24), as the greatest of tyrants may be "called benefactors" (25). This very term was applied to Antiochus VII. of Syria, and Ptolemy III. of Egypt. (2) Instruction (26).—They are to value being rather than seeming. Contr. "called" (25), with let him become (26, R.V.). Self-forgetful service for others, the humility that serves, that seeks not its own but another's good (Rom. xii. 10; Phil. ii. 3, 4)—this is true greatness. Nothing that is done merely "to show off" is great. (3) Example (27).—All his life He was as a servant (Phil. ii. 6, 7); but the words refer particularly to the foot-washing (John xiii.) which takes place about this time. None of them had been "great" enough to do for Him a lowly service which He had done for them. Truest exaltation is reached by condescension (Golden Text).

Besides correcting what was wrong in their aspiration, Jesus promises to gratify what was right (28-30). Temptations (See iv. 13).—The word refers also to the trials which had constantly beset Him, and in which they had shared. This "fellowship with his sufferings" is to be followed by fellowship with "the glory that should follow" (1 Pet. i. 11). First the cross, then the joy (Heb. xii. 2); first the humilation, then the exaltation (Phil. ii. 6-11). The order is true for Him and for us. What a grand exhibition of his triumph is here. In the hour of his seeming defeat, He is distributing kingdoms, and thrones, and lasting honours to his faithful followers (29, 30). Compare John xvii. 22; 1 Cor. vi. 2.

Faithful Warnings.—Satan is already at work in the betrayer (John xiii. 2, 27). His near presence, and the danger threatening the disciples, Jesus recognises. Many suggestive lessons are in these words. (1) The subordinate position, yet the malicious purpose of Satan.—Desired (13), or "asked" (R.V.). He is powerless to touch the disciples without Divine permission. See Job i. 7-12, ii. 1-6. Sift.—"As the wheat is shaken in the sieve that the chaff may thereby separate itself from the wheat and fall out," so will Satan seek to prove "you"—not Peter alone, to be chaff. If he has succeeded with Judas, why not with the rest?

(2) The powerful sympathy of Jesus.—This breathes in his twice-repeated Simon (31), and appears in the intercession (32), by which He secured his servant. The "asking" of Satan is meet by the "prayer" of Jesus. Thy faith fail not (32).—This indicates the real danger. Faith always overcomes; but when that fails we are vanquished (Matt. xiv. 30).

(3) The malice of the enemy turned to the good of the disciples.—Others were to be strengthened by Peter's experience of failure (32). So that Satan overshoots his mark. His malicious purpose is defeated, and the little measure of success he gets only ministers to the good of those he sought to destroy. The best man to help others is the one who has been down himself (Ps. li. 12, 13).

(4) The perfect knowledge of Jesus.—How accurately He knew the experiences awaiting all his disciples, and Peter in particular (33, 34). Peter was self-confident because he was ignorant of the vigilance and strength of his enemy, and the weakness of his own heart.

(5) The fulfilment of the Divine Word (37, R.V and Isa. liii. 12).—It was a striking prophecy, yet was accurately fulfilled (xxiii. 32, 33). This brought the disciples into new circumstances. For the need of the future they must exercise a certain amount of prudence and foresight (35, 36). Without the influence of his popularity they might expect hostility instead of hospitality. Their trust in the presence and protection of the all-powerful Lord (Matt. xxviii. 18-20) must not make them imprudent. The sword can hardly be literal (38; Matt. xxvi. 52), except it be to reprove those who have already provided two.

LESSONS.

"Ambition is boundless, rides without reins, builds itself on the ruins of others, and cares not to swim to its design though in a sea of blood."—Trapp.

There is an ostentatious humility covering most hateful pride. Thomas à Becket, though proud, overbearing, supercilious toward others, yet affected humility by washing the feet of thirteen beggars every morning.

Value character rather than reputation. Care not so much to be counted great as to be great. What you are is of more importance than what you appear.

Beware of self-confidence. It was this which prepared the way for Peter's fall (1 Cor. x. 12).

Trust the all-prevailing intercession of our Great High Priest. He secured Peter, and saves to the uttermost all who come to God through Him (Heb. vii. 25).

THEATRICAL MISSION INSTITUTE.

FIRST DECADE.

On October 16 Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd will (D.V.) celebrate the completion of ten years' daily work for God amongst the members of the theatrical profession. The Mission commenced in 1876: took the practical form of a Christian Club on October 16, 1880. The one room then taken and furnished has developed into "Macready House, Covent Garden," with its three commodious Assembly Halls for young women, lads, and little children. The Orphanage in the three upper floors meets a much-needed want, and several "cots" are now paid for from year to year by kind friends. But the committee and directors desire to see all the beds occupied, and there are constant applications from all parts. The most recently admitted inmates have been a Scotch lassie, without either parent, who played "Bonnie Prince Charlie;" a wee cripple girl—fatherless, with a mother constantly "on tour;" and an older girl left friendless and alone in Wales. Young people left stranded by the trickery of the "bogus manager" are often received as "emergency cases" for his sake who said, "I was a stranger, and ye took Me in."

On Thursday next, from 4 to 6, Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd will be "At home" at the Institute in Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, and hope old and new friends will rally round them to praise God for his goodness, and for the deliverances of his providence "these ten years." It is suggested that guests should each bring 2 lb. of groceries, fruits, vegetables, or other gifts in kind for the use of the Institute, or monetary contributions, after the fashion of the "American Pound Party." All departments of the house will be open for inspection, and a very pleasant and profitable afternoon is expected. A "Commemoration Medal" is being struck, and each member will be presented with one before leaving the Institute.

That upwards of 54,000 attendances are registered yearly speaks well for the appreciation of those in whose behalf the work is carried on, while the frequent opposition shown by "interested parties" surely proves that the Holy Spirit is carrying on his work of winning careless ones to Christ. The monthly letters of nearly 1600 Christian ladies, the frequent visits of devoted workers, the services, meetings, lectures, are all fruitful in their results; and it is hoped that all readers of The Christian, whether present or absent on Thursday, will join in thanksgiving. Tickets of admission can be had free on application in writing.

The Poor Children's Aid Society, 19, Surrey-street, Strand, which occupies itself during the summer months with sending poor children into the country, asks help to purchase clothing for poor children of London elementary and ragged schools, to whom 12,445 garments were lent last winter.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church Missionary Society has received a donation of £1000 from an anonymous benefactor for mission work in the Soudan and the Upper Niger district.

The Bishop of Norwich has directed a commission of inquiry into the circumstances and conditions of the poorer livings in his cathedral city, and invited suggestions thereupon.

The Bishop of Carlisle, speaking in his diocesan conference, strongly recommended the Revised Bible for private study, but did not think it would be advisable at the present time that it should be generally introduced into the churches.

Dr. Saumarez Smith, the new Bishop of Sydney, has arrived in his diocese and met with a hearty welcome. A special service was held in the cathedral, and there was also a public reception, at which Dr. Smith was presented with an address.

A telephone experiment took place recently at Christ Church, Birmingham, to ascertain if the services could be transmitted to a number of persons at homes or offices. More than a hundred connections were obtained, and the experiment proved a great success.

Rev. Joseph Hudson, rector of Chillingham, Alnwick, is believed to be the oldest clergyman now officiating in the Established Church. He was 98 years of age on January 5, and was ordained in the year 1816. He officiated on Sunday last, and is stated to be "hale and hearty."

About a hundred Nonconformist ministers responded to the Bishop of Lichfield's invitation to partake of luncheon with his lordship on Monday week. At a short devotional meeting in the library of the Theological College, the spiritual union of all believers in Christ was exhibited by fervent prayers offered by many present, the Bishop and Archdeacon Scott joining. At the private residence of the Bishop everything was done to make the guests feel "at home." After the happy repast, many of the ministers attended evening service in the cathedral, when an address was delivered by Canon Curteis. The day's engagements were a means of grace to many.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Frank Dymond, of Chesham, has just concluded a five days' Gospel mission at Uxbridge, which has been attended with much blessing.

John and Eleanor Cowgill have deeded to Ohio Yearly Meeting two tracts of land, aggregating 190 acres, to be held and used for the spread of the Gospel.

Mary E. Beck and Isaac Sharp started on Saturday last on their missionary journeys abroad, the former to live in America, the other to travel round much of the world.

For years past, Ohio Friends have been more or less divided in sentiment and in practice with regard to the ordinances. The recent Yearly Meeting, though conducted in much harmony, had to deplore some reduction in membership. Where divergencies in doctrine and practice prevail, there cannot be the success that true unity accomplishes. The agitation whose results are thus apparent seems dying, and the outlook of the Yearly Meeting brighter than for years.

American Friends have The Missionary Advocate and English Friends The Friend of Missions as monthly periodicals to represent the missionary enterprise. Both are ably conducted, and full of interest. In America there are also three weekly papers representing different interests; while in England, with its network of meetings, missions, and adult schools, there is none. The subject was touched on at last Western Quarterly Meeting. The early Friends were almost prodigal in their use of the press.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Newman Hall preached the sermon at the autumnal meeting of the Somerset Union at Taunton. At the luncheon, Mr. Hall observed that the socialism which is to-day so greatly needed is that which will lead to a personal interest in everything that aims at improving the welfare of the poor.

The present tenure of Claylands Chapel, Clapham, where Rev. Baldwin Brown ministered from 1845 to 1870, is leasehold. An opportunity has arisen of converting it into a freehold, and securing the chapel in perpetuity for the Congregational denomination. An effort is being made to raise £450 before November 29.

Clapham Church, which has been closed for a month for repair and redecoration, has been re-opened for Divine service. "The Present Need of the Church" formed the subject of one of the opening discourses, by Rev. J. Guinness Rogers. It was founded upon the words, "Clothed with power from on high." One element of the power that came down upon the Apostles at Pentecost was courage, and Christian men need to-day the courage that will listen to no suggestion of compromise that involves the surrender of any portion of the truth—courage to utter the deep convictions of our own hearts. Unselfish sympathy, God's gift, is also required. The Apostles had it because of the power they received from on high. We, too, shall have it just as we all become spiritual men.

Resignation. — Rev. D. Orllwyn Brace, of Shiloh, Trecynon, Aberdare.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. William Marwick, of Arbroath, to Ward-road Chapel, Dundee, as assistant to Rev. Dr. Short.—Rev. Hopper Joplin, of Hull, to Dundas-street, Sunderland.—Rev. W. Silas Charles, of Swansea, to North-street, Ferndale.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Archibald Brown has been preaching at the Tabernacle, Nottingham, in connection with the tenth anniversary of Rev. H. E. Stone. Mr. Brown's discourse on 1 Cor. iv. 7: "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" was highly appreciated.

The Baptist Missionary Society have opened a new chapel at Upoto, Upper Congo River. The station is 700 miles beyond Stanley Pool. The district is largely populated, towns extending for several miles. The natives are very friendly, and a particularly fine sphere seems to present itself for mission work.

The church at Wellington, Somerset, under the care of Rev. G. W. Humphreys, B.A., is making an important forward movement by taking into connection with itself a large chapel on Rockwell Green, a neighbouring village. Some members of Mr. Humphreys' church have also taken a room in the village, where the free mission friends have held services for some four or five years.

Being about to spend several months in visiting the Indian mission stations, Rev. E. G. Gange, of Bristol, has taken leave of his congregation at Broadmead Chapel. Mr. Gange has two reasons for wishing to visit India. First, he has a child in that land; and, secondly, he is, to use his own words, "utterly dead tired." It is more than twenty-one years since he took the oversight of the church at Bristol.

Resignation.—Rev. F. T. Snell, of Guernsey, who is about to leave for America, owing to ill-health.

Calls Accepted.—Mr. W. H. Rowling, of the Baptist College, Manchester, to Hamsterley, near Bishop Auckland.—Rev. S. Jones, of Welshpool, to Farnworth, near Bolton.—Rev. E. Marsh, of Laxfield, to Wellingborough.—Rev. W. J. Staynes, of Portsmouth, to Wester-road, Putney.

METHODIST.

The new Bible Christian chapel at Truscott, near Launceston, has been opened. The site at Four Winds, and the stone required for the work were generously given, and the farmers of the neighbourhood have carted the latter free of cost.

At the quarterly meeting of the committee of the Wesleyan Theological College, Didsbury, it was reported that there are now forty-five students in residence—one of the fourth year, nine of the third year, twenty, second year, and fifteen, first year.

Three Joyful News agents—Messrs. Argents, Cooper, and Bond—are leaving respectively for China and West Africa. The two evangelists who are going to China will join Messrs. Hudson and Tollerton, who went out in November, 1888, and who have adopted Chinese clothing and habits of life. Mr. Bond, who goes to West Africa, will join Mr. Purrock, one of the ablest and most successful of the evangelists.

The seventy-sixth report of the Wesleyan Missionary Society has just been published. The missionaries now number 343, in charge of 1582 chapels and preaching stations, and other agents, such as catechists, interpreters, &c., number 2128. The "unpaid agents," however, number over 4000. The "church members" number over 34,000, and the scholars 63,335. The receipts for the year amounted to £140,623.

The Jubilee of the Queen-street Chapel, Scarborough, has been celebrated by a public meeting, at which Mr. W. S. Lister presided. The chapel was opened for Divine service in 1840, at a cost of over £6000, and since that date £3000 has been spent in the erection of new Sunday-schools and other work. Among the speakers was Mr. Rowntree, M.P., who remarked with pleasure upon the growth of vigour in the younger members of the church, especially in relation to the drink question.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's Friday noon services at Princes Hall, Piccadilly, were resumed on Friday last. Mr. Pearse commences these Bible-readings at twelve o'clock, and Christian workers who have been accustomed to find help at such meetings, alike for soul and service, will be interested to know that Mr. Pearse's subject during the next three months will be the life of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Friday evening services will be taken by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, who lately joined the Mission.

The old Kingswood School, built by John Wesley for the education of the sons of Methodist ministers, and at present used as a reformatory, is to be demolished, the authorities having resolved to erect a building on a site more suited to their needs. They have expressed their willingness to leave the quaint little chapel, with its high pulpit, in which Wesley so often preached, untouched, providing the Wesleyans will take it off their hands. Up to the present they have had no response, so that another of the few remaining relics of this sort will soon be lost.

It is proposed to form a club in connection with the Young Men's Guild of the West London Mission. Rooms will be taken in the neighbourhood of Regent-street, and sleeping accommodation will be provided. Among the possibilities of the future in connection with the Mission is a series of special services in the Haymarket Theatre, and Mr. Nix is said to have his eye on the Pavilion Music Hall. The new number of Advance is edited by Mr. Frank Stephens, Dr. Lunn's late colleague.

The second anniversary of the opening of New Surrey Chapel (Primitive Methodist) was held a few days ago. A most interesting report was given in by Mr. G. Newton, the secretary, showing that the congregation had paid their way during the year, and £150 off the debt. The pastor, Rev. B. Senior, gave an encouraging account of the work, showing that sixty-four new members had been received during the past nine months. He said they were getting hold of the people of the district in a way they had never done before. The entire outlay has been £14,011, and the debt now stands at £6900.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The membership in Regent-square since Rev. John McNeill's settlement has increased from 600 to 800.

The church session of M'Crie-Roxburgh Free Church, Edinburgh—including the pastor, Rev. John Robertson—have for some time felt the desirability of utilising the lady help of the congregation in aggressive Christian work in the district. It has now been agreed to institute a body of lady deaconesses, and steps for their election will be taken at once.

The Women's Missionary Association of the English Presbyterian Church is, for the first time in its history, feeling a financial strain. There is at present a deficiency of £400 in its funds, and unless there is an increase in the contributions for the last quarter of 1890, as compared with the last quarter of 1889, the deficiency at the end of the year will amount to £850.

The congregation at Camden-road, London (Rev. R. M. Thornton's), have celebrated the seventh anniversary of their minister's settlement and the extinction of their building debt. The preachers at the thanksgiving services were Revs. Dr. Donald Fraser and John McNeill; the latter drew together the largest congregation that has ever met within the building. The church premises cost £11,500, and of this the sum of £2000 had been paid off within the past seven years.

Dr. Macgregor (Established Church of Scotland), of Edinburgh, in an address at the annual soirée of Falkirk Church, declared that the Church of Scotland was prepared to share its endowments with the Free Church and the United Presbyterian Church, on one condition: that they were kept for the purpose for which they were given. The State did not give those endowments, and the State had no right to alienate them, so long as they were used for the religious welfare of the nation.

Mr. W. T. Stead, writing in The Echo, says he has discussed with Rev. John McNeill the question of the call the latter has received to the pastorate of Westminster Chapel. He states: "It is very manifest that Mr. McNeill is utterly dissatisfied with his present position, and is determined to move somewhere. As he put it to me, 'If the Lord would take this great longing out of my heart to preach to the multitude, I could settle down, but He does nothing of the kind. I was invited by the Presbytery at Regent-square to repeat in this spiritually destitute Metropolis the work which I had been carrying on for sixteen months with great success in over-churched Edinburgh. I had there a congregation of 3000 people, and I feel that sixteen months has been far too long to keep me waiting in a place that has been too small from the first day.'"

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A week's mission has just been held at Loughgale (Armagh) by the Rev. W. E. Burroughs, of Kingstown. The services were largely attended, and much blessing resulted.

Rev. John Elliott, of Stewartstown, has succeeded in getting a moveable Gospel hall, capable of holding 250 people, erected, and in it he purposes holding evangelistic meetings during the winter in various districts.

A branch of the "Out-and-Out Band" has been established in Dublin under hopeful auspices, and promises to be the means of getting many to take a deeper interest in the subjects of holiness and Christian work.

Rev. Jas. Harpur is doing a splendid work in Mountpottinger, Belfast. On Sabbath night week hundreds were unable to obtain admission to his church, and nearly forty persons professed to have found the Saviour during the service.

The annual Conference of the Y.W.C.A. was held in Dublin last Friday and Saturday. This Association has taken firm root in most of the large towns of Ireland, and is doing much valuable work for the benefit of young women of all classes. There was a large attendance at the Conference.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. H. Crabtree, for nearly forty years a minister in the Leeds district of the Primitive Methodist Connexion.—Mr. George Head, for a long time a devoted worker in the Sunday-school and church of Downs Chapel, Clapton.—Rev. Joseph Jones, for twenty-three years connected with the English Presbyterian Church, at Menai Bridge.—Mr. G. B. Blair, for many years an elder at Grosvenor-square Presbyterian Church, Manchester.—Mr. Henry Maden, J.P., an influential Wesleyan of Bacup.—Mr. Joseph Rose, a prominent member of the Wesleyan Methodist Society at Mosborough.—Mr. William Hunter, for sixteen years a town missionary at Kilmarnock.

LIVERPOOL CENTRAL Y.M.C.A.—The annual inaugural gathering has just been held, and evidenced much prosperity in the numerous social and spiritual departments. Some 2460 young men entered the Institute classes last winter; while the percentage of passes in the Society of Arts and other examinations places the institute second among similar organisations of the country. The annual report shows progress in the spiritual work of the year; while the income had covered working expenses; and the membership roll showed an increase. Mr. Clark Aspinall, City coroner, said the social and religious life of England was largely indebted to such organisations. He strongly advocated personal purity and cultivation on the part of young men of a citizenship which would strengthen the nation, side by side, with loyal service to the King of kings.

SCOTTISH MISSION, BUDAPEST.—Following the idea of the Mission Populaire carried out by Dr. McAll in Paris, and at the same time the special lines of evangelistic work on which we have ourselves been providentially led, we have opened a second hall in one of the crowded thoroughfares of this great city. After all necessary preparation had been made our doors were thrown open on September 5, and we had the happiness of welcoming at once a large assembly. The place was crowded to its utmost capacity. The opening address was delivered by Bishop Charles Szász, of the Hungarian Reformed Church, followed by some words from Pastor Doleschall, of the German Lutheran Congregation. I am greatly indebted to the friends who have aided us in entering on this new enterprise. The expense up to the opening day, including rent for first quarter, amounted to 870 fl. I desire to commend the work to the continued sympathy of the Lord's people. Brethren, pray for us. Andrew Moody

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.—Since its formation, some six or seven years ago, by the Rev. Benjamin Waugh, the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has investigated 539 cases of ill-treatment (these, too, under the first half-year of the new Act, ill-treatment not being a crime before), 1,174 cases of assault, 227 cases of starvation (121 of which ended in the death of the starved child), 1,935 cases of neglect, 153 cases of abandonment, 277 cases of exposure, 552 cases of causing to beg, 47 cases of dangerous performances, 246 cases of immorality (often with injury), and 164 cases of various kinds. In these the welfare of 10,628 children was involved. The Society hopes to extend its operations to other large centres of population as soon as funds permit. A branch has recently been opened at Cheltenham, which has already proved the necessity of its advent. Copies of the annual report can be obtained from the Secretary, 7, Harpur-street, London, W.C.

Appeals.

Summer's Town, S.W.—Appeal is made on behalf of the Mission at Summer's Town, an outlying district between Wandsworth, Wimbledon, and Tooting. The Mission is unsectarian, and accomplishing great good through its various agencies, which are in full working order. Great difficulty is experienced in finding the requisite funds to carry on the work. Contributions will be thankfully acknowledged by Miss Haddon, Naseby, Bedford-hill, Balham.

Mr. Benjamin Bryant, of 27, Windsor-place, Cardiff, writes that his band of workers desire to leave at least one Gospel tract at every house in Cardiff during the coming winter. They are unable to buy all the forty thousand tracts needed, but will give their services in distribution if Christians generally will help in providing tracts or means for their purchase. Mr. Bryant will gladly communicate his plans to those who desire to carry out similar work in other places.

DONATIONS

RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1890.

* Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O.Orders, not by stamps.

* We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss of same.

Scripture Readers' Society FOR IRELAND.

INSTITUTED 1822.

Funds greatly needed to extend the Itinerant work.

The Scripture Readers are placed under carefully selected Superintendents, and not only located in Towns and Cities, but also sent into remote districts where they are generally well received by all denominations.

Irish speaking Readers are sent where required. Sailors in Seaports are visited, and Bethel Services held.

The work is carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy.

Reports and all particulars sent post free on application to Captain JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, Secretary, Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and 9, Paternoster-row, London.

Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Please notice exact title of Society as above.

Mr. F. W. CROSSLEY will Preside.

ALL CHRISTIANS ARE AFFECTIONATELY INVITED.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

THE COMMITTEE are very unwilling to press the claims of this Charity, but every day most painful applications are made for admission, and the thought of refusing a helping hand to any young woman struggling to get out of her miserable life is very distressing, especially in the case of those who have made a first false step downwards. Very sad tales of suffering and wrong are told by these young women, many of them the orphan daughters of parents who moved in a good position, but were left when young, friendless, and wholly unprovided for. We are quite sure if the readers could witness the distress and anguish in many cases of those who apply, it would give them pleasure to aid us in restoring them to positions of usefulness.

It has scarcely ever happened in the experience of the Committee that the mothers rescued have fallen a second time. We are in urgent need of FUNDS, and any help will be most opportune at the present time.

HENRY THOMPSON, Esq., Treasurer, 38, Mincing-lane, E.C.

HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS WEAKNESS.

21, Waterloo Road, New Brighton, Cheshire, 15th September, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in testifying to the great benefit I have received from your Galvanic Band in my case of weakness of the nerves and swelling of the neck. I feel so much stronger in myself in every way, and I shall always recommend your treatment to any one I know to be suffering from this complaint.—Yours truly,

(Mrs.) E. J. MOON.

Messrs. J.L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUSNESS.

West Dulwich, near London, S.E. September 13, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I am very glad to give you a testimonial to the efficacy of your treatment. When I bought your Galvanic Belt I had been suffering for many months from a form of nervousness which rendered my life miserable. I had been under a very good doctor, but found no relief from following his directions. As a matter of fact, from the time I began to wear your Belt I grew better, and within three months all the worse symptoms of my nervousness had disappeared. I thoroughly believe in your treatment, and I attribute my recovery entirely to its efficacy. I do not wish my name published, but you may give it privately to anyone who may desire it.—Yours truly, D. D. P.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

Cærbrook, Castle-road, Newport, Isle of Wight. September 9, 1890.

Dear Sirs,—I have much pleasure in informing you that the Special Combined Band has been of great benefit to me. My nervous system has been strengthened, and I am feeling better in every respect. Through my recommendation two of my friends have obtained your Bands, and are deriving great advantage from the treatment.—Yours faithfully, H. W. HORAN.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. WEAK HEART and NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

23, Linden-grove, Dewsbury-road, Leeds, September 8, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I am very pleased to be able to state that your Galvanic Belt has done me good beyond description, and it is my firm opinion that your treatment has given to me a kind of second life. My case was a very bad one, but now I am able to do a good day's work, and the action of the heart is very much stronger.—Yours very sincerely, B. WALKER.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

CASE at BISHOP'S CASTLE, SALOP—"SAVED FROM AN EARLY GRAVE."

Such are the words of a grateful patient, writing me March 15th of this year.

Mr. R. W. FRANCIS is a Primitive Methodist local preacher, and wrote me the winter before last a full description of his case, having been recommended by a former patient—Mr. S. Leaver, baker, of the same town.

In the previous July he had caught a severe cold, which made him very weak and ill. The doctor stopped the cough for a time, but the strength still declined, the breathing became difficult, palpitations were frequent, with pains in the left side. Cod Liver Oil had helped him a little in checking the gradual loss of flesh, but did not, of course, reach the source of mischief. The medical report was "One lung touched with disease."

By the beginning of last year he writes me:—"I am a great deal better. I am getting a good colour. I am recommending your treatment to all I know."

The patient got well in a short time. I was glad to hear from him (by a letter dated March 15th last) that he has continued so—"I am pleased (he says) to inform you that I am quite strong and perfectly well since I was under you. I was unable to follow my trade, or to do duty as a Primitive Methodist local preacher when appointed to any work; but I have been fully restored through your kind treatment, and under the Divine blessing I have been "Saved from an early grave."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

WORK AMONG THE LOST WOMEN OF ST. GILES' AND AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,—The generous response that was so kindly made to our very urgent appeal in the Spring enabled us to tide over our difficulty at that time, and to meet all necessary expenses.

The summer receipts, however, have been sadly disappointing, several large subscriptions not having come to hand, and we are again in sore straits to find the means to carry on our many-sided and ever increasing work.

We are loth to relinquish any part of the work without making an earnest effort to obtain funds to carry it on in its entirety, and now place ourselves in the hands of our loving Father, knowing that He will clearly guide us in the course we are to take.

Donations will be most thankfully acknowledged if sent to our Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; to our Secretary, Mr. W. WHEATLEY, 29, Brook-street, Holborn, E.C.; or to

Yours sincerely,

GEO. HATTON.

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

By REV. DR. CULROSS,

Author of "Thy First Love," "Behold, I stand at the Door and Knock," &c., &c.

With Chromo-Lithographic Views. Tinted covers, 2s.;
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"We have scarcely ever read a work with greater pleasure and profit than this. The history of the beloved disciple is sketched so truthfully that, while we read the details of his life, we have also a graphic picture of the man. . . . There is a tenderness in the book which insinuates itself into the heart, and a force which sways the judgment. It is fresh as the breath of heaven, and pure as the limpid stream which flows from the hidden spring; it is as fresh and as fragrant as the flowers which deck the earth with beauty, and yet as sound and solid as the granite.

"Some books there are, and when we read them once we have no desire to read them again; but we feel as we read the last page a strong desire to begin the first page, and again enjoy its green pastures and its still waters. . . . We earnestly advise our readers to procure the volume and read it for themselves, and we are sure when they have done so they will thank us for directing them to such a spiritual feast. This book must be known and read and live."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. Isaac Sharp, the veteran minister of the Society of Friends.

The idea seems to exist in some minds that the Church of Christ is divided into Christians and Christian workers: that the majority may simply believe and be saved; while "his servants serve Him and they see his face." In correction of such an error the Apostle unites salvation by grace with the fulfilment of appointed service. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before prepared that we should walk in them." All who are his workmanship are created for good works, and those good works have been before prepared for them.

In Andrew Murray's admirable book, "With Christ in the School of Prayer," it is well said: "Every believer is a labourer; not one of God's children who has not been redeemed for service, and has not his work waiting. It must be our prayer that the Lord would so fill all his people with the spirit of devotion, that not one may be found standing idle in the vineyard. There is no Sunday-school or district-visiting, no Bible-reading or rescue work, where God is not able and ready to provide. It may take time and importunity, but the command of Christ to ask the Lord of the harvest is the pledge that the prayer will be heard: 'I say unto you, He will arise and give him as many as he needeth.'"

The sermon of the Bishop of Ripon at the Church Congress has awakened a deserved attention. It enlarged on a delicate but anxious subject with firmness and wisdom. It alluded to a whispered rumour that the forthcoming census would reveal a step backward in the progressive rate of the increase of the population. If family obligations, deemed honourable by our forefathers, had in any measure come to be considered as things to be avoided, and if responsibilities which made kingdoms strong, and which brought on them the benediction of God, had come to be evaded, it would be found that the diminution of population meant the weakness and decay of nations.

The Congregationalists and Baptists have closed their autumnal Sessions in Swansea and Cardiff. They had this feature in common—a deep sense of the intensity of modern life. Perhaps among the former the practical element was a little too much diffused. This danger has pressed on all these October assemblies. So many questions seem to demand attention as to leave no adequate time for useful discussion, and men are constrained into silence who might throw much light upon them. About the social problems of the day there is a great movement of thought, and with many Churches the supreme desideratum is a wise guidance. Voices of wisdom might be heard if there were an ampler opportunity.

The devotional element was very prominent at the Cardiff meetings of the Baptists. Well was it said by Rev. J. R. Wood that prayer should, above all things, go up just now that God would quicken within ministers and delegates old beliefs, and fill them with new life. Of like import was the opening sermon by Rev. H. Arnold Thomas from the words, "He cometh to his disciples, and findeth them asleep." The preacher—a Congregationalist—remarked in the course of his sermon that he had received that morning a letter telling him that a number of men in the North of England had engaged in prayer until one o'clock in the morning, crying to the Lord that the London Missionary Society would send 100 missionaries to China.

The missionary enterprise was, as usual, a prominent part of the Baptist meetings, and a promising band of messengers to the heathen were commended to God. It is pleasant to read of the welcome accorded to Mr. A. H. Baynes after his visit to India, and of the enthusiasm with which the name of Mr. Spurgeon was received. We would fain hope that the new theology advocates are either finding out their weakness, or are retiring into the background, and that the immutable truth and the old spirit of exclusive dependence upon the Holy Ghost are resuming ascendency.

In his farewell address to the Diocesan Conference the Bishop of Winchester uttered a timely warning that if the Church of England is to stand it must be upon those primitive principles to which she returned at the Reformation, that if there is corruption in her it can only be thrown off by a return to these principles, and that if she departed from them her witness would be worthless. That there is corruption, and that of a grievous kind, within her borders, is only too evident. During the last fifty years a conspiracy has been in progress to introduce practices, doctrines, and discipline, which were cast out at the Reformation.

But it may well be pointed out that the influence and sympathy of too many of Bishop Harold Browne's episcopal colleagues have been on the side of the traitors in the camp. This same Ritualistic section of the Church are fond of appealing to primitive custom; they would, therefore, do well to take heed to the Bishop's further caution that "the primitive fathers always appealed to an antiquity more primitive than their own." It is not in the fourth or third century that true primitive practice is to be found; long before that period there was a large fungus-growth of error and heresy. The search must be carried back to the first century, to Apostolic times; and where are the principles and practice of these times to be found but in the written Word of God?

We have given in another column the substance of a statement which emanates from those who formed the minority in the discussion of the Dods and Bruce case in the last General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland. A contemporary stigmatises it as "Raising the Fiery Cross Again." To us it seems that this is an uncandid and unworthy attempt to cry down the protest of honest men against those who have made engagements from which they have flagrantly departed. The same paper says:—

> Evidently Mr. Howie and his friends do not know when they are beaten....While the ensuing controversy must be lamented by the true friends of the Church as tending to divert the energy of its members into an unprofitable channel, it may yet be welcomed for the testimony it will afford as to the extent to which the Church is permeated by the wider views of the times.

Evidently Elijah did not know when he was beaten, and when overwhelming testimony was afforded as to the extent to which Israel was permeated by the wider views of the times, he was farthest from giving up the controversy. He stood alone, but the God who answereth by fire proved Himself to be God, and the professors of the wider views of the times were exterminated in one day, when He turned his people's hearts back again. Truth does not change with the views of the times, and "the Lord will vindicate his people and repent Himself for his servants, when He seeth that their power is gone, and that there is none remaining."

The Independent, writes a revered Congregational minister, can in its new form be hardly considered "the organ" of the Congregationalists. Very many of the ministers of the denomination, and a vast body of its church members will hesitate to adopt an editorial note in the issue of the 10th inst. Referring to such letters and expressions of welcome as the new journal has received from those it calls "the leaders of sister denominations," it thus speaks of the following:—

> Rev. Dr. Bruce, Professor of the Free Church College at Glasgow, and, along with Rev. Dr. Marcus Dods, leader of the free Free Church of Scotland.

Two papers on the weakness of Congregationalism appear in The Nineteenth Century of the month. The first, by Mr. Paul Neuman, is from a Nonconformist connected for more than twenty years with a Congregational Church. The great defect of office-bearers, as he contends, is a calculating commercial spirit, which, having spent large sums on beautiful buildings, and incurred heavy expenses on music, &c., is occupied too much in gauging success by monetary returns. Preaching power is looked upon as a commodity of the market to be estimated by the price paid for it. This cannot be accepted as generally true; but, if justified in specific cases, it ought seriously to be laid to heart.

The second paper, by Rev. T. H. Darlow, a Liverpool Congregational pastor, advocates no less than a complete revolution in churches. He would remedy the defects pointed out by Mr. Neuman by substituting, instead of deacons, representatives of "a "mass meeting," the appointment of a new minister by a specially elected committee, and a registration of communicants as church members instead of requiring evidences of conversion. Upon this let it be said that the Congregational principle, wherever found, professes to be the embodiment of Apostolic Christianity, and if a loss of spirituality makes a change necessary, the remedy may be worse than the disease.

Rome not only patronises the lottery, but apologises for the vices of betting and gambling. Father Kerslake, of Galashiels, recently denounced from his pulpit the conduct of some Presbyterian ministers who had been giving a public warning against gambling. He is reported to have said:—

> Betting was perfectly lawful, as it was contrary to no known law of God, provided due provision was made for the equality of chance. When the amount staked was small, and not hurtful to the bettor or his dependents, there was nothing in the moral law to condemn it. A bookmaker could live a Christian life and save his soul as well as any of them.

Thus Rome tramples upon principles of honesty as philosophically propounded and legally established. She does more: covetousness lurks at the root of betting and gambling; so, when Rome winks at these practices, she condones the infringement of God's law.

Mr. Lanin's article in the current number of The Fortnightly Review, under the heading of "The Jews in Russia," gives a piteous description of the condition of the chosen people under the Czar, their position being summed up as literally unendurable:—

> Scoffed at, terrorised, and robbed by every petty official with that certain impunity which leads to crime, insulted, beaten, and kept in constant fear of violence by a vile rabble whom they dare not irritate by even a slight success in business or trade...education and instruction denied them, the learned professions closed to them...their personal liberty now at last completely taken from them, their religion proscribed, Russian Jews may well defy their persecutors to frame any further laws calculated to make their position worse than it is.

It is interesting to take in connection with Mr. Lanin's powerful paper one in the Russian Messenger, from the pen of M. Velitsyn, who writes from an official point of view. The paper gives an account of the Stundists, who have recently been described in our columns, and the writer concludes with an appeal for a vigorous State persecution of these people on the ground that, being Dissenters, they must necessarily be enemies of the State:—

> In Russia every question of religious propaganda becomes immediately a State question. The Russian who abjures orthodoxy is no longer a Russian, he is not only an irreconcilable enemy of Orthodoxy, but he is a traitor to his own native country, to his own people...The arms that must be used against Stundism are not religious, but drastically administrative.

Such an utterance as this throws a keen light upon the persecution of the Jews.

So many railway accidents occur directly or indirectly through intemperance, we could wish that the railway companies in these islands would follow the example set them by a number of similar companies in America, who, according to our contemporary, The British Medical Journal, have adopted special rules to secure sobriety on the part of their servants, "believing this to be the best guarantee against accidents." Fifty-four companies insist upon total abstinence while on duty, and twenty total abstinence "on or off duty," whilst one company will not engage any but total abstainers.

The Greatest Thing in the World.

There are very few books which have been more commended and condemned than Professor Drummond's "Greatest Thing in the World." Its admirers have been enthusiastic in their expressions of praise; while others have as heartily denounced it as unscriptural and dangerous. Some of its detractors are apparently influenced more by the character of what the author has previously written than by what this book contains. The weight of Professor Drummond's influence has not always been thrown upon the side of what is known as evangelical truth; and this fact may offer some excuse for those who are not without prejudice in their criticisms of this book. An author cannot afford to ignore influence; and if he writes as a servant of Christ, whose aim is not simply success, but usefulness, he will not wish to ignore it. The confidence or distrust he has won must and ought to tell in favour of or against all he does.

That this work is an exceedingly able and practical exposition of Paul's wonderful chapter on love (1 Cor. xiii.), its severest critics will admit. Their condemnation is based rather upon what the book omits, than on what it says. Sins of omission may be as serious in a book as in a life. To leave unsaid what ought to be said is as grave a fault as to leave undone what ought to be done. It is the absence of any clear evangelical teaching as to how love is to be obtained which is the main fault of the book.

To this it may be objected that the chapter which it expounds contains no such evangelical teaching; and that, therefore, the complaint may, with equal force, be urged against that. But in reply to this objection three things must be noted:—(1) That 1 Cor. xiii. is only part of a letter, and is to be read in connection with what precedes and follows. If Christ, as our Representative, our Redemption, and our Atonement, and, therefore, the ground of our faith, is not in this chapter, it is clearly declared in other parts of the letter of which this chapter is but a portion (see chapters i., vi., xv.). (2) That the whole letter was addressed to the Corinthian Church—composed of believers in Jesus Christ. This book has already gone through many editions and has found its way into the hands of many who are unsaved. To these its omissions are likely to have misleading consequences. And (3) that the author does attempt to explain how this love is to be obtained, and yet fails to present what we deem to be the evangelical method. No doubt he, and many of his admirers, will say that our idea of the Gospel is not correct, but we desire to submit it to the test of the Word of God.

It is true that to those who have begun the Christian life the practice of loving will continually increase the capacity to love. This could not be better said than Professor Drummond has said it (pages 40-42); and we gladly recognise its importance, and would give it emphasis.

But what of those of whom Jesus would say, "I know you that ye have not the love of God in you"? (John vi. 42). Surely these require different treatment. The spiritually living and the spiritually dead are not equally able to fulfil the same conditions. If love is one of the expressions of spiritual life it is vain to urge a man who does not possess the life to begin to practise the love. We do not love in order to obtain life; we obtain life in order to love. Life first, then its outward manifestation—this is the true order.

Of those who are thus spiritually dead the Professor does say something. He declares, "Except such a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven" (p. 34). This is so far good; it recognises that a disposition like that of the elder brother is unfit for heaven. Yes, but what of the guilt of it? Jesus represents sin as not only injurious to the sinner, but as guilt in the sight of God. And all Scripture says, with an emphasis that cannot be mistaken, that guilt required atonement as the basis of righteous forgiveness. Where does Professor Drummond's book say anything of this? Pardon for the guilt of not loving; the death of Christ as the manifestation of God's righteous judgment against sin, and as therefore the ground upon which God can be "just and yet the justifier of the ungodly"—these are matters on which the author says nothing. The omission is a serious one.

We think it is more serious because of the Professor's references to the love of God, and to its manifestation in the Great Sacrifice, on pp. 44, 45. Very skilfully he seems to avoid saying anything calculated to give peace to a conscience burdened with the guilt of not loving. That the cross was the highest manifestation of God's love is undoubtedly true; but it was this, not because Christ died as a martyr, nor as a mere victim of human wickedness and cruelty, but because He there, as a substitute, bore the sins of men, and received in his own person the penalty due to sinners. A guilty conscience readily lays hold upon such a truth as this, and finds in it the first motive to love. And it is in connection with his faith in this work of Christ for him that the Holy Ghost does his work in him, "shedding abroad the love of God" (Rom. v. 5), which becomes in him the power with which he loves others.

The book appears to us to be unscriptural because it attempts to build up Christian character out of an un-Christian material, and fails to distinguish between a love which is possible to human nature and that love which is begotten of God's love to us.

In this author's popular book "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" there is a chapter on Classification, which shows the similarity in outward appearance between a crystal and an organism, and yet that the two are separated by the gulf which divides death from life. We fear that the tendency of this book will be to make those who are represented by the dead crystal to believe themselves to be the living organism. The rich young ruler who thought himself justified in saying, "All these have I kept from my youth up," would hardly be led by this book to suppose that the all-important thing was lacking. There are certain natural qualities which so closely resemble the characteristics of love here described that it is sadly possible to mistake the one for the other. This, in our judgment, constitutes a vital and fatal objection to this able and fascinating address.

[The above has been in type several weeks, and held over through the pressure of other matter. We have since received a much more drastic treatment of the subject from the pen of General Sir Robert Phayre, entitled Foundation of Rock or Sand—Which? 3d. W. Kensit.]

The Dancing of our Day.

Some remarks by a dignitary of the Church of England at a recent meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society on the subject of dancing have brought that much-discussed matter to the front in some circles. For, in spite of all that has been written by eminent Christians, it is still felt to be a very difficult question to settle by many people, and one on which there is a wide divergence of opinion even amongst those who are very true and earnest in their life for Christ.

Look for a moment at what is meant by "dancing" as we talk about it now, at the utter misappropriation of the word when taken with its modern associations. When Miriam chanted her song of deliverance, she took a timbrel in her hand, and "all the women went out after her with timbrels and dancing." Even so did the daughter of Jephthah come forth "with dances" to greet her victorious father; and the women of Israel trooped forth to welcome Saul and David "with singing and dancing, with joy and instruments of music." It was a sacred dance that David "danced with all his might before the Lord" as he brought home the Ark to Jerusalem. And we read, too, of dances that God has in store for his redeemed; for "when He that scattered Israel" doth "gather him" once more, and "they shall come and sing in the heights of Zion," "then," the prophet Jeremiah adds, "shall the virgin rejoice in the dance...and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord."

What can we find akin to this dancing in the waltzes and galops of the modern ballroom? Nothing whatever. That ancient dancing is not what we need to fight against to-day; it is that into which dancing has degenerated, and which may be more aptly called "immodest romping," full of deadly peril to many a man and woman in all classes of life. The waltz is the typical and favourite dance of our times, a movement which is introduced wherever possible and forms the largest part of every programme, many people caring only to waltz. It requires little or no skill; and it is not beautiful or elegant to witness. Then

WHEREIN LIES ITS GREAT CHARM?

In the very fact that it brings a man and woman into close and—as many believe—dangerous proximity to one another, a position never tolerated at any other time, and which no pure woman would dream of permitting under other circumstances. But it has become a matter of fashion and custom in dancing, and so is allowed without thought. The whole atmosphere tells of the danger and temptations with which it is fraught. Listen to the conversation of those who are looking on! A lady who had taken her daughters to a select ball, chanced to overhear a talk between two men who were standing near on the figures and appearance of her own girls. Horror-stricken, she listened to the coarse jests and flippant remarks, and from that moment she vowed never again to permit her children, or any girl over whom she had influence, to be the unwitting cause of such degrading conversation.

Dancing is not loved for its own sake now, but for the very thing which makes it evil. If this were not so, why should dancers have such an avowed antipathy to partners of their own sex? The physical exercise is just the same, and the surroundings may be just as beautiful, and yet—— "Of course we shall not go," said some girls of a breaking-up party at a school; "there are no men asked to the dance." Does not this betray the real nature of the interest which underlies this so-called "innocent amusement"?

Surely when looked at thus carefully and seen in its true colours as a corrupt, degenerate remnant of an art now almost lost, there can be no question as to how pure, right-minded men and women must view the subject of dancing. People do not know, and do not think. Many a noble, honourable girl would never dance again if once she realised that for the sake of her own, perhaps, innocent pleasure, she is adding one more to the many difficulties which beset young men on every hand to leading chaste and upright lives.

But, perhaps, the saddest phase of all in regard to the dancing of the present day is when we come to think of it as an amusement for our poorer brothers and sisters. It is thus that it was spoken of at the G.F.S. meeting already alluded to, and the chairman expressed his approval of schemes for getting up dances in connection with that particular work. But, if dancing is full of danger in the ballrooms of the rich, what must it be when conducted in the Assembly Rooms of the town (generally attached to a public-house)? While we have our drawing-rooms, in which women at least are sheltered and protected, our servants, shop assistants, and others, must seek their pleasure under circumstances which expose them to terrible temptations, (and often in places closely associated with the sale of intoxicating drinks.) In many towns in the South of England dances of this sort are much on the increase; servants spend their earnings on ball dresses; girls from shops go; and the consequences are only too well known by those who are engaged in Christian work in such towns. Extravagant expenditure and inordinate love of dress are only small evils as compared with the amount of immorality resulting from these practices. It could not be otherwise. Rich and poor, educated and unlettered, alike have the same weak human nature, responding easily to temptation in every form, but especially when it is hidden beneath much that is attractive and fascinating.

Let us be plainer and more honest in our mode of dealing with the subject, and have better reasons to give to those we try to influence. Instead of forbidding our children to dance in an arbitrary manner, merely because it is "worldly," let us explain, gently but faithfully, as soon as possible, to the girls that it is immodest and unwomanly; and to the boys, that it is an amusement which often leads to a great lack in deference and chivalry towards the women they are born to defend and respect. Let us tell them the history of dancing as it once was, and of what it has now become, so that they may see for themselves that there is some reason and sense in our wish that they should never dance. Ignorance is not innocence, and it is better far to fortify the young with true forcible arguments against that which they will often hear praised and admired. To nothing more strongly than to dancing does the Apostle's exhortation to Christians apply, "Come out, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." But we must remember that to many around it seems a very beautiful thing, and our very first task will be to show wherein its evil lies.

We often hear the argument "To the pure all things are pure." "I can dance without any of the dangers you suggest; to me it is no temptation." Granted that there are some natures who, because of a certain peculiar cast of temperament, ride safely through much that is fatal to others; it must be remembered by such that in dancing it is very specially true that "No man liveth to himself," and if safe for a particular individual, it may be peril to his or her partner. Even while we may hold ourselves secure, let us take care, lest by putting an occasion to fall in our brother's way, we come within the woe pronounced by the Saviour against "that man by whom the offence cometh."

We live in an evil age, all around us is the deadly poison, in books, amusements, magazines, newspapers; and if we care for the welfare of our fellow creatures, or the good of our country, most of all for the honour and glory of the Lord Jesus, we must throw every single grain of influence we possess on to the side of purity and virtue.

Strain upward, upward still,
Even to the heavenly source of purity!
Brave hearts, bear on and suffer. Strike for right,
Strong arms, and hew down wrong! The world hath need
Of all of you—the sensual, wrongful, world!

"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself."

. . . He said: "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide."

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA.

On Sunday evening, September 28, the service in St. Michael's Parish Church, Edinburgh, took a missionary form, to bid farewell to Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, Secretary of the Mission to Lepers in India, and an elder of the church, who was about to start on a six months' tour, to visit the lepers and leper asylums of India and Burmah.

Rev. Geo. Wilson spoke touchingly of the work which the Mission to Lepers in India seeks to do. "We want," he said, "to stamp out leprosy, but not the leper; and we could keep you here till midnight giving you deeply interesting details of the work of God among these our suffering brethren." Mr. Bailey gave a few facts relative to the blessing the Lord has vouchsafed to the Mission since its commencement sixteen years ago. As an instance of the total loss of caste which the poor leper sustains, he told how once "a man full of leprosy" sat at his feet, and looking up into his face with a piteous expression, exclaimed, "Ah, Sahib, I was a Brahman, now I am nothing." "Six months later," added Mr. Bailey, "I had the joy of seeing him welcomed into the visible Church of Christ." He gave also an account of the happy death of a Christian leper, who had, at his baptizm taken the name of Christàràm (rest in Christ). After bidding farewell to wife and children, from whom his disease had for some time separated him, he called his fellow sufferers around his bed, and prayed with them; he then asked to drink water from the hand of each as a token that there was no ill-feeling between them, and begged that if he had at any time offended any of them, they would forgive him. He again prayed with them, and then entered into the joy of his Lord. Mr. Bailey concluded his address by reading the translation of a hymn composed by this man, every verse of which ends with "Oh my soul, do not despise the love of Jesus."

The last speaker was Rev. W. Stevenson, Sec. Free Church Ladies' Association. When a missionary in India, he had had some lepers attached to his congregation, and therefore he fully realised the value and importance of the work of the Society. He told the beautiful legend of St. Christopher, who lovingly took a leper, not only into his house, but laid him in his bed, and was about, in answer to the leper's request, to take him into his very arms, when lo! the leper was gone, and St. Christopher found himself pressed to the heart of his Lord. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

On Wednesday, October 1, at the monthly meeting for praise and prayer, held in the Coalmen's Mission Hall, several friends commended Mr. Bailey to the care and blessing of God, remembering at the same time Rev. E. Guildford, C.M.S., who is shortly leaving home and family to return to his work at Tarn Taran, Punjab, where there is a large leper settlement, and where he hopes soon to establish a Home for the children as yet untainted by the fell disease. During Mr. Bailey's absence all communications will receive attention if addressed as usual to him at 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

THE WORD AS LIGHT.—John i. 4-13.

It is not for us to attempt to celebrate the Praise of Light. What a wonderful conception it was by the mind of God! How delicate the loom of that creative skill on which it is constructed day by day! And how complete an argument for the divine workmanship is afforded by the adaptation between the element of Light and the crystalline gate of the eye by which it enters man's soul (Luke xi. 34-36).

Themes like these rather become such as our great blind bard, whose loss of sight made him more sensible to the value of that which he had lost, and whose lofty genius could alone find terms to describe its worth. Or, better still, light might well be the subject of a sonnet by that angel minstrel who composed the majestic Psalm of Creation which is perpetually sung before the throne (Rev. iv. 11). But neither could proceed long with his task without rising from the material substance (for ethereal as light seems to be to our dull sense, it is still material), to that glorious Being who made it as a parable and emblem of his Divine nature, for "God is Light, and in Him is no darkness at all" (1 John i. 5).

But the glory of the Father's nature is of such insupportable splendour that it would be impossible for any creature that He has made to behold and enjoy it; and it is very consolatory to be told in the opening verses of the Epistle to the Hebrews that our Lord Jesus is "the effulgence (or beam) of his glory" (Heb. i. 3, R.V.) The human eye could not bear the full splendour of the sun's heart or surface of golden cloud, but it can bear the far-travelled and diluted ray; so, though we could not bear to behold the nature of God in its direct and original manifestation, we can behold his glory in the face of Jesus Christ (2 Cor. iv. 6). And so it is that we hail thankfully and adoringly the announcement of this paragraph that the Word is the Light.

I. The Characteristics of the Light.—Light is pure.—It is so pure that evil cannot stain or impurity defile it. It will pass through a foetid and poisonous atmosphere without contracting taint, or carrying a germ of poison with it, as the wind might, on issuing forth to pursue its ministries of mercy beyond. So pure was our blessed Lord. Evil fled abashed before Him. He gauged the power of temptation, not by yielding in a hair's breadth, but by resisting and overcoming it. And when He died, after thirty-three years' close contact with men, his spirit was as absolutely stainless as when He was born of a pure virgin. And the instant effect of his life within our hearts will be to kindle a purity as sweet and chaste and unearthly as his own.

Light is gentle.—With each dawn its tides revisit us after having traversed the abyss with inconceivable speed, but its wavelets break so gently that they fail to shake the dewdrop from its blade of grass or the trembling petal from the overblown rose. Even the gossamer of the spider's web does not quiver as the sunbeams trike it. And how apt a symbol is here of that gentle goodness which made the shepherd-boy great, which leads the flock into pastures of tender grass, and fans with anxious care the dull sparkle of smoking flax. And when his love is shed abroad in our hearts, it begets a corresponding gentleness in judgment, speech, and behaviour. All true Christians are gentle folk. "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy" (James iii. 17).

Light is all-pervasive.—It kindles a line of watch-fires on the pinnacles of an Alpine range, but it does not neglect the hill-slopes up which the plovers follow its last retreating beams. It gilds the golden roofs of the palace, but it glides through prison-bars to sparkle in the tear-drops of the repentant prodigal. It lights the good man to his work, and the bad man to his home after the unholy revels of the night. Nor is it otherwise with the lovingkindness of Christ, which misses none in its daily ministry, however poor, and sad, and lonely; which includes the evil and the good, the just and the unjust; which "lighteth every man that cometh into the world." And it is thus with those in whom his life repeats itself. They, too, are said to be "without partiality." Their lives resemble the sun and rain (Matt. v. 45).

Light reveals.—It revealed to Jacob the deception practised on him by Laban under the cover of darkness. It revealed to the host of Midian the meagre force before which it had fled panic-stricken, misled by the noise of the crashing pitchers and the flashing of 300 lights. In darkness the traveller lies down to spend the night beneath the open sky, in terror lest he may stray to the brink of the ravine; but the morning, with rosy finger, reveals that he has been sleeping within a stone's cast of his home. So does Christ reveal. He is the light of all our seeing. He not only lights up our inner sight, but He casts a light on God, and providence, and truth, and the mysteries of redemption, which, apart from Him, notwithstanding all our intelligence, had been obscure and unknown. In his light we see light. Light is whatsoever doth make manifest. Let us lift up our souls unto Him who is light, so that we may be filled and saturated with his nature and being, and made to glow with it in this dark world; just as I have seen a certain kind of diamond, which, after having been held up for some short period in sunlight, has continued to sparkle like a star when carried thence into a darkened chamber. "We all, with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed (i.e., transfigured, it is the same Greek word as in Matt. xvii. 2), into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit" (2 Cor. iii. 18).

II. The Ministry of the Light.—The Word was the Light of unfallen man in Paradise.—In the glades of Eden two trees were planted; the one the tree of life, the other of the knowledge of good and evil. It is impossible not to see in these a lively representation of Him who is Life and Light, and who, from the first, must have been the organ and channel of Divine communication to mankind.

It was in the person of the Son that the ever-blessed God walked with our first parents in the cool of the day, conversed with them, uttered the memorable prohibition, and sought them in their fall, and, with sad prevision of all that it must cost, foretold the ultimate triumph of the woman's Seed. Even then He rejoiced in the habitable part of the earth, and his delights were with the sons of men. Even then He was the Light of man's moral nature, teaching him all he knew, and prepared to lead him on to know the deep things which lay concealed as a landscape under a morning haze. Even then the Son had commenced his favourite ministry of manifesting the Name of his Father (Matt. xi. 27; John xvii. 26).

The Word was Light in the World amid the long dark ages which preceded the Incarnation.—"The Light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehended it not." There are two methods by which darkness is produced. The one by absence of light; the other by loss of sight. It is dark when the sun sets and primæval darkness resumes for a brief parenthesis its ancient sway. But it is also dark when the eye is blind; and the darkness mentioned here is not the first but the second.

There has never been an age in which the Divine Light has not shone over our world. Not Gospel light, not the light of revelation, not light as we have it, but still, Light. And whatever light there was was due to the presence and working of the Lord Jesus. He shone in the good He did, giving rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, and in the food and gladness with which He filled men's hearts, so that He left not himself without witness (Acts xiv. 17). He shone in the clear testimony given since the creation through the works of nature to the everlasting power and divinity of God (Rom. i. 20). He shone in the intuitions of truth, which we call conscience, and which are his voice in the human breast, and are so evidently referred to here as the true light, lightening every man coming into the world (Rom. ii. 14). He shone also in those great movements towards righteousness, which seem to have swept from time to time over the heathen world, and of which such names as Zoroaster, Confucius, Buddha, are the echoes and symbols. Whatever of truth there was in any of these must have been due to Him. It was of the heathen that the Apostle spoke when he said: "That which may be known of God is manifest in them, for God manifested it unto them" (Rom. i. 19).

But the light shone amid blind and darkened hearts, which could not comprehend it. Though men knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful; and, as the result, "they became vain in their reasonings, and their senseless heart was darkened" (Rom. i. 21). Since they would not believe, the god of this world was permitted to blind their eyes (2 Cor. iv. 4).

It is characteristic of this Gospel, and it well befits its theme, that so much space is given to the story of the man born blind (ix.), for such is really the condition of the race, and it is significant that that story is prefaced by the announcement so constantly reiterated by the Lord, "I am the light of the world" (ix. 5; see also viii. 12, xii. 35, 46). A family born blind; a race stricken with blindness, as Saul was, and groping for someone to lead it by the hand; a vault, like that in which the dead are buried, around which the sunlight plays, whilst not one beam can enter; such is a picture of our race. "The light shineth in darkness."

The Word was the Light of the chosen people.—Throughout their history God sent them prophets, rising up early and sending them, that they might bear witness to the coming Light. They were not that Light, but they came to bear witness to it (8), just as the moon and planets bear witness to the sun while it is absent, though every moment is bringing him nearer to close their reign. Of these John the Baptist is here cited as the greatest and last.

We need not recapitulate their names—the evangelical Isaiah, the plaintive Jeremiah, the seraphic Ezekiel, the abrupt Habakkuk, Amos the herdman, and Haggai the priest. They are not all mentioned here, but are summed up in the greatest of all, John the Baptist, than whom no greater prophet had been born of woman until the Kingdom of God. All these were lights, John was "a burning and shining lamp"; but their light was not their own, it was derived from Him to whom they all bore witness. They spake of Him. The testimony of Jesus was the spirit of prophecy. Overtopping other men in the grandeur of their personal character, and by the gift of the Spirit of Inspiration, they saw the day of Jesus, as mountain-peaks first catch sight of the rising sun, and they declared to the world of men below what glory was on the way.

What a new interest would come into our reading of the Old Testament Scriptures, if we always remembered that they testify of Jesus, and glisten with light caught by anticipation from his life; and if we sought to discover what the Master meant when, beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" (Luke xxiv. 27).

As every dewdrop on the morning meadow glistens with the sunlight, each of them reflecting the whole sun, so do the paragraphs of the prophets glisten with the presence of Jesus. They are beautiful in his beauty, strong in his strength, true in his truth. The lips may be those of man, the voice that of a prophet, but through all the Word of God speaks and the true Light shines. In the pages of the prophets the quick ear of love detects the accents of Him who spake as never man spake. Indeed, we are told expressly that the Spirit of Christ was in the prophets announcing that Gospel which is now preached throughout the world (1 Pet. i. 12).

Finally, the Light became incarnate.—Too bright to be beheld, the Ligh God curtained Himself in human flesh, as the face of Moses beneath his veil, or the Shekinah beneath the folds of the tabernacle. Such is the direct force of the word translated dwelt in ver. 14. It might be better rendered tabernacled. But of this more afterwards.

And it is not possible to do more than take one brief glance at that bright world which awaits us, when, in the ages of eternity, our blessed Lord will be still the everlasting Light. For it is written that the heavenly city will not need sun nor moon to shine in it, because the Lamb is the light thereof (Rev. xxi. 23). And so, from the first creation of man till the new creation, from the garden of innocence to the city of matured and tested holiness, from the origin of the race in its lonely and single representative to the untold myriads of his progeny who shall stand in the unsullied purity of robes washed white, always and everywhere, the Word of God is the Light of men, the true light, that is the archetypal light, of which all other lights are types and illustrations.

III.—The Reception of the Light.—(1) Before his incarnation "He was in the world." In every spring, in every sunbeam, in every God-breathed thought, in every providence; walking up and down the aisles of his own temple; brooding over the teeming myriads of mankind. In Him they lived and moved and had their being. He was not an absentee from his own creation. In Him all things consisted and were maintained (Acts xvii. 28; Col. i. 17).

"And the world was made by Him." Mark this touching repetition of the world, we shall often meet with it again. It is used repeatedly, as when a bereaved parent, brooding over the sin or misfortune of some beloved child, repeats his name again and again. "O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son." And see how the Holy Spirit emphasises the fact that our Lord was the organ through whom creation was wrought.

"And the world knew Him not." As a man might build a splendid mansion—frescoes on its walls, fountains splashing in marble wells, luxuriant furniture, exquisitely planned grounds—and give it in trust for the sick or destitute, and go away for years; and on returning be denied admittance, or watched as an intruder, until, touching some secret spring, he showed such knowledge and power as to compel recognition of his claims.

It was a sorrowful confession, extorted from our dear Lord, by all his experiences, both before and after his incarnation—"the world hath not known Thee." And it is confirmed by the Holy Ghost when He says, in the wisdom of God, "the world by wisdom knew not God." Alas! for the poor world, vaunting its science and its pride, but not knowing that glorious Being who was in it from the first.

(2) At his Incarnation.—"He came unto his own, and his own received Him not." Throughout the Old Testament the Jews are spoken of as God's peculiar treasure, but here they are described as Christ's, because Christ is God. They were his by the calling of Abram, by the covenant of circumcision, by the passage of the Red Sea, by the desert discipline, by the education of history; but when He came to them, they cried, "We will not have this man to reign over us."

"They received Him not." This is a note which we shall hear again, but in the meanwhile, the word seems carefully chosen to suggest that it was not a case of ignorance, but of wilfulness. They knew, or might have known, who He was, but they deliberately refused to enquire into his credentials, and they shut the door resolutely in his face. And this is why they are a nation of weary-footed wanderers, bronzed by the sun of every clime, having everywhere a recognition, but nowhere a home.

(3) Since the Incarnation.—There has been no longer a dealing with nations, but with individuals. Many have received Him, rising above the general indifference around. Mary in the highlands of Nazareth, Elisabeth in the hill-country of Judæa, Simeon in the temple, Hannah the prophetess and Zachariah the priest, are representatives of untold multitndes beside. And to as many as have thus received Him he has given the right to become the sons of God.

Stepping across the humble threshold of their hearts, He has suddenly thrown aside the garments of his great humility, which He had worn as a disguise and test. Then, rising in the full stature of his Divine Manhood, He has taken from out his skirts a parchment patent of sonship and heirship, and handing it to the recipient and astonished spirit has declared that from henceforth it may dare to reckon itself, without presumption, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of Heaven.

And for lineage, it is revealed that all such may trace their descent past earthly parentage—"blood," past natural instinct or desire—"the will of the flesh," past human volition—"the will of man," to the thought, and purpose, and grace of the Eternal Father, to whom be glory for ever and ever.

LIVERPOOL CITY MISSION.

It is with feelings of gratitude I send you this record of God's goodness in connection with the work of the Liverpool City Mission. It is not so long ago that we were labouring under discouragement, and for want of funds the number of the missionaries was getting less, until we had reached as low as nineteen. By the end of last year the number increased to twenty-five. We then asked God for thirty, and by July that number was given, and now we are prepared to engage another.

About two years ago we had nine mission halls, now we have twenty, all self-supporting save two, and several of these are crowded. The fruit gathered, has been plentiful, continually cheering the hearts of the workers. Many who for years neglected God, wife, and family are now clothed and in their right mind; houses which were furnitureless are now tidy and homelike; the number of drunkards—men and women—who have been converted, has been most cheering.

We have never seen the Lord's hand more in our open-air work than this season, notwithstanding the wet summer, for the attendance has been larger, and for the last thirty years we have not had so many meetings in one season.

Much united prayer has been offered. Many meetings for the missionaries only have been held for prayer alone, no address of any kind being given. Often we did not rise from our knees till the meetings were finished, now we are reaping. To God be the glory, for "He hath done all things well."

J. Barnabas Bain, Superintendent.

HOW THE ZENANA MISSIONS BEGAN is a penny booklet which may be had from Mrs. Armstrong, 92, Springfield-road, Brighton, sold for the benefit of work in Burmah. It graphically describes Mrs. Sales' experience in overcoming the obstacles which in 1850 shut out Indian women from the Gospel, and shows that her example has, happily, been so widely followed that now the difficulty is to get a sufficient number of ladies able and willing to enter open doors.

THE Y.M.C.A. AND POPULAR MINISTERS.—On Sunday afternoon next, 12th inst., a special address to young men will be given at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., at half past three o'clock, by Rev. John McNeill. The meeting will be rendered additionally interesting by the presence of three members of the original Jubilee Singers. On succeeding Sundays, amongst others, are Revs. E. A. Stuart, M.A. (St. James's, Holloway), Dr. Monro Gibson, J. E. Wakerley (St. John's-square), and A. Boyd Carpenter. The Rev. F. B. Meyer has resumed his Saturday afternoon Bible-readings, the subject of this series being the Holy Spirit. The attendance on Saturday last was very encouraging. On Thursday evenings also addresses are to be given on devotional subjects by well-known ministers. While this rich provision is made for the spiritual welfare of young men, their intellectual and recreative needs are well catered for as set forth in a very admirable prospectus.

A Visit to Bohemia.

During a recent stay in the old historic city of Prague we saw much of interest, relating both to past and present. A short journey thence brought us to the old town of Kolin, where we were met by the Protestant pastor with the warmest of welcomes. He showed us first the various points of historic interest in the town; for in that land, full of memories, there is not a town, scarce a village, without its tale of suffering and martyrdom, or battle and victory. In his house we saw precious memorials of the past—Hussite books centuries old, which had been hidden in strange places and deprived of their title pages to elude the ever-active search of the Jesuits. Some of the Bibles, he told us, had been baked in loaves of bread, hidden in bee-hives, boiled amongst the clothes in washing pots—anything rather than that they should be given up.

There was a beautiful silver chalice, curiously inlaid with gold, found in a field close at hand, with two skeletons. By one of these skeletons were found some articles of knightly adornment; by the other, the cup, which evidently had been used in the administration of the Lord's Supper, suggesting the idea that the body was that of Procopius, a great Hussite pastor and leader, killed near that place. Though now nearly 500 years old, the chalice is still used by the Reformed congregation of Kolin, for the same sacred purpose—in remembrance of their martyred forefathers.

Most interesting of all, perhaps, was a plain, massive sword, large and heavy. This relic had drifted in some strange way to Scotland, where it was discovered by Bohemian students, purchased by their friends, and sent back to their country. It was the sword, not of the soldier, but of the executioner, with which twenty-seven Protestant martyrs were beheaded at Prague in 1621. The pastor gave us a photograph of the cup, the Bible, and the sword--a striking emblem of the Church of his country, the oldest Reformed Church in Europe, which, 100 years before Luther, vindicated the right of all Christ's people to drink of his sacramental cup, and declared the supremacy of the Holy Scriptures in matters of faith. The sword also is sadly appropriate; but, be it remembered, it was not the sword they wielded, but that by which they suffered.

We next visited Kuttenberg. Here is an old castle and a church built by the Hussites during the years they held the town. The walls of the latter are covered with frescoes characteristic of the times. These the Jesuits whitewashed over when they recovered the town, but they are now being carefully restored.

A few miles from the town, we reached the base of a steep and rugged hill, formed in great part, like those around it, by excavations from the silver mines, which were in full operation, and a source of enormous wealth, more than five hundred years ago. As we ascended, our guide pointed out to us spot after spot of interest. "Yonder," said he, "in that village, Zisca, the great Hussite leader was buried. Here, on the other side, nearer the town, is another village, where, in 1421, he came with his army, and found the bodies of some young girls, cruelly slain by the Imperial troops. Kindled by the sight to ungovernable indignation, and against the wishes of their leader, his followers rushed upon Kuttenberg and took it.

"Far off on the horizon is the spire of a church. There, in mid-winter, the congregation of Hussites were shut up and all massacred, save a few who were deprived of their clothing and in the snow. Nearer, in a stretch of meadow land, the banished Protestant pastors took leave of their flocks, in the great persecution of 1621. There, kneeling together for the last time, they commended one another to God and to the Word of his grace."

At the top of the hill was the mouth of a long-disused silver mine, a yawning chasm now covered over by a structure erected upon it. Into this horrible pit no fewer than 1900 Hussites had been thrown on account of their faith, in the early years of the fifteenth century, as recorded in the town records of Kuttenberg. Nearly 5000 martyrs perished thus, in this and the neighbouring mines—

> Thousands that, uncheered by praise,
> Have made one offering of their days;
> For truth's, for heaven's, for freedom's sake,
> Resigned the bitter cup to take;
> And, silently, in fearless faith,
> Bowing their noble souls to death.

During the 200 years that elapsed between the martyrdoms of the Kuttenberg mines and the farewells of the pastors in the plains beneath, the story of the Protestant Church in Bohemia was indeed "written within and without with mourning, lamentation, and woe." But the year 1621 ushered in the most terrible persecution of all. Ferdinand II., that cruel persecutor, and the tool of the Jesuits, boasted, seven years afterwards, that there was not a Protestant left in Bohemia. But then the population, which in 1621 had numbered 3,000,000, was reduced in 1628 to 800,000. Even at this cost the work of extermination was not done. Bohemian Protestantism lived on, though in secrecy and silence, and under bitter oppression. In the eighteenth century it sent forth a noble shoot, which, under the auspices of Count Zinzendorff, spread and flourished until it filled the face of the earth with fruit. Who has not heard of the labours and successes of the great Missionary Church of the United Brethren of Bohemia and Moravia? But those who could escape to the friendly shelter of Herrnhut were far fewer than those who had to remain and

CHERISH THEIR FAITH IN SECRET.

Until the year 1848, no Protestants were recognised in Bohemia; but when, in that year, religious toleration was announced, large numbers claimed the boon thus tardily offered. Asked with what communion of Protestants they would wish to join, they answered, "To the United Brethren." But the memories evoked by that beloved name were too dear and sacred for common use; and so the Protestants of Bohemia called themselves "Reformed," or "Lutherans."

Having had no means of training pastors, they had to take them from other Protestant Churches, wherever they could. But now God is raising up amongst them able and faithful men of their own race, and, through his blessing, their congregations are steadily increasing.

All this and more our friend the pastor told us. He showed us, in the town of Kuttenberg, a neat and commodious church bearing the appropriate inscription, and told us how the Protestant Sunday-school children from all the congregations round, at their annual festival, march, with music and banners, to the hill of the fatal mine, and there sing their hymns of praise to the God of their martyred forefathers. Their little Roman Catholic neighbours watch these proceedings with kindly interest. Last year, the morning being gloomy, they came out to see them, saying, "Don't go up to the hill to-day; it will rain, and your pretty banners will be spoiled."

"TO THE MARTYRS OF KUTTENBERG,"

"Oh, no," returned the friendly pastor, "it won't rain. We will go to the hill, and you shall come with us and listen to our hymns, and join in the singing;" and so they did.

Here and there our friends of Bohemia seem to have set before them. It is of the utmost importance that they should enter in. They are willing, most willing, to labour, to give, and to make sacrifices for their Church, even the very poorest of them. In Prague they have one church already, but it does not meet their needs, and the Government will not allow them to build a second in the town. They propose, therefore, to erect one in a fashionable suburb of Prague, "The Royal Vineyard," where an important congregation is already formed, and an earnest and able pastor has been chosen for the charge. They are only waiting for the necessary means to erect the building and maintain the pastor. Well may English Christians, with all their privileges and freedom of worship, stretch out a hand of greeting and brotherly love to this oldest of all the Reformed Churches, which has kept the faith for well-nigh 500 years.

THE FIRST SUNDAY SCHOOL?

Sir,—Everybody knows that good Robert Raikes is given credit for having founded the first Sunday-school, about 1780. Reading lately, however, a curious volume written in 1822, "Memoirs of the Life of the late Mrs. Catherine Cappe," I found that a Sunday-school existed at Catterick, in Wensleydale, as early as 1765. The following passage refers to this prototype of Robert Raikes' school:—

"Beyond all other days, it was the delight of my life to spend the Sunday with my friends at Catterick. The morning family prayer was short, but appropriate, pious, and animated. The sermon at church practical, serious, and instructive. At two o'clock, before the commencement of afternoon service, Mr. Lindsey [the clergyman] devoted an hour in the church every Sunday, alternately to catechising the children of the parish, and to expounding the Bible to the boys of a large school, which was at that time kept in the village. The number of the boys generally amounted to about one hundred, who formed a large circle round him; himself holding a Bible open in his hand, with which he walked slowly round, giving it regularly in succession to the boys, each reading in his turn the passage about to be explained; this method, accompanied by frequently recapitulating what had been said, and by asking them questions relating to it, kept them very attentive, and the good effects of these labours proved in many cases very apparent in after life; Mr. L. having frequently been recognised in the streets of London by some of his former Sunday pupils, who gratefully acknowledged their obligations to him. After evening service, Mr. Lindsey received different classes of young men and women on alternate Sundays in his study, for the purpose of instruction; and Mrs. Lindsey in like manner, in another apartment, had two classes of children, boys and girls alternately."

The subject of the memoirs referred to herself endeavoured to established a Sunday-school at Bedale, but with slight success, the innovation not meeting with the sympathy she expected. This, too, was before Robert Raikes began his first school. Mrs. Cappe, by the way, was born June 3, 1744, at Longpreston, in Yorkshire, and was the daughter of the Rev. Jeremiah Harrison, who became vicar of Skipton in 1740, and who died 1763, being buried at Longpreston.

THE EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY, 13, Blomfield-street, London Wall, E.C., continues to help Christian workers on the continent, such as are found in the French Inner Mission with its groups of voluntary labourers in connection with Protestant churches of all denominations. At the various places which specially benefit, no little blessing has been vouchsafed. A woman called after one agent, "If you will tell us beforehand when you are coming, you will have quite a large meeting, even in the daytime"; and so it was, for thirty persons met between one and two o'clock, and after the service begged for further meetings. In the village of Masbonnet, the deathbed of a Christian man produced a deep impression. "Don't weep," said he, "but sing and be cheerful, I am entering into happiness. I am not starting, I am arriving. Jesus is holding out his arms to me." Good work has also been done in Belgium, Spain, Italy, Bohemia, and Austrian Silesia.

SCOTTISH CONFERENCES.

DUMFRIES CONFERENCE.

This is, in the meantime, the very youngest of the Scottish united autumn conventions, as it was born only last October. But it was a lusty child, and it shows, after the lapse of a year, every sign of a lengthened and useful life. Conferences of the sort are not, however, a thing unknown in this south-western corner of Scotland. The writer well remembers being present at a Conference in the town eight years ago, at the close of a visit from Mr. Moody, when that great evangelist gathered around him a crowd of Christian ministers and workers from far and near, and fused them in a white heat of spiritual life and enthusiasm. A stranger to the town might not be able to discern them, but without doubt the fruits of that time abide and reproduce themselves to-day.

The various leading denominations in the town are of one heart in arranging for this yearly gathering, and the conveners are fortunate in having as president a man of such genial mind and large-hearted sympathy as Rev. Sir Emilius Laurie, Bart., of Maxweltown, who won such wide esteem in former years as a Church of England clergyman in Paddington. He took the chair at all the meetings of the three days—Tuesday to Thursday of last week—and gave the opening address on the Monday evening in the Greyfriars Church.

The general subject of the Conference during the three days was

The Christ of Christianity.

At the first blush it seems strange that in a land like Scotland, where the pulpit has been supreme for so many years, there should be any need for a restatement of truth on such a theme. But modern speculation in theology has produced so many half Christs or quarter Christs, or distorted Christs, or even false Christs, that the conveners were by no means ill-advised in desiring to set forth in systematic fashion the Christ of the good old Gospel that has transformed the world, so far as it has been transformed.

THE PRESIDENT'S OPENING ADDRESS

was an elaborate and convincing one on "What think ye of Christ?—the crucial test of Christianity." He examined the question in its historical aspects, as relating to the Jew first, and then to the world at large. He traced the decline of the Jewish nation to the inadequate answer they gave, as a people, to the question, and predicted a similar fate for all the unbelieving or sceptical criticism of modern times. Even the views of many professed Christians have been extremely one-sided—magnifying our Lord's human attributes at the expense of the divine. This is a critical question for every individual soul of man, and it is also the touchstone of the true unity of the Church. It is only through a closer and more vital union with the Divine Christ, that the members of all the churches can unite in common fellowship, and in effectual service.

CHRIST IN RELATION TO HIS WORK.

In opening the proceedings of Tuesday, the reverend baronet referred to the stimulus afforded by last year's Conference, in deepening the spiritual experience of believers, and promoting aggressive work in the southern counties of Scotland. This year's subject had been chosen with the special view of meeting present-day doubts and difficulties. Positive presentation of Christian truth is better than controversy with sceptics. Let the love of Christ but possess the soul, and that will form a safeguard against all the assaults of the enemy.

DR. J. J. BLACK, INVERNESS, gave the first address on "Christ in his atoning Sacrifice," with 2 Cor. v. 21 for a text. The well-worn and familiar truths with respect to this fundamental verity of the faith were presented with great lucidity and unction. The need of reconciliation to God; human helplessness to bring it about; the Divine intervention by the incarnation; the perfect obedience and the atoning sacrifice of Christ; the imputation of human sin to the Sinless One; the imputation, as well as the actual impartation, of the Divine righteousness to the believer: these points were restated and pressed home with crystalline clearness and with a sober earnestness suited to the occasion. Christ was "made sin" for us—let there be no toning down of that; He became, in the eye of the Father, for the time, the accursed and outcast thing. We cannot have the cheap heaven that some seem to desire; and if we did, it would be disappointing, for the conscience would remain unpurged and unsatisfied. The typical ordinances relating to the Paschal Lamb, and the Scapegoat driven into the waste and lonely wilderness, were used to set forth different aspects of Christ's redemptive work; in brief, the foundations of the evangelical creed were well and truly laid by our friend from the Highland Capital.

Most of the hymns chosen to follow the addresses were singularly happy and befitting. At this point we sang with chastened gratitude:—

When I survey the wondrous cross
On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.

REV. GEORGE EVERARD, DOVER,

followed with an address on "Christ in his abiding presence." The thoughts were well worked out, and full of comforting strength. In a world like this we need Christ, not only as a Redeemer from the curse of the Fall, but as a living Companion and Friend in the battle of life. An illumination given to him by a friend had been very helpful; it ran—"Jesus Christ is alive to-day, and will be alive to-morrow." As Christians we experience the twofold blessing—a living Saviour at God's right hand, and a sustaining Friend and Helper at our own right hand all the day long. In the closing words of Mark's Gospel we have a beautiful paradox—Jesus ascended to heaven; yet in the very next verse we read of Him as working on the earth through and with his disciples. The old Testament promise given to Joshua, "I will not fail thee nor forsake thee," is taken up by David, and adopted by Paul, who re-minted it, and sent it forth broadcast for the comfort of all coming generations of believers (as in the R.V.), "I will in no wise fail thee; neither in any wise forsake thee." The abiding presence of Christ with the trusting Christian in times of loneliness, or bereavement, or sorrow, and also in the midst of active service, was practically and attractively set forth by Mr. Everard, whose loving tones and apt illustrations helped to carry home his exposition. The experimental knowledge of this presence will take away from us the fear of man, and the desire for human applause; it will increase our love to the Saviour Himself, and will give us the true idea of separation from an evil world.

Hymn sung:—

Jesus, the very thought of Thee
With sweetness fills my breast;
But better far thy face to see,
And in thy presence rest.

REV. K. MOODY STUART, MOFFAT, gave an admirable and thoughtful deliverance in the afternoon on "Christ's priestly intercession." This doctrine, he observed, has scarcely received so much attention from the Christian Church as either the Incarnation or the Second Coming to earth in glory; but it is one of the greatest importance in its bearing on the believer's life. As a doctrine it is a matter of pure revelation, and therefore difficult to realise; all the more as its sphere of operation is "within the vail."

In unfolding the subject Mr. Moody Stuart said that Christ intercedes for us before the Father's throne as our Covenant Head; as the ambassador and representative of our race; as our Divine Priest; as our advocate; and as the only begotten of the Father, having boundless influence at the Court of Heaven. He intercedes for "all who come to God by Him," but his intercession does not imply any want of love on the Father's part. He prays that his Church on the earth may be kept, and sanctified, and manifested as one. One powerful plea He presents is his atoning blood; and He uses as another the fact that believers have received Him, and, therefore, given Him the right to appear on their behalf. He presents our prayers before the mercy seat—how many petitions He must have to drop out, and how many to add that we have omitted. What earnestness He must infuse into our poor prayers. If a mother's prayer avails on earth for the restoration of a prodigal son, what cannot Christ's intercession do for his people?

Hymn:—

Where high the heav'nly temple stands,
The house of God not made with hands,
A great High Priest our nature wears;
The Guardian of mankind appears.

REV. G. L. CARSTAIRS, GLASGOW,

had for his practical topic: "Christ in his sanctifying energy." Salvation is not merely something accomplished for us and outside of us; it is also a thing to be done in us. Christ did not die that we might be safe, but that we might be good. We have to be delivered, not only from past penalty, but from present self-will, meanness, ill-regulated tempers and tongues. It is possible to be very orthodox in creed, and yet very covetous in life. The Word says we cannot serve God and mammon. Some professed Christians seemed to say to themselves: "We will try it, and take the risk." Inconsistencies in professed believers scare honest men from the truth. The goodness that does not issue in good works is mere goodiness—nothing but a vapoury sentiment. This sanctification comes through the appropriation of Christ by faith. Christ in us is the source of all purity and holy living or working. Change of mind is good, and so is change of life; but better still is change of heart; and that is the work of Christ. We know not which to marvel at most—the passion or the patience of Christ; his suffering for us, or his longsuffering with us.

After a few heartfelt words from an aged pastor, the President referred to the unhappy divorce between religion and morals that too often prevails. We need to recognise more that all our "secular" life must be permeated with the spirit and the power of Christ; then the world will be able to see Christ's sanctifying energy in manifest action.

was the first to address a large assemblage in Greyfriars Church in the evening; his subject was "The place of Christ's Divinity in the work of redemption." The Principal in a massive man with a truly massive mind. The masterly and elaborate way in which he handled this highly doctrinal question, without note of any kind, and quoting Scripture references profusely from memory, showed him to be a giant in Christian homiletics and dialectics. The way in which the large and mixed congregation listened was a remarkable tribute at once to the Professor's power, and to their own appreciation of a sustained and lofty argument. Declining to engage in controversy with Jew, Mohammedan, Socinian, or Rationalist, as to the Divinity of our Lord, the learned Principal recapitulated some of the Scripture assertions of that Divinity as forming to his mind an overwhelming body of proof that was irresistible Passing to the topic of the moment, he very clearly showed how the general idea of mediation involves the necessity of the mediator having something in common with both sides. To meet this need, we have the Son of God becoming Son of Man, and thus qualifying Himself as true and perfect Middleman between God and the human sinner. The doctrine shows the transcendent greatness of the evangelical faith, which at once meets the wants of man and conserves the dignity of God. This is utterly lacking in modern Judaism, in Mohammedanism, and in Rationalism.

The Divine element in Christ's character is further necessitated in the specific discharge of his offices of Prophet, Priest, and King. The prophetic office was filled in old time by inspired men, and the revelation is, of course, a progressive one; but it culminated in Christ—the true revealer and explainer of the Father. What a sublime word was that: "No man knoweth the Son but the Father." So it is also true that no man knoweth the Father but the Divine Son, who has revealed and manifested Him to the world, in his prophetic function.

Inadequate conceptions of Christ's priestly office as Atoner were referred to and combated, e.g., the proclamation of God's love by suffering; sympathy with humanity through suffering and death; the moral influence theory; atonement by intercession, and so forth. All were shown to come short in that they provide no satisfaction for a broken law. Our Lord's own words in Matt. xxvi. 26, "The Son of Man came to give his life a ransom for many," are very strong on this point, and so are later utterances, which prove that atonement is a thing indispensable, and a thing that He only, as the Divine Saviour, could accomplish once for all. This evangelical doctrine grows more and more precious, and God will never suffer it to fade from his Church.

As to Christ's kingly office, in being Head of his Church and Head over all things for his Church, of course Divinity is needed. How could a mere man fill such an office? To believe that, would involve a far greater tax on our faith than the reception of all the mysteries the Bible contains. Our notes represent only the merest skeleton of the Principal's line of thought, but will serve to indicate the close-fitting and irrefutable character of his high argument.

DR. HERDMAN, OF MELROSE, followed with a powerfully moving Gospel appeal for "the personal acceptance of a personal Christ." The statements of familiar saving truth were clear, cogent, and couched in words of rare intensity and pathos. The infinite love of Christ, the freeness and fulness of the provision, and the wisdom of looking away from subjective frames and feelings to the person of the Saviour Himself, were all presented with sanctified skill, and the hearer was shut up to an instant, complete, and glad surrender.

CHRIST AND THE BELIEVER.

The six addresses of the second day were all bearing on this point in some of its aspects. To a largely increased company in the forenoon, Principal Cairns spoke on

CHRIST AS THE SOURCE OF LIFE.

Life in Christ suggested to him the solemn antithesis—death out of Christ; and this he dwelt on in some preliminary words. Intellectual activity, reasoning faculty, natural affection, are all good and excellent, but defective without the life of the Spirit. Theologians have long discussed the mystery of this life in its essence, but have failed to throw much light upon it; we can only know it by its manifestations. Probably it is not so much an actually new and additional faculty brought into being, as a right and Godward direction given to those we possess. Our faculties, such as knowledge, love, &c., have been spoiled and deflected by sin, and need to be set into different channels. Knowledge is essential, but not sufficient; to intellectual perception must be added living faith. The mind and will have to be changed, and no mere argument can effect this; it is the work of Christ by his Spirit. In this work the Word of God has an important place; how essential, therefore, that that Word should be scattered about through the world in every shape and form—in the printed page, through the lip, and the testimony of the life. God is sovereign in the impartation of spiritual life, but He places his Spirit at the disposal of those who earnestly seek it. As John Wesley said on his dying couch, "Best of all God is with us."

CHRIST, THE SPRING OF OBEDIENCE

was the second subject of the day, treated by Rev. Dr. Herdman. He began by quoting a saying of Murray McCheyne, that our Christianity is not simply having views and convictions and spiritual delights; if these do not lead on to a life of devoted obedience, it is all a delusion. As the slave said to her master who had purchased her freedom, so we say to Christ: "He has redeemed me; I will follow and serve Him all my life." The constraining love of Christ (2 Cor. v. 14) was the fire that kindled the Christian zeal of Paul and sustained him in his heroic life. That love is no less real to us than it was to Paul; He loves to the end. We extol the love of a mother or a martyr, but what is that to the love of Jesus Christ? Would that his love might possess us as the love of money possesses the miser. He is the Lover of our soul; shall He not also be the beloved of our soul? Then, if we love Him, we will keep his words. Mere emotion is no true test of love. Let us put everything away that hinders the outflow of our obedience, that He may be supreme in our life. He is our Life, our Lord, our Hope; if we are to hear his "Well done," we must be obedient servants in all things.

Hymn sung:—

Take my life, and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.

CHRIST AS A PATTERN OF CONFORMITY

was the branch of the subject entrusted to Dr. Black, of Inverness, in the afternoon. From the well-known words: "Lo, I come; in the volume of the Book it is written of Me, I delight to do thy will, O my God, and thy law is within my heart," a very practical message to Christians was evolved. A good model (he said) is a very important thing, and in the world of art that can easily be got. But for the heavenly life there is only one perfect model or pattern. Christ says in this passage "I come"; we could never have found Him otherwise. "To do"—not to attempt and perhaps to fail; surely here is the very One we want to be conformed to. "I delight to do thy will"—here is self-abnegation, and that is the secret of a true Christian life. Do we find our Christian service a delight? If it is the product of a law outside of us it will be only drudgery. "Thy law is within my heart"; then we shall rejoice to live it out. Why do we wear such long faces as Christians? as though the thing had to be dragged out of us as a "duty." That sort of religion is not worth much.

Remember too that Christianity is doing. It is not attending conferences, prayer-meetings, and Sabbath assemblies, or reading psalms by the yard. All these things are most important, but only as fitting us for actual doing—furnishing fresh fuel that we may burn for Jesus and his redeemed people. This spirit of loving, joyous consecration comes from the power of the indwelling Christ. He gave Himself for us, and to us; we give ourselves to Him and for Him. It is not simply a question of imitation; it is the working out of a new and divine life in the soul. It is his life, and so there is no room for boasting.

Hymn sung:—

Renew my will from day to day,
Blend it with thine; and take away
All that now makes it hard to say,
"Thy will be done."

CHRIST AS THE CONSOLER

was the theme of a very gracious, heartfelt, and uplifting deliverance by Rev. George Everard. Consolation, he said, does not stand so high as Conformity, but it may well be a stepping-stone to it. God says very much about comforting and consoling his children in his Word. Every one of the varied aspects of Christ's character and work is a spring and channel of comfort to the believer in some circumstance of his life. Look at Christ as a Refuge—sevenfold: like the seven stone houses of shelter erected at different dangerous points along the Simplon Pass over the Alps.

Refuge one: The precious name of Jesus—Saviour; answering to the great broad name, Sinner. Some beautiful incidents were told of the unspeakable consolation found by afflicted ones in simply repeating and re-repeating the word: Jesus, Jesus, Jesus. Refuge two: The power of the cross—not a cross on which hangs a dead Christ, but a living Christ standing by his cross and applying his completed work. Refuge three: The wings of Jesus—emblem of security, warmth, and comfort. Refuge four: Tender sympathy of Jesus. Meditate on his tears, his groans, and his sighs—all showing the depth of his sympathy with human sorrow and trial. If we are so cast down that we know not what to say, let us just heave a sigh to Jesus; He will understand it, and will send relief. Refuge five: The promises of Christ—so many, so varied, and so sufficient. Refuge six: His changeless fidelity. Refuge seven: Christ our eternal home. An unceasing worker in Mr. Everard's parish was helped by his arm up the hill one evening on returning to her house, and said to him at the gate: "Thank you for bringing me home." Will not that be a good word to say to the Saviour when we get into his presence, with all our trials, and temptations, and weariness past? Without his strong arm, we can never reach "Home, sweet Home." Let the joy of the Lord be our strength here; by and by we shall enter into the fulness of that joy.

How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear.

CHRIST: AN EXAMPLE IN COMMON LIFE.

Another address was given by Mr. Everard at the evening meeting on this most practical aspect of our Lord's character. It might seem to be almost a repetition of the theme handled by Dr. Black in the afternoon, but the treatment of it was quite different—an instance of the many-sideness of Divine truth. Mr. Everard's homely talk was full of telling points and of touching illustrations. The specific matters mentioned in which we may well copy Christ in our daily common life were: Singleness of purpose in seeking the glory of God; guilelessness of speech and straightforwardness of conduct in the family and in business affairs; the right fulfilment of home relationships; meekness, gentleness, patience, and considerateness for others. Most weighty and impressive were the speaker's exhortations on all these points, especially on strict integrity in business matters, and the fruits of evil tempers in the home. On the question of considerateness for the weal of others, there was a strong protest against the betting and gambling mania so prevalent; gambling, said Mr. Everard is unmitigated selfishness; if one wins some other is bound to lose.

REV. PROFESSOR LAIDLAW, of New College, Edinburgh, gave the closing address for the day on "Christ our life—the absolute condition of holiness." The thought was fresh, well balanced, and well expressed. A passion for holiness, he said, breathed through the utterances of Christ, and they should inspire all his redeemed children to a like passion. They are redeemed to be peculiarly his own, zealous of good works—enthusiastic for holiness. Christ, in order to produce this holiness, "purifies (or purges) our hearts by faith." That is to say, faith is the window through which the light and power of God stream into the soul and the life. Taking up two figures used by our Lord—eating his flesh and drinking his blood, and the vine living through its branches—the Professor expatiated with much felicity of thought and expression on the fact that Christ himself is our life as believers, and only as we live out his life pulsating through us, can we be holy. The peculiarity of the vine is that it cares nothing for a fine stem; it throws all its vigorous and abounding vitality into the production of branches and fruit. What a profound and far-reaching symbol of the relations between Christ and his Church. If we abide in Him his life will flow through us into channels of holy living, of victory over sin, and of fruitful service. It is ours to ask—to beg—morning, noon, and night, that the Lord will make us to abide in Him, so that his life may flow into and out of us unhindered.

CHRIST IN RELATION TO THE WORLD.

fell to be considered on the third and last day of the meetings. The very orderly and consecutive arrangement of subjects showed great thought and care on the part of the conveners. It must also be said that the various speakers stuck to their texts in a way that was very refreshing to one who has had much experience of the contrary method at Christian conferences. At the forenoon meeting of Thursday a very striking address was given by Professor Laidlaw on

CHRIST IN HIS KINGLY RULE.

Sceptics and critics, he said, may quibble at the prophetic and priestly functions of Jesus Christ, but they cannot impugn his Kingship without disowning Him altogether; for He asserted it in the plainest of words. He admitted the truth of Pilate's hypothetical question, while declaring that his kingdom was not of this world. He told the people that the world would see Him as the Son of Man, sitting at the right hand of the Father and coming on the clouds of heaven.

In Phil. ii. and Eph. i. we are told of Christ's exaltation to Kingship by God. As Joseph was designated for power in Egypt by Pharaoh, and given the symbols of reign in the clothing, the chains of gold, the chariot, and, above all, in the signet ring of the king, so we see Christ put in the place of power and rule by God the Father. The "signet ring" of his coronation was the giving to Him of the Holy Ghost without measure. Immense importance is given in the New Testament to the kingly rule of Christ during this dispensation, and we do not as Christians give it the attention it demands. It is true that Christ was on the throne in heaven from all eternity, but that was as the Second Person of the Godhead. Now, after his ascension, He is there in a sense that He never was before—as the man Christ Jesus. In Him man has come to his new kingdom. It is a delegated rule; Christ's eternal rule could not have been delegated, for God could not exalt Himself; but He is now on the throne of the world as the representative of redeemed man. We infer from 1 Cor. xv. that this mediatorial dominion of Christ as the God-Man during the Gospel age is for a special purpose and a limited time; for we are told that after He has subdued all his enemies under his feet, He will then relinquish the kingdom to the Father, and God will again be all in all.

This kingly rule of Christ over the world (for that is the point of our subject) has very practical bearings on human life now. The actual rule of the world now is a Christocracy; therefore, everything in the world, individual, social, governmental, national, comes within the sweep of that rule. Some of our ancestors—Reformers, Puritans, Covenanters, Pilgrim Fathers—recognised this, and what it enabled them to accomplish in the world! They left their mark on their generation for Christ, because they believed that He was not only ruling over the spiritual kingdom of their hearts and in his Church, but that all earthly affairs and all civil society were in his hands. It may not be easy to realise, and to practically apply this, but it must be done. These ancient worthies had to suffer and to fight for their belief, not with carnal weapons, but with the Word of God, and they were among the noblest of Christian heroes. No doubt they made mistakes. The great mistake of the Church in the middle ages was in thinking that Christ was to rule in the world in a corporate and organised form, through Pope and bishops, and that this rule was to govern Church and State. They forgot that his kingdom is not of this world, though in it and over it. Protestants have made the same mistake, in thinking they were giving effect to Christ's rule by commanding all to assume certain forms of religious organisation. Man cannot organise Christ's rule; He must do it Himself. But we must recognise his kingly right to rule in all departments of life—public as well as private; political, social, governmental, as well as individual. We hear it said that the reign of the people is coming on, and the Christian Church cannot ignore the facts relating to democracy, and socialism, and strifes between capital and labour. They must be faced, and it must be earnestly contended for that the principles of Christ's kingdom are to be paramount in all these departments of human society and life. As parents, citizens, educators—in all the relations we sustain to our fellow-men, and amid all the political changes of the time—let us know and declare that there is a King, one Jesus, whom men are bound to obey. The safety of the State as well as of the Church depends on the practical recognition of Christ as King and Lord over the world that He has redeemed.

Look, ye saints, the sight is glorious,
See the Man of Sorrows now,
From the fight return victorious;
Every knee to Him shall bow.

REV. D. BAYNE JARDINE,

parish minister of Keir, spoke of "Christ in his bounteous gifts." Premising that he interpreted "the world" in this application as meaning that form of society which knows and owns the name of Christ but does not share his life, he proceeded to show, with much force, how much Christ has done for it through his bounteous gifts. His own unique, perfect, and beneficent character is in itself a gift of unspeakable worth to the world; and multitudes who have not accepted his gift of life are yet strong in their admiration of his person. The influences of his life and teaching are permeating human society more and more; as may be seen in the increased sense of the dignity of man; in the large provision now made for all kinds of suffering humanity; and in the elevation of woman. Greater of course than all the purely human and material aspects of Christ's gifts to the world, is the gift of eternal life and its resulting gifts of peace, power, and victory. The gift of the Church to the world is also a great one for which we must be deeply thankful.

Several other friends in the meeting gave expression to their sense of the deep importance of the morning's topics, and all must have felt with the Chairman that plenty of "strong meat" had been served out for mastication and digestion.

REV. ALEX. SMELLIE, STRANRAER,

a young minister of the Original Secession Church, gave an address on "Christ's Righteous Judgments," on Thursday afternoon. His treatment of the subject was marked by freshness of thought and much earnestness of delivery. We lay great stress, he said, on the gentleness and kindness of our Lord; and rightly. But let us not forget that He is King and Judge as well as Saviour. In this thought there is much comfort for his servants and solemn warning for his enemies. The speaker went on to view the judgments of Christ as they relate to and appear in the existing state of things. As to the past, the incarnation, life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ were really a judgment of the usurping prince of this world. As to the individual, Christ is continually judging each of us now. He notes all the pulsations of our being, and records our secret sins, for judgment in due time. Some sins bring their own judgment after them very speedily. All sin brings more or less of terror to the conscience and that is an unmistakable judgment of Christ, passed on us in order to bring us back to Him. What is every conversion but Christ's righteous judgment of our previous life? Happy are those individuals who are judged now, and whom the goodness of God leads to repentance.

Christ is also continually judging society—sifting and testing men and nations. Providence in its broader aspects is but an unveiling of the righteous thoughts of our Saviour King. How many instances of this do we find in the history of the past. The Roman Empire gave itself to idolatry. Christ had long patience, but at length He weighed it in the balances and found it wanting; and it fell. The corrupt Church of the middle ages, with its penances and its false priesthood coming between men and God, became intolerable to Christ, and He sent the Lutheran Reformation. Was not the Wesleyan revival Christ's solemn judgment on the deadness and neglect of the dominant Church of that day? What of the Churches in our own time? We are coveting the wealth and prestige of the world; seeking after its amusements; losing our zeal for Christ's cause, and his compassion for the sinful; even compromising our testimony lest it should offend those whose support we would retain. Is not God judging his Church by the rich blessing he gives to workers who are detached from it, and to agencies that it affects to despise?

Let us take a well-balanced view of Christ's character and dealings—not magnifying his love at the expense of his righteousness. Let us be hopeful as to the future, and go on declaring the Lord's message to a world that still lieth in the wicked one. Christ is slow to wrath, but his judgments will not tarry. Blessed are all that put their trust in Him.

Hymn sung:—

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

CHRIST IN HIS FINAL TRIUMPH

was the next topic on the programme, and its consideration was undertaken at very short notice by Dr. Black. His treatment of it was most helpful and stimulating. He dwelt first on the prevalence and power of death in the world as the result of sin. This great last enemy seems now to be regnant throughout mankind; but one day he too shall be conquered and destroyed, and in the glorious day of resurrection power Christ shall finally triumph over this separator, and disturber of human happiness.

The next point taken up was the promise given to Abraham respecting his seed and its possession of the inheritance. No one can imagine that that promise has been fulfilled by anything in the past. The Jewish people yet wait for the land, and the land waits for the people; and we look for the final triumph of our Master in this respect. Who can tell how soon it may be? Once more, there is the promise that Christ shall present to Himself his glorious Church, holy and without blemish. As yet that Church is far from what she ought to be, either in character or in testimony, but the promise standeth sure, and it is ours to speed on its perfect fulfilment, watching and waiting for the coming of our Lord in the day of his triumph. We talk much of union now, and we long for the manifestation of it, though we may not exactly see how it is to be brought. When Christ comes in his glory the thing will be settled, and the oneness of believers will be made truly manifest. Then, not his Church only, but every individual follower of the King shall be perfected in Christ Jesus, and we shall cast our crowns at his feet.

PROFESSOR LINDSAY,

of the Free Church College, Glasgow, took in hand, at the last evening meeting, the vast theme: "Christ for the world—its only hope," and he invested it with no small interest. The Professor is abrupt and unconventional in his mode of address, but he knows how to go to the heart of a subject. The earlier part of his remarks went to show how little the world of Christ's day dreamt or knew of Him and his mission. Our Lord paid no heed to that, but emptied Himself of his essential glory and went down to the very lowest place where could be found fallen and degraded humanity. The speaker threw scorn on those modern writers who talk of the impossibility of atonement, and vindicated it even as a theory. As to the dense ignorance of the learned men of Christ's time with respect to Him, the statement of Tacitus the historian was quoted—that Jesus Christ was a Jew who lived in Rome, and, having stirred up a riot, was put to death.

Notwithstanding the ignorance of the outside world, the light of the Gospel began to grow and spread, and there is nothing more marvellous in all the records of scientific discovery than the way in which the Church of Jesus Christ has grown up in the world, without any adventitious aids or advantages. Everything was against it. In the early days a great proportion of its adherents were slaves. But it was a divine thing, and it grew till we know what it is to-day. The Professor disclaimed all sympathy with the pessimism that regards the world as becoming worse. He believes that it was never in a better condition, and that the Church was never more Christlike than it is now. He very much preferred the nineteenth century of the Christian era to the first. He took a hasty glimpse at the state of things in India, where he finds much to encourage and cause hope for the future. More converts have been made to the Christian faith in India alone during the past hundred years than over the world during the first century of the Church's existence. Then he referred to the marvellous strides in Africa within recent years, and to the fact that all the world, with the one exception of Thibet, now holds an open door to the Gospel messenger. The days of miracles are not past. It is a greater miracle to take the drink appetite clean out of a man or woman than to turn water into wine or multiply bread. Speaking of work among the masses, the Professor was led into a very touching and sympathetic reference to the death of Mrs. Booth—one of the noblest of the daughters of earth or of heaven. He finished off his glowing picture by telling, dramatically, the story of "Hell Gate," at New York—its long, and patient, and costly undermining, and its sudden destruction. So the nations are being prepared for the acceptance of Christ's Gospel, and one day the world shall see and know that Christ is its only hope.

THE CLOSING ADDRESS OF THE CONFERENCE

came from the venerated president, Sir Emilius Laurie, and was a comprehensive exposition of the great theme: "The world for Christ, the Christian's noblest aim." Christ claims for his heritage the whole world, and not any portion of it, or any nation or sect in it. We cannot truthfully say that the world is for Christ now. It rejected Him 1900 years ago, and it largely rejects Him still. Looking at the past, and seeing the comparatively small results from the preaching of the Gospel, we are apt to grow impatient. But periods of preparation are long, and crises come suddenly. Two broad statements will be universally accepted: (1) The creation of the world was the work of the pre-existent Christ; (2) Christ is, therefore, the universal heir of all things. There are many clear Old Testament prophecies (Isa. ii.; Ps. ii.; Isa. xi. 9; Dan. ii., &c.) that yet await complete fulfilment; and past fulfilments are a pledge of those to come. It is more difficult to account for the rise and rapid progress of the Christian faith amid so many surrounding oppositions than to believe in a large and complete extension of its power. The present state of the world gives much ground for hope as to the future.

What is wanted is that Christians should endeavour to minimise their little differences, and act out the more vital points of common agreement. Divisions are always a source of weakness, especially in the mission field. The progress made during the last half century is enormous. On this point the speaker referred to the departure of over seventy missionaries in connection with the C.M.S. as one indication of present and prospective development in missions. Surely everything shows that we are on the winning side. Let the Church be fully convinced of the great spiritual needs of the nations. Let us believe that there is a latent capacity in the lowest and most degraded to receive and obey the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Above all, let us have faith in the power of that old Gospel which has won such victories in the past, and which will survive all the objections and criticism of human philosophy and science. It is not a new Gospel that we need, but a firmer grip of the old. There are three solemn questions that we each ought to put to ourselves:—

What have I done hitherto for the glory of God?

What am I doing now for his glory?

What do I propose to do in the future?

If we can answer these questions aright, whether or not we live to see the winding up of this mysterious dispensation, we shall all feel that we have not lived in vain?

Prayer-meetings were held at eight o'clock each morning of the Conference, and a praise-meeting on the morning after. The forenoon and afternoon gatherings were in the pretty new mission-hall of the Free St. George's Church, and the evening meetings in the Greyfriars Established Church. The day meetings were on the whole well attended, mainly by ladies, while the church was always full in the evening. The President observed at the first forenoon meeting that doubtless we should be favoured with a great body of valuable teaching, and his prediction was verily fulfilled. As one who has attended very many such conferences, the writer cannot recall any where there was such an able, systematic, and complete presentation of Christian doctrine as at this Dumfries gathering. One is almost inclined to think that it was over-weighted with teaching, for practical purposes. It would add greatly, we think, to the usefulness and to the pernament results of such a conference if the purely evangelistic element were made more prominent at the evening meetings, and if the example of Keswick, Glasgow, and other conferences were followed in the direct fostering of missionary zeal and consecration. Perhaps at future conferences these developments will receive attention. The spirit of brotherliness shown was delightful; we can but hope that the union of the platform will give place during the year to unity of effort in every practicable form.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

An industrial exhibition is in process of building in the East-end of Glasgow.

The Established Church of Scotland has lost a warm adherent in the death of Lord Lee, one of the judges of the Court of Session.

It is said that Rev. Fergus Ferguson, D.D., of Glasgow, will be proposed as a candidate for the chair of Church History in the U.P. College, vacant by the death of Dr. Duff.

The "Conditional Immortality Society," it appears, has a branch in Edinburgh. An address was given last week under its auspices, in which the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the human soul was denied, as being contrary to Scripture teaching.

A new German Protestant Church was opened in Glasgow on Saturday last.

Canon Wilberforce is about to visit Edinburgh and Glasgow in order to speak on the Anti-Opium question. His addresses are anticipated with much interest.

Undaunted by the official repudiation of polygamy at Salt Lake City, one of the apostles of the Mormon Church has been seeking recruits at Tranent, with what success public reports do not record.

The Scottish Episcopal Synod has been revising its code of canons. Candidates for ordination must now subscribe their assent to the Book of Common Prayer, as well as to the Thirty-nine Articles.

A great public meeting, advocating the disestablishment of the Scottish Church, was held in the U.P. Synod Hall, Edinburgh, yesterday (Thursday), and was addressed by Principal Cairns, Principal Rainy, and others.

At the recent celebration of Dr. Goold's jubilee in Edinburgh, he was presented with £1000, as a token of affectionate esteem. Dr. Goold stated that during his fifty years of service he had scarcely been off duty for a single week through illness.

There is a strong desire for union existing among the members of the Free and United Presbyterian congregations at Inverary, and it is expected that the two congregations will shortly amalgamate with Rev. D. C. Stewart, of the Free Church, as pastor.

Rev. Dr. Adamson, of the Evangelical Union Church, protests against the Presbyterian bodies thinking that they are "all Scotland." He thinks the Evangelical Union, the Congregational, and the Baptist churches are doing good work, and deserve recognition.

On behalf of the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A., Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's Church, preached an elegant discourse on "Paul at Athens," in the St. Andrew's Parish Church on Sunday evening. Col. Oldham will conduct special Gospel services at the Association during the week of prayer for young men, Nov. 2 to 9.

Special sermons were preached at Dean-street U.P. Church, Edinburgh, on Sabbath last, in celebration of the ministerial jubilee of the senior pastor, Rev. Dr. Gardiner. The preacher forenoon and evening was Rev. J. B. Hastings, of Newcastle, and in the afternoon Professor Marcus Dods discoursed to an overflowing congregation.

At a meeting of the Glasgow Free Presbytery, Professor Lindsay stated that the slave children, over sixty in number, rescued at Aden, had been transferred to the mission station at Lovedale. Some of the Cape newspapers, not over friendly to missions, had cited the rescue of these children as a splendid example of practical Christianity.

Rev. J. M. Sloan, Dr. H. Bonar's successor, has been advocating greater co-operation between the Presbyterian Churches in ministerial training, in promoting social morals, and in mission work. At a recent Presbytery meeting, Rev. Jas. Wells, of Glasgow, advocated increased co-operation between the Free U.P. bodies, but his motion did not meet with acceptance.

Rev. James Wells, of Pollokshields Free Church, Glasgow, announces as the theme of his prayer-meeting addresses for the ensuing winter, "The prayer meetings of the Bible." In a pastoral letter, summoning his flock to renewed activity after their holidays, Mr. Wells expresses the hope that they have not, by neglecting Christian fellowship during their travels, laid in a stock of self-reproach.

Farewell was taken of five lady missionaries at a meeting in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on Monday afternoon, last week. Colonel A. G. Young presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Stevenson, Alex. Martin, J. G. Cooper, of Nagpore, and Professor Lindsay. Miss Gardner returns to Bombay; Miss A. E. Henderson, M.D., and Miss Gregory, proceed to Nagpore; and Miss Janet Gilchrist and Miss Mary Gilchrist to Pachamba.

In a letter from Calcutta to the congregation of Mayfield Free Church, Edinburgh, the pastor, Rev. L. Davidson, who is at present taking charge of a congregation in the capital of the Indian Empire—says he believes the missionaries in that land are very far indeed from being overpaid. "On the incomes they receive they must study economy or go into debt." Mr. Davidson has been delivering a course of lectures on "The Teaching of Jesus" to the students of the Free Church College, Calcutta, and, at the request of his hearers, has consented to print them.

LITTLE KATHLEEN.

By Annie R. Butler,

III.—Children's Special Service Mission.

"'I am willing with all my heart,' said he; and with that he opened the gate."—Pilgrim's Progress.

The time spent in Lausanne was, perhaps, almost the happiest of Kathleen's happy little life. She developed rapidly here.

For a long while her parents had rejoiced to see her thoughtful interest in the things belonging to the kingdom of God; but they had been most careful not to force the growth of religious life in her soul. She had been kept as a simple, happy, joyous child; knowing nothing of religious excitement, and with nothing self-conscious or artificial about her. But it was evident that the Bible knowledge which she had been absorbing for years was as seed ready to burst into life.

"'What is conversion, papa?" asked Kathie one day on returning from school, where a book had been read in which conversion was mentioned.

"Oh," said her father, avoiding a direct answer, in his dread of what have been called "manufactured experiences," "conversion means many things. For example, French officers say to their soldiers, 'Conversion à droite!' when they want them to 'right about face.'"

"Ah," said Kathie, thoughtfully, "but it wasn't that, papa, that was meant."

When Kathleen was nine years old, Mr. Arrowsmith came to Lausanne, on his way both to and from Italy, and held special services for children. To these Kathie was taken. They were the first of the kind that she had ever attended; and, as she listened to the preacher's wise and loving words, her heart, like a young roe upon the mountains, fairly bounded to the Saviour.

But the story of this time is best given in Mr. Arrowsmith's own words. He thus writes:

"The first time I saw Kathleen Webber at the Children's Service in the Salle des Concerts at Lausanne, I was much struck with her deep earnestness and attention. She never took her eyes off me; and, day by day, the impression seemed to deepen, until I felt sure the dear child wished to decide for Christ. One Sunday afternoon I invited any who wanted help to come into an adjoining room; and I had only just reached it when Kathleen entered, and, approaching me with an anxious little face, said,

"'Mr. Arrowsmith, how do we come to the Lord Jesus?'

"'Well,' I replied, 'when you have done wrong, what do you do?'

"'I go to my mother, and tell her I am sorry.'

"'Does she forgive you?'

"'Oh yes, at once; and then I am happy again.'

"'This is just what you must do with the Lord Jesus: tell Him you are sorry for your sins; thank Him for taking your punishment; and believe his promise: "Him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out."'

"'What, is that all?' and a look of great relief passed over the little girl's face.

"'Yes,' I replied, 'that is all; and you may go to Him now.'

"'Then I will at once.'

"She knelt down, prayed earnestly, and rose from her knees with such a bright and happy expression as told me she had indeed trusted in her Saviour's love."

Thenceforward, little Kathleen's life flowed on in a deeper channel. Though still, as ever, —and more than ever—the joy, the sunbeam, the very light of her home, the best strength of her child-nature went out now in love to God, and in trust in his love to her. In writing to tell her father, who was in England, that she had given herself up to Christ, she added—

"And I do love my Bible so. I know you will be glad to hear that."

One Sunday afternoon Mr. Arrowsmith gave notice that he wished the children to pay special attention to his address on the following Sunday, adding that he hoped they would try to write it out from memory for him during the following week. He offered a prize for every age, from eight to sixteen. The children were to take no notes, and to have no help from anyone. Kathie was eager to compete, and asked her mother's permission.

"Well," said her mother, "I should not wish you to try only for a prize—and, indeed, you would not be likely to get one; for most of the other children have been educated in England, and can write English much better than you—but if you like to try, just to give Mr. Arrowsmith pleasure, and to see how well you can do, and will promise not to be disappointed if you do not get a prize, why, then you may do it."

Nearly all the week following the eventful Sunday, Kathie was busy with what she called her "brouillon" (rough copy). She did not show it to her mother, nor did Mrs. Webber look at it. Just once the little woman asked:—

"Do you think you might tell me how to spell a word?"

"I think not," the wise mother answered. "A mistake in spelling will not matter; but it will matter a great deal to be able to say that you did it all yourself."

On Friday a fair copy was made of the sermon, and when it was quite ready—nearly six foolscap pages of small roundhand writing—it was shown to Mrs. Webber. She was quite astonished to find how much the child had remembered! And the composition was equally wonderful for a little girl of nine, whose school education had been entirely in French.

The time for giving in the exercises came and passed; and the day arrived for another children's service. And now Kathie came home in great excitement.

"Oh, what do you think, mother? Mr. Arrowsmith thanked the girls for their papers; and he said that there was one little girl who had written out his address almost word for word. What a good memory she must have had! And what a splendid English education!"

Not for one moment did it occur to her that the "little girl" referred to might be herself. Nor was such a possibility hinted at before her. But how her face beamed with delight when the day came for the names of those who had gained prizes to be read out! She had had an intimation from Mr. Arrowsmith that she had been successful, but this she had kept to herself, only skipping along to the meeting in a state of delighted excitement, her tongue running on even faster than her feet; and placing herself on arrival just where she might be able to watch the expression on her mother's face when her own name was mentioned.

Not only was her paper the best of those written by children of her own age, but, with the exception of one or two written by girls of fifteen and sixteen, it was the best that Mr. Arrowsmith had received at all.

Kathie's joy about her prize was a thing to be remembered. She fairly danced with delight at the thought of the "surprise" this would be for her father, who was still in England.

Singularly appropriate to this dear child's case was the text which Mr. Arrowsmith had chosen for his test sermon—"Thou hast put gladness in my heart.'

She was literally bubbling over with gladness. How distinctly her mother can see her still, as she bounded to her one morning before breakfast, with the exclamation—

"Oh, mother, such a lovely portion in 'Walking in the Light' to-day!"*

The following lines, found after God had taken her, must have been written about this time. As to rhythm and rhyme, they might have been more perfect had the fluent little French scholar written her Magnificat in the current language of Switzerland. But, as the expression of her heart, they are very touching; and they contain the very A B C of all true theology.

A LITTLE HYMN BY KATHIE WEBBER.

O happy day wherein I found
That Jesus died for me,
That He left his home on high to come
And save a sinful child like me;

That Jesus loved the naughty children
Quite like He did the good;
That He would save me if I came
And told Him all;
That He would wash my sins away
And make me happy all the day!

And now for ever I am safe
Within his happy fold,
Where none can reach me,
And none take me away.

And, if I love Him, when I die
Then He will take me home on high,
Where tears and sorrows cannot go:
Yes, He will take me home!

As may be imagined, Kathie was greatly attached to Mr. Arrowsmith. She came home from school one day greatly excited. She had seen in a shop-window something which she would "so much like to give him as a remembrance of her." It was a pen-wiper with a little dove upon it.

"It costs only forty-five centimes (4½d.); but then I have only got ten centimes left (1d.). Mother, I will learn four collects perfectly, if you will give me ten centimes for each." This was often done when the children wanted to earn a little money.

The fifty centimes in her possession, Kathie went off next day, with one of her brothers, to buy her gift; and presently she came back, almost breathless with excitement, to exhibit it.

"Mother dear, I was very undecided in the shop; because there was a note-book which Herbert liked better than the pen-wiper, and that was only forty centimes. But after all, I thought that, perhaps, Mr. Arrowsmith would rather have this, because it will last so much longer. You know, mother dear, I would much rather give forty-five centimes and have what he would like."

Mrs. Webber could scarcely help smiling. But earned halfpennies have their full market value in the eyes of little ones of nine.

Lessons of the Harvest.

"He reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest."—Jer. v. 21.

(1) The harvest is God's gift each year.—See whole of verse, "that giveth." Not left to chance, nor is the return of harvest to be explained simply by the laws of nature. The devout soul looks beyond nature up to nature's God. See Psa. civ. 14, cxxxvi. 25; John vi. 31 (Manna. Exod. xvi. 15); 1 Tim. vi. 17. How do we receive his gifts? Thankfully, or with no thought of the Giver? We have no claim upon God. His gifts are all of grace.

(2) The harvest is appointed.—There is in this a reference to Gen. i. 11, 12, and again to Gen. viii. 22. This latter was spoken by God to Noah immediately after the deluge. That promise was based on sacrifice (v. 20 21). The harvest is therefore sure, because of God's own word. But if one word of God is so sure, so is every word. See Acts xvii. 31.

(3) The harvest is a picture of the world's harvest.—It is an annual reminder of Matt. xiii. 39. "The harvest is the end of the world" = of this age or dispensation (see Rev. xiv. 15). Each year's harvest is a token and pledge that all that remains yet unfulfilled in God's Word shall in due time be accomplished (see 2 Pet. iii. 8, 9).

(4) Harvest speaks of fruit, and that fruit being ripe.—See Mark iv. 29: "But when the fruit is brought forth (marg. 'ripe') immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come."

God looks for fruit (see John xv. 2-8; Matt. xiii. 8, 23).

What is this fruit? (see Gal. v. 22, 23). In one word—holiness (2 Pet. iii. 14).

Harvest speaks also of separation.—Not all parts of what is reaped is equally valuable. Till the harvest the wheat is mingled with the tares, and with the chaff. The harvest is the time when the separation will take place (Matt. iii. 12, xiii. 30). Wheat = true believers. Chaff or tares = unbelievers, mere professors who have never been born again. The one safely housed—the other burnt up as worthless. Wheat—safely garnered—"gather the wheat into my barn" = heaven (Matt. xiii. 30; John xiv. 2, 3). Description of this garner given us in Rev. xxi. No admission to anything but wheat (Rev. xxi. 27). Chaff—burnt up (Matt. iii. 12). So the tares (Matt. xiii. 30, 40-42). See John xv. 2, 6; Mal. iv. 1. This future depends on one thing only—Am I Christ's or no? Not have I wealth, or learning, or a good standing with my neighbours, but have I grace? Have I been born again? If chaff now, you may yet become wheat. The winnowing time not yet come (2 Cor. vi. 2), but may soon be here. No time to delay.

(6) Harvest time a time of joy.—The husbandman rejoices at the reward of his toil and his patient waiting. See Deut. xvi. 11, 14, 15; Isa. ix. 3.

Note the joy of Jesus. Isa. liii. 11: "He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied." Heb. xii. 2: "Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross."

In this joy also the believer will share when safely garnered. (See Matt. xxv. 21-23.) "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." What a solemn contrast in v. 30, spoken of the doom of the unprofitable servant, "where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth."

A HARVEST SONG.

"Saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth; and the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil; and they shall hear Jezreel."—Hosea ii. 21, 22.

Hungry men and women sadly sighed for bread;
Starving sheep and cattle clamoured to be fed.

Loud they raised their voices to the grass and corn:
"Sprout and grow and ripen, leave us not forlorn!"

Corn and grass and fruit-tree called unto the ground:
"Sap supply, and nourish, make our fruits abound."

Then the ground sent upward pleadings to the air:
"Send the softening rain-cloud, fertile soil prepare!"

But the heavens were cloudless, so to God they cried:
"Thou alone canst help us. Be our need supplied!"

Then the good Lord hearkened unto heaven's prayer,
And the gathering vapours quickly did prepare.

Then the heavens granted what the earth had sought,
And the plenteous showers wondrous changes wrought.

Then the earth, rejoicing, answered grass and wheat,
To their roots supplying life-sap, fresh and sweet.

Then the corn and fruit-trees answered human cries,
And a plenteous harvest gave them rich supplies.

Wondrous round of causes in a close-linked chain!
Yet, without the First Cause, each would be in vain.

Help us, Lord, to summon powers we have to aid;
Thee in all invoking, faith upon Thee staid!

Give the strength to labour, bless each field and tree;
Praise for rain and harvest be alone to Thee!

THE DODS AND BRUCE CASES.

In consequence of the decisions of the last Free Church General Assembly in the cases of Drs. Dods and Bruce, a statement has been prepared embodying the views of those ministers and office-bearers of the Church who found themselves in a minority on that occasion. The statement sets forth in detail the reasons of dissent from the judgment of the Assembly. In the case of Dr. Dods the finding of the Supreme Court is protested against on the following grounds:—

(1) Because it involves a radical change—amounting to a revolution—in the doctrine hitherto maintained by the Church in regard to Holy Scripture.

(2) Because the views in regard to Holy Scripture now for the first time openly tolerated by the General Assembly are contrary to the plain import of the Confession of Faith.

(3) Because the view now tolerated alters entirely the relation of the Church and of the individual to the Scriptures, and is sure to lead to their rejection even as a Rule of Faith and Life.

(4) Because the view thus tolerated contradicts the testimony of Scripture regarding itself, and very specially contradicts the testimony of our Lord.

With regard to Dr. Bruce, the dissentients regard the finding of the Assembly as eminently unsatisfactory, inasmuch as that court "had received from Dr. Bruce no retractation or adequate explanation of statements, which, to use the words of the College Committee, have undoubtedly created difficulty and perplexity in the minds, not merely of ignorant but of well-read and considerate persons, and no assurance that he would not make the same or similar statements in future." The finding is further regarded as unsatisfactory because it "even fails to give adequate expression to the strongly condemnatory opinion of the College Sub-Committee," and because it represents feebly and inadequately the gravity of the case.

In their conclusion the dissentients say:—

We deny that a decision of one Assembly, or any number of Assemblies, can alter the Church's relation to her Standards, and especially to her supreme Standard—the Bible.

When the highest court of our Church has nothing more to say to those who have publicly spoken in a depreciatory manner of doctrines hitherto cherished among us as most sacred truth, than to declare anew the faith of the Church, or to remind them that they are bound to express themselves with essential loyalty to the Church's faith—when it meets the publication by her accredited teachers of opinions which represent Scripture as containing erroneous statements, the result of ignorance or bias on the writers of Scripture, by timidly declaring the Church's view, or finding that there has been a want of due care in modes of statement and manner of handling debated questions, but refusing to take any action against them as teaching what is at variance with the Standards of the Church, we tremble to think whereunto this may grow.

We feel constrained, first, seriously and urgently to ask the Church to take effective measures to secure that the young men who offer themselves for the work of her ministry shall be protected from such danger to their faith, and shall be trained in sympathy with her doctrinal Standards.

In the course of the debate on the case of Dr. Bruce, Principal Rainy said that "Dr. Bruce, and he would add Dr. Dods, must carry on their teaching in the class and elsewhere from their own convictions." But surely professors are the servants of the Church, and she is bound to take care that the convictions from which they teach are in harmony with her creed.

Secondly, we ask the Church to take effective measures to secure that those who, of their own free will, agree to act as her professors or ministers, and subscribe to her creed as containing the views of Divine truth which they believe and are prepared to teach, should be held bound to fulfil the engagement which they have voluntarily made. This is surely in accordance with the simplest principles of morality and common honesty.

Thirdly, in view of the uncertainty caused by the decisions of the last Assembly, we deemed it to be necessary that the Church should declare anew the whole doctrine of Scripture which she regards as taught in her Standards and as binding on her office-bearers. We, who before ordination solemnly declared that we "believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be"—not merely to contain, but to be—"the Word of God," desire to know what the Church now understands by the "Word of God"; and we cannot rest until we have a clear, unambiguous decision on that point. If there are errors in the original Scriptures, we are entitled to know how and where the dividing line is to be drawn between the true and the erroneous: for we cannot believe that the Church intends her ministers to proclaim error as the truth of God, or to ascribe error to the God of truth.

The development of events must determine the course of action to be followed in order to secure these desired ends. Since as yet it is only by the action and declaration of last General Assembly that the wrong complained of has been done, we resolve in the first instance to take all the steps in our power through the radical courts of the Church to obtain an equally authoritative declaration from a future General Assembly, such as will rectify that wrong, restore the unity and brotherly love so essential to the well-being of the Church, and, what is of still more vital consequence, retain "the good-will of Him that dwelt in the bush."

We trust that, by the blessing of God, such action will be successful. But if, after the use of this and all competent means, the desired result cannot be attained, grave questions will arise as to the possibility of a Church whose members are not at one on matters so fundamental continuing united. Meantime, however, we earnestly trust that because of the great interests at stake, and with a view to the defence of the truth, those office-bearers and members who agree with us will abide by the Church at this crisis; and we invite all such to join with us in devising the best course to be pursued, in order to prevent the evil consequences which we dread as the result of the proceedings now brought under review; and to secure that the Free Church of Scotland may continue as heretofore to testify, both for the truth of the whole Scriptures, and for the whole truth which she has found in these Scriptures.

DUBLIN Y.W.C.A.—A joint public meeting of the Dublin and district branches of the Y.W.C.A. was held in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, on Thursday night last. The hall was crowded in every part, and addresses were delivered by Miss Bradshaw from China, Miss Reynolds, Mrs. Noble, and others. Miss Bradshaw made an eloquent appeal to the women present to do something for the millions of Chinese women who had not heard of Christ.

A NEW FEATURE was introduced into the Church Congress at Hull, which met with much approval, and will, we trust, be followed up on future occasions. On the Sunday following the week in which the gatherings took place, a few speakers were invited to remain behind to conduct a kind of mission among the working classes. Hengler's Circus and the Public Rooms were secured, and after divine service on Sunday evening both rooms were packed, the former with young men, and the latter with young women. Admittance was by ticket, and the women's gathering was so crowded that an overflow meeting had to take place. Hengler's Circus contains some 3500 seats, and all were occupied by young men. Rev. H. Foster Pegg, of Birmingham, was the clerical missioner. He was assisted by two laymen, Mr. Heaton, and Major Seton Churchill. These three conducted the meeting for about an hour and a half, and to the end the young men seemed deeply interested.—The Rock.

GENERAL AND MRS. BOOTH,

Of the Salvation Army.

IT were needless to multiply words in introducing to our readers the distinguished Christian workers whose portraits we give this week. They have for a number of years been prominently before the world, and held in high esteem, even by many who have not been able uniformly to endorse their methods of operation, for the beautiful force of character and devotion to duty which they have had grace to display.

WILLIAM and CATHERINE BOOTH have from the first been the life and soul of the Salvation Army. In fact, the Army is an evangelistic engine of their combined creation. Mrs. Booth has at length finished her course. She passed away on Saturday week at Clacton-on-Sea, after a painful illness extending over nearly three years. Mr. Booth, the sagacious and untiring General, carries on the work at headquarters, with the assistance of his devoted children and many other able helpers. In a letter to his comrades, the General says:—

Anticipated, the uppermost thought in my mind, known to be inevitable for two long years and eight months, dreaded as one of the darkest human shadows that could fall upon my poor life, death has come and taken away my darling wife, the beloved partner of my soul.

As well as she was able she joined us in singing the old song—

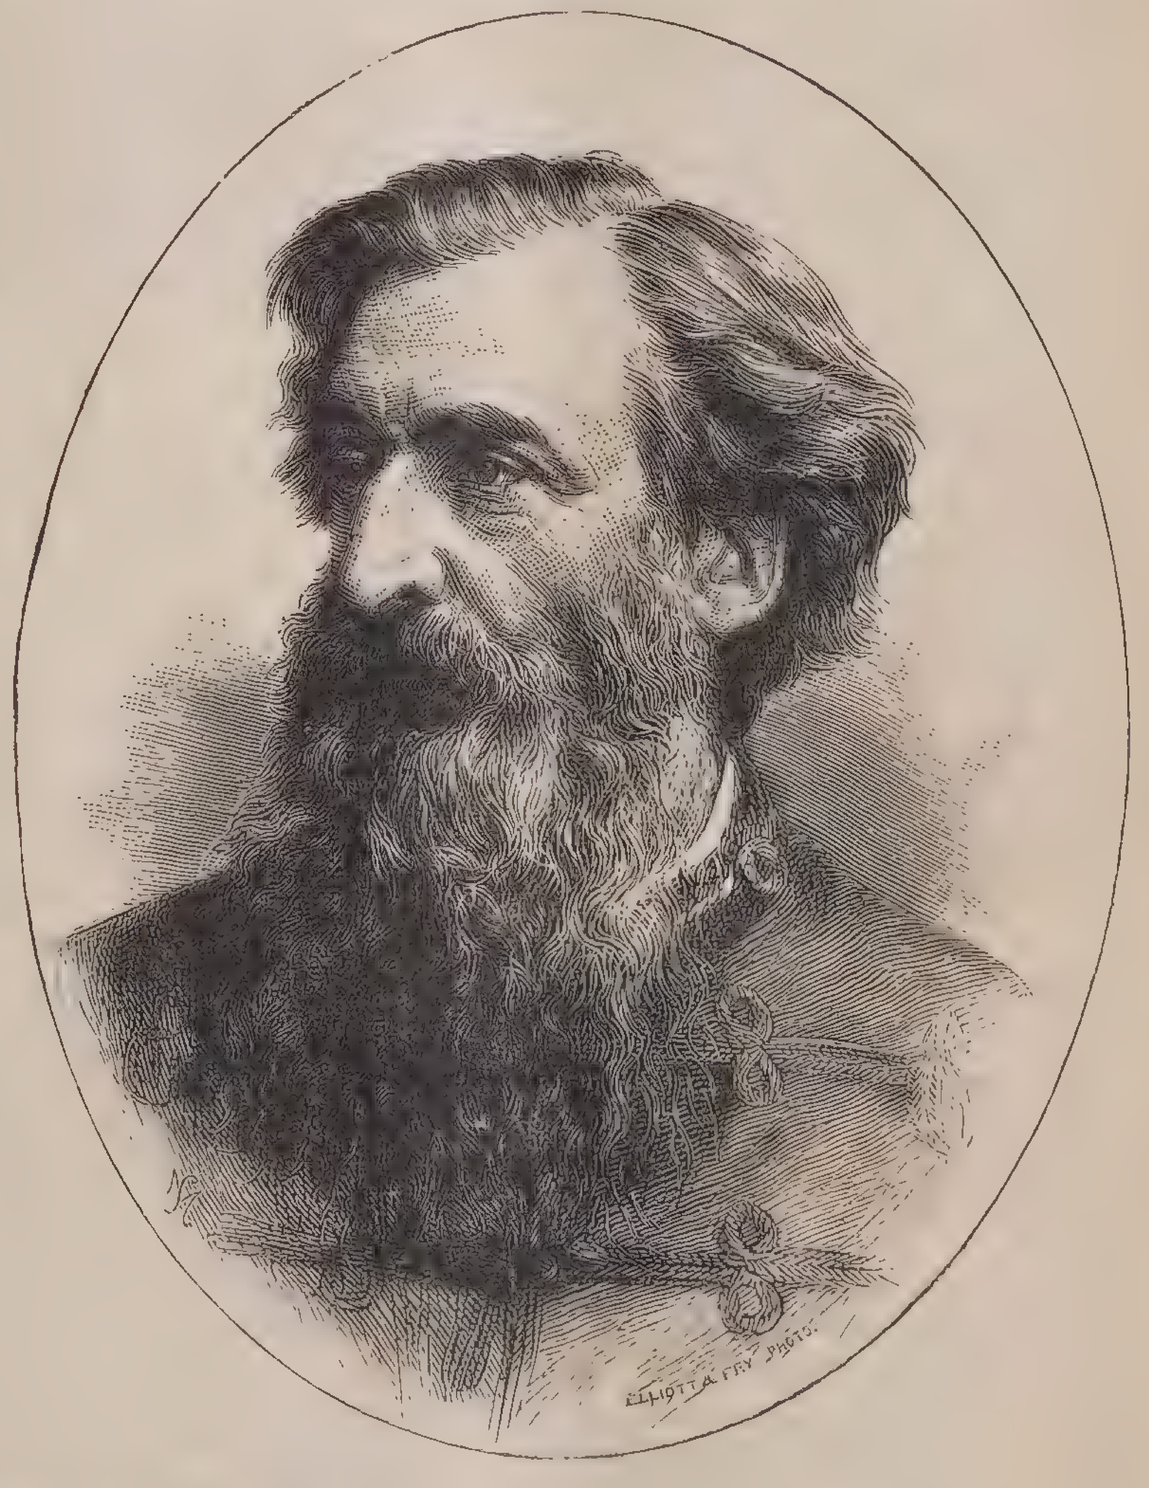
I will love Thee in life, I will love Thee in death,
And praise Thee as long as Thou lendest me breath,
And say when the death-dew lies cold on my brow,
"If ever I loved Thee, my Jesus, 'tis now."

And then she kissed me and slipped away. I had been compelled of late days to pray, in view of her long-drawn agony, that the Saviour would, in pity, open the gates, put out his arms, and take her in. This is what actually happened.

She was, in a wonderful sense, a lover of mankind; no difference of circumstance, or of race, or of sex, or of age, made any difference to her. To be a human being alone, in any sort of need—and where is there one that is not?—commanded her sympathy. If she had preferences, it was where the need was greatest. The greater the weakness, or the more dire the disease, or the more utter the friendlessness, there her heart's pitying love ran out the strongest. I need not say that in this visitation the Army suffers loss. It is quite true that she was the "Army Mother." This relationship, almost universally recognised, had grown up, like so much of the Army, without any set arrangement or design.

Ever since our first meeting, now nearly forty years ago, we have been inseparable in spirit—that is in all the main thoughts, feelings, and purposes of our lives. On no single question of any importance have we ever acted independently of each other's views. I am far from laying any claim to infallibility of judgment on her behalf, or of freedom from human infirmities. But to me, with all her imperfections, she has been made of God never-failing sympathy, reliable wisdom, and unvarnished truth—in short, all that is noble and good, and consequently a tower of strength, a mine of wealth, and an ever-flowing fountain of comfort and joy.

Thoroughness was one of the most prominent elements in her character; what she did she did with her might, and she did it well. And it seemed as though, if there is an angel who specially sees to the fulfilment of the tasks of the saints, that he exacted to the uttermost the measure of work and suffering that had been put down to her.



(From Photographs by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, W.)

The development of the Salvation Army is a story well in the memory of grown-up people. Broadly speaking it is the story of the life of General Booth and his late wife. Born in Nottingham in 1829, William Booth entered the ministry of the Methodist New Connexion at the age of twenty-one. He at once realised his sphere as a mission preacher, and for years did good work in various parts of the country. In 1861, not willing to settle down to circuit work as desired by the Conference of the Connexion, he withdrew from the regular ministry, in order to devote himself to labour among the multitudes who never attended any place of worship at all. He had married, some six years previously, an earnest Christian young woman of his own age, and essentially after his own heart, Miss Mumford, a native of Ashbourne, in Derbyshire. Mrs. Booth had, moreover, begun to preach, and she fully concurred with her husband's resolve to "travel" in a "circuit" of simply unlimited dimensions.

In the early days of their happy union, Mr. Booth often urged his wife to speak to the congregation; but, though she longed to do so, her natural diffidence held her back. But at last the occasion came. Her husband was one day conducting a service before a congregation of about a thousand, when, to use her own words, Mrs. Booth "felt the Spirit come upon her." The devil said, "You are not prepared to speak. You will look like a fool and have nothing to say." This taunt settled it. She said, "Ah! this is just the point. I have never yet been willing to be a fool for the sake of religion, now I will be one," and without stopping another moment she rose up in the seat and walked up the chapel. The minister gave his wife a hearty welcome, and requested silence for her. She "just got up and told the people how it came about." Some months afterwards her husband fell sick, and she not only took his place in the pulpit but discharged all his pastoral duties, at the same time managing to take care of her four little children, the eldest little over four. "While I was nursing my baby," she wrote, "many a time I was thinking of what I was going to say next Sunday, and between times noted down with a pencil the thoughts as they struck me."

Free from denominational restraints, Mr. Booth travelled from place to place, often attended by his wife, and in such chapels as were open to them they conducted evangelistic meetings. This filled up the time until 1864, when they removed to London, with the avowed object of taking the Gospel to the most neglected classes of the population. The East-end was the sphere chosen, and here the Christian Mission was founded in 1865. Years of solicitude for the fallen and toil for the enlightenment of the ignorant followed. If, on the one hand, the experiences of the workers were very painful, on the other there was much to encourage. Undoubtedly God's blessing crowned the efforts that were put forth, and by degrees an unpretending organisation grew into a movement which has of late made itself mightily felt throughout the world.

The workers were a nondescript body, and, as they had no distinctive titles, their rough but friendly hearers designated them "captain," thus recognising them as leaders in the war against sin. This gave a military complexion to the efforts of the Mission, the name of which was changed in 1878 to "The Salvation Army." The change came about in a very simple way. In correcting a printer's proof, Mr. Railton (afterwards Commissioner in the Army) defined the Mission as "a volunteer army of converted working people." "No," said Mr. Booth, "we are not volunteers, for we feel we must do what we do, and we are always on duty." He crossed out the word "volunteer," and wrote "salvation." This was without hesitation adopted as a designation of the organisation, which was formally reconstituted after careful study of the manuals of the British Army.

The Salvation War was at once begun in dead earnest. If Mr. Booth was General, Mrs. Booth was as good as "better half." Though naturally timid, she became so absorbed in the undertaking that she developed great powers of organisation. She brought up a family of eight children, five sons and three daughters, all of whom, with the exception of one who is in delicate health, are now effective "helpers in the war"; at the same time she preached the Gospel, and advocated on many platforms the cause of the poor and ignorant. Measure after measure was added to the round of Salvation effort, and the flag of the Army was unfurled in many lands. To-day there are 2864 corps, scattered over 32 different countries, with 9349 officers exclusively devoted to the work, as well as 13,000 non-commissioned officers rendering valuable service. There are 30 Training Garrisons, all in London; 24 Homes of Rest; 30 Rescue Homes for Fallen Women; 5 Shelters, and 3 Food Depôts. These figures very imperfectly indicate the magnitude of the operations of the Army, which, so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, has made its influence felt in the most out-of-the-way villages as well as the large centres of population. We cannot but think that the development of the Army is due to God's blessing upon single-eyed and untiring labour for his glory. The exertions that have been put forth are in more senses than one without precedent or parallel; if every experiment has not succeeded, certain it is that few have really failed. As an instrument for moral and religious enlightenment, as well as social betterment, the Army is the product of the brain and energy of Mr. and Mrs. Booth. The steam in the engine has been the Gospel of the grace of God, and this has admittedly been inspired from the Lord Himself, who has honoured the love and labour of his servants.

The death of Mrs. Booth affords fitting occasion for some words of her work in connection with the Army. To begin with, her active interest did much to secure for women equal rights and privileges in the movement. She was a preacher and teacher; that fact made it easy for others of her sex to discharge such functions under the Army auspices. Righteousness of life she understood to include personal purity and total abstinence from intoxicating drinks. From the beginning of her ministry she was an advocate of teetotalism, which is now obligatory on every candidate for admission to the Army. The plain uniform of the Salvation women was also adopted at her instance. She was the pride as well as the joy of her husband, who in a biographical sketch some time ago said:—

"There may be unions as thorough and perfect as ours has been, but not very many, as far as my observation has gone. I never could have expected to find a being who so nearly answered to my ideal of the wife I wanted, as I did in the woman who linked her fate with mine, and who has ever since been my comrade in the fight. How she has helped me as companion, friend, counsellor, and not least, as the mother of our children, I pause not to describe. If personally I have, in the hands of God, had to do with the origination of this remarkable movement, if I have stood to it in the relation of a father, surely my precious wife may be truly considered to have been its mother.

Mrs. Booth had the comfort of knowing that she had not lived in vain. She had used her powers for the glory of God, and had seen "signs following." As a preacher she was eloquent and forcible; her word was with power and much assurance. She not only spoke in public, but wrote several books, including "Practical Religion," "Godliness," "Aggressive Christianity," "Life and Death," "Popular Christianity," and "The Salvation Army in relation to Church and State." Nothing in regard to Mrs. Booth is more deserving of mention with the highest praise than the fact that, while she rendered essential assistance to her husband, she was, above all things, an exemplary and devoted mother. The kindly tone of the secular Press must have been very gratifying to General Booth and his family, in the great sorrow which has fallen upon them.

Of the General but few words need be added. He is a celebrity of world-wide fame. Ready and direct in speech, he has exercised a great power among the masses, and exercised a great influence upon many who would elevate them and bring them to Christ. He has written several books, and at the present time many are looking forward to the publication of his new work on the great social problems of our time: "In Darkest England, and the Way Out." He has round about him many able advisers and zealous friends. We fervently trust that with their co-operation he will ever be sustained in real work for God, that in motive and method, in substance and in form, he will be enabled to show himself more and more a workman approved of God.

MRS. BOOTH'S FUNERAL.

During last week many thousands of persons visited the Congress Hall, Clapton, and "looked upon the face of Mrs. Booth" through a glazed aperture in the coffin. On Monday evening a memorial service was held at Olympia, attended by over 25,000 people. The proceedings had to be arranged in a manner suited to the vastness of the building. Speaking was not attempted, for it would not have been possible for an ordinary voice to be heard by the entire assemblage. The service was, therefore, conducted by programme, figures exhibited from the platform directing those present to the successive exercises. The endeavour was to impress saints and sinners with the lessons of Mrs. Booth's life. As the programme worded it: "We trust and believe that the dearest wish of Mrs. Booth may be realised—the salvation of many souls, the dedication of others to a life of desperate, true-hearted war, for the re-conquering of the world in the strength of the Almighty."

The coffin was borne in the midst of a long procession. The service was a remarkably impressive one. The singing was hearty; the moments of silence for prayer, the reading of passages of Scripture, and meditation upon "messages" from Mrs. Booth's writings, were attentively observed. Hymns of appeal, encouragement, and consecration alternated with the various "messages," and at last the audience was instructed to kneel and read a prayer of covenant with God. This was a solemn season, and it is hoped that the words were duly weighed by those who took them upon their lips. The three concluding paragraphs were :—

"Blessed Jesus, the world despises Thee, but I love Thee; for thy sake I separate myself from the world, from its amusements, from its friendships, from its fashions, and from its sins; and I now promise that I will follow Thee with all my heart, obey Thee with all my strength, cleave to Thee with all my affection, and fight for Thee all my days.

"All I have, and all I hope to be, I lay upon thy altar, for joy or for sorrow, for loss or for gain, asking only that I may have the high privilege of sharing with Thee the suffering of thy cross, and the honour of bringing glory to thy name, and salvation to the precious souls for whom Thou hast died.

"And now, O God, I go forth to trust in Thee, to obey Thee, to witness for Thee. Into these solemn covenants I enter relying upon THY POWER to enable me to keep the sacred promises I have this day made before Thee. And so shall this covenant be ratified in heaven."

"Just as I am" was then sung, after which the members of General Booth's family rose on the platform and sang the following chorus, as they sang it around the death-bed of Mrs. Booth :—

We shall walk through the valley and the shadow of death,
We shall walk through the valley in peace;
For Jesus Himself will be our Leader
When we walk through the valley in peace.

The most touching scene of all was reached at this stage. The stanza was sung twice. At the first singing (adopting the words of The Times report), General Booth attempted to rise, but fell back in his seat overcome, but the second time the verse was given he made an effort, rose, and joined in the singing. Then, in dead silence on the part of the assembly, while the bands played, a lesser procession than the original one filed out of the building, and the coffin was placed in an annexe, to await removal for interment.

The doxology concluded the proceedings, which ended in the same spirit as they began: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord."

The remains of Mrs. Booth were interred on Tuesday at Abney Park Cemetery, in the presence of an immense concourse of people. The procession from the Victoria Embankment was very imposing.

ROTTERDAM SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY.—Many signs of blessing have attended this unsectarian work for the spiritual and moral welfare of English seamen visiting the port, who themselves opened a subscription list for a steam launch, which has taken the place of the rowing boat formerly used to bring seamen to the services ashore. The report records incidents and expressions which show the men's appreciation of refuge from the dangers of a foreign port afforded by services, reading-room, and the temperance and hospital work; and the seamen have themselves contributed some measure of financial support to the Institute. The secretary is Mr. F. M. Walker, 344, Verlengde Binnenweg, Rotterdam.

GARFIELD HOUSE, RYDE, I.W.—During a profitable and happy stay at Garfield House, Ryde, a new busy little world of activity and usefulness has been opened up to me in connection with the Y.W.C.A. New to me, but not to others; for, during the summer, some hundreds of young people have found here an agreeable holiday after months of toil, and refreshment for body and spirit. Garfield House is but a few minutes' walk from the pier, the starting-point for all the various pleasure trips by boat and train in which the younger people delight. The Home is held open all through the winter for young women in business, and also for Christian ladies of small means but large hearts, who may be glad to find a sphere of quiet usefulness added to the great advantages of a sojourn in this beautiful island. Attached to the Home is the Mission Hall of the Y.W.C.A., where Bible-classes, lectures, and services are held. Any further particulars can be obtained by applying to the Lady Resident.

RIGHTEOUS JUDGMENT.

"They who are blessed by Him shall inherit the earth, and they that are cursed by Him shall be cut off."—Ps. xxxvii. 22.—Dr. Kay.

I am reminded of an old proverb of awful import, which in these wars and devastations applies to the conquerors as to the conquered: "God may consent, but not for ever," indicating that there is an end, however remote, to all that is not built up in consonance with his laws.—Mr. Helps' "Spanish Conquests."

WITHOUT CHRIST, NOTHING.

"Apart from Me, ye can do nothing." There is the condemnation of all the busy life of men which is not lived in union with Jesus Christ. It is a long row of figures which, like some other long rows of figures added up, amount just to zero. "Without Me, nothing." All your busy life, when you come to sum it up, is made up of plus and minus quantities, which precisely balance each other, and the net result, unless you are in Christ, is just nothing. —Dr. Maclaren.

ELECTION.

When we were chosen by God, we came not up sinful before Him, or imperfectly holy as we are here; but God looked at the utmost end, what He would make us at last, and so He presented us to Christ, upon which presentation Christ was so taken with our beauty that never since can He absolutely delight in us, until He hath sanctified and cleansed us, and made us perfect, having neither spot nor wrinkle, as at first we were presented to Him.—Thomas Goodwin.

TRUE REST.

The true rest
Remaineth ever in the perfect life
Of oneness with God's will: here ends all strife,
Here the missed joy, that could all other quest
Elude, is found, and verily possessed.
"The Light of Life," by Isaac Sharp.

THE SOUL AND THE SEA.

The words soul and sea are from the same root si or siv = seiō (Gr.) to shake; so that the sea is the "troubled and tossing water," and the soul the inward sea, heaving to and fro with the gales of emotion. In Ps. cxxxi. the soul that has been brought under discipline is compared to a child lying at rest on its mother's breast; and Dr. Thomson, speaking of the sea near Sidon, says, "The surf sobs and sighs along the shore like a vexed child sinking to sleep." The wicked—the men in whom the soul reigns uncontrolled—are compared (Isa. lvii. 20) to "the troubled sea when it cannot rest."—Dr. Kay.

THE SOUL AND THE SPIRIT.

The soul is that part of man's constitution in virtue of which he is susceptible of the joys and pleasures, the sorrows and pains, of earthly life, comprising the affections, emotions, and desires. Hence it is apt to sink and droop under affliction, and to lie as a burden upon the spirit of the believer, tempting him to anxiety, querulousness, and infidelity; even as (to borrow Hengstenberg's excellent remark on Ps. xlii. 5) Job's wife tempted her lord. Hence the use of the preposition upon when speaking of the soul as lying dejected and prostrate upon the nobler principle—the spirit. In Ps. clxii. 3, clxiii. 4, the spirit itself is seen thus drooping. This is contrary to the ordinary usage, but may be explained by the supposition of the spirit's being weighed down for the time by sympathy with "the weaker vessel."—Ibid.

THE SECRET OF FRUIT BEARING.

Our only possibility of bearing any fruit worthy of our natures and of God's purpose concerning us, is by vital union with Jesus Christ. If we have not that, there may be plenty of activity and mountains of work in our lives, but there will be no fruit. Only that is fruit which pleases God and is conformed to his purpose concerning us, and all the rest of your busy doings is no more the fruit a man should bear than cankers are roses, or than oak-galls are acorns. They are but the work of a creeping grub, and diseased excrescences that suck into themselves the juices that should swell the fruit. Open your hearts to Christ and let his life and spirit come into you, and then you will "have your fruit unto holiness, and the end, everlasting life."—Dr. Maclaren.

BROMLEY CONVENTION.

A CHRISTIAN Convention was held in the Grand Hall, High-street, Bromley, on Monday, October 6 Rev. C. Hole, Incumbent of Christ Church, was chairman, and spoke from Prov. iii. 13, upon a living Christ as the object of active affection. When we know Him as our wisdom, we understand that the will of the Lord is our sanctification, and we seek to aid others to come into the full realisation of that deeper spiritual life which all believers should attain. Rev. W. Haslam said the purpose of the Convention was for believers to rise to the privileges and responsibilities of the Christian life. Failure lies in the absence of full surrender and a selfish resting in mere pardon. We are created to glorify God, and not to be merely saved. We should think it a misfortune to exhibit in maturity the mental and physical characteristics of childhood; so, to fulfil God's purposes, we must grow up to the full stature of Christian manhood. By the power of an indwelling Christ, we may live the overcoming life.

On Tuesday, Revs. J. B. Figgis, A. C. Downer, W. Latham, Lewellyn Caley, and others took part in the meetings. On Wednesday meetings were again held, morning, afternoon, and evening. At the latter, Rev. A. Cavalier spoke upon the Zenana and Medical missions. There is only one power that can rescue the despised women of India from tyranny and degradation—the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for which doors are abundantly open. Mr. Cooke referred to the work of the North African Mission; and Rev. S. A. Selwyn, Vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, related incidents connected with his work in Central Africa. On Thursday, "Christ in us, "The corruption of the natural heart," and "Victory over sin," were treated of by numerous speakers. On Friday the subjects were "The Overcoming Life," "The Lord's Second Coming," and "Who gave Himself for me"; and Rev. E. Hopkins urged upon Christians the command to be filled with the Holy Ghost. The Convention fitly closed with praise and evangelistic meetings on Saturday and Sunday.

HAMMERSMITH CONFERENCE.—The West London Christian Conference was held in West Kensington Congregational Church, October 6 to 8. The addresses were stimulating, and the seasons of devotion very helpful. Mr. E. Spicer spoke some earnest words on the maintenance of personal religious life. He said: We want prayer in the midst of all our duties, so that all our work may be imbued with its spirit. Rev. E. White delivered an address on Christian work in relation to prevalent evils and vices. He said: There is a need for thorough persuasion of the awful doom coming upon hardened sinners. While the theatres, with some partial improvement, pander to vice, and a corrupt press pours out its stream of impurity, silence is a great sin. The Church would do well to enter on a crusade against these evils, although, of course, terror must not be made an instrument of salvation.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services for the young, to be conducted by Mr. Collier, at Cornwall Hall, Brixton, Oct. 20 to 22.——The work at the new small Hall, New Cross, and that the labourers may be increasingly zealous for the conversion of souls.——The new work at the Deptford Lecture Hall.——Special services in the Temerance Hall Potterne, near Devizes, conducted by Mr. John Elliott.——Special services to be held at Yate (Glos.), from Oct. 21 to 31.——An eight days' mission at Burnley, by Mr. and Miss Parker, commencing Oct. 26.——A fifteen days' mission in St. Nicholas' Church, Carrickfergus, Oct. 18 to Nov. 3, conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken and others.——A mission at Chatham, by Mr. William Forbes, to begin on Sunday, Oct. 19.——A mission at Fulwell-road, Upper Teddington, from Oct. 9 to 29.——That God may mightily bless a Y.M.C.A. newly opened at Devizes, Wiltshire, and that a mission now being conducted there by Mr. W. G. Pope may be much owned by God.——On behalf of an aged parent, that he may see his need of a Saviour and be led to accept Christ.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

Pastor A. Haegert writes:—"A heathen man in Sogle tried to break my head with his club for leading people to Christ. My right hand received the blow, and was broken in three places. Mr. F. Rowat escaped without a scratch, although the people attempted to kill us both. Thank God for preserving our lives. The Christians in Sogle need our prayers and sympathy; they have suffered much for their faith in Christ. Our native preachers were twice assaulted there. Our Christians want to build a small church there.

"Nineteen persons were baptized in Bethel and two in Bethany during June and July. Two new chapels are now completed in Nazadi and Chimdabaha. We are building a new mission station twenty-five miles north, with a church, school-house, ward for patients, etc. It will cost £500, of which we have paid £100. We have stopped building as our Mission box is empty. Since April, patients from thirty villages were attended; twenty lives were saved from death's door; one child was saved from becoming blind; two persons were baptized; and the Gospel has been preached to many. May the Master give us an abundant harvest.

"Last Sunday we had a congregation from twenty villages. One hundred remained for the Lord's Supper. During the morning I had about a dozen patients. One farmer asked medicine for his sick ox, another for his sick buffalo; these four-footed patients behaved well. I heard to-day that both are cured. To the farmers it was a great boon. As for the multitude, when their oxen get ill, they sacrifice goats and sheep to the demons to save them. Our cures destroy heathenism.

"In the afternoon a messenger came, saying, 'Knar (the native pastor) is ill and dying; come at once.' In hot haste I rode to Monohor, six miles east, found Knar alive, and suffering from pneumonia in his right lung; attended and prayed with him. If he died it would be a heavy loss, for he is wise, spiritually-minded, and a tower of strength. The home ride in the dark was rather dangerous, as this is our rainy season, and we have no bridges and roads in our hills. On Monday morning Knar was out of danger. Six children were saved this week from becoming orphans, and two young women were saved from becoming widows. Praise ye the Lord!"

NAPLES.—Rev. T. Johnstone Irving (2, Cappella Vecchia) reports that in the past year there has been much about the work of the Harbour Mission to encourage him. It has been the exception to have a small meeting in the "Bethel." The missionary has found the sailors very accessible, and has been able to distribute amongst them a large quantity of religious literature. The men have been manifestly interested in the Gospel message, the week-day religious and social meetings have been well attended, and it is known that not a few temperance pledges have been faithfully kept. It is cause for thanksgiving to God that the last few years have seen a marked moral improvement in the lives of our seamen generally.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY, E.—At the last monthly Workers' Meeting the chair was occupied by Mr. J. Christian Hukins. The secretary's statement of the work accomplished during the past month was very cheering. An earnest appeal was made for fresh helpers to fill the places of those who have left for work abroad. Dr. Neatby gave a helpful address on the Supper at Bethany, leading his hearers from the place of service typified by Martha's active devotion, to the place of communion as exemplified in the seat that Lazarus shared with Jesus at table, and then up to Mary's place of worship at his feet. Rev. J. G. Fletcher gave a very interesting account of his mission work in Jamaica. His former experience of work at the Rest had, he said, proved an invaluable preparation for missionary effort. The meeting was closed by an earnest request for prayer and financial assistance in aid of the proposed "Rest" at Zanzibar.

THE OPIUM CURSE.

The Peking Anti-Opium Society has addressed the following appeal to "All lovers of virtue in Great Britain":—

We would humbly state that, since opium came to China, it has been like an evil ulcer, daily spreading and putrefying, infecting the whole body from head to foot until there is scarcely a sound piece of flesh thereon. We think you have only heard a vague report. At present six men in ten smoke opium. If so many now are cursed by it, to what will it grow, if not prohibited?

The evil is the greater since by bringing opium to China, she has learned to grow it. Opium stops the cultivation of the soil, squanders property, ruins a man's prospects, makes him lazy, hungry and cold, destroys his good example, causes him to lose his virtuous heart, makes thieves and robbers, estranges brothers, and makes enemies of parents. It causes every sort of crime, destroying body and soul.

Alas! There is no virtuous or benevolent Chinaman, who is not sick at heart at the ruin of opium. If a man fall into fire or water, one would instantly spring to save him, but the danger from opium is greater than from fire or water. Myriads on myriads perish by it. Men all say that the wretch who robs and murders should not be left alive. But the evil poison of opium robs a thousand myriads of their goods and ruins the reputation of myriads on myriads. Who will say: "It should be left in China and not prohibited"?

The Bible says: "I will not eat anything that makes my brother sin." How then can one covet such usury and so kill myriads of men? We have from afar admired your noble country. Your benevolent heart has long been known far and near. How with all your might you stopped the slave trade! But is killing men by opium a less evil? Truly, we fear it is a greater. Recently there was a famine in China. Your noble country generously sent assistance and Chinamen proclaimed your benevolence. But some said: "It were better not to receive your help and die, if only the deadly opium might be stopped and be brought no more to our shores." So it appears your noble country, because of opium, receives a bad name.

Frequently men say of the missionaries: "Your words exhort us to virtue, but your heart conceals poison, since you kill us with opium and carry our money to your own country." Alas! we cannot see you, and pen and ink cannot paint the terrible reality. Although one man cannot move 10,000 lbs., yet one hundred men can. We ask you with united heart: Pray for us and with united strength stop the curse; cast out from China this giant evil and prohibit the traffic. Great will be the benefit to China. We wish you peace.

BEDFORD.—The Gospel Temperance Mission Hall, in Grey Friars-walk, was re-opened on October 2, by Rev. W. Hay Aitken. Services were held for four consecutive days, and all were well attended. Through the kindness of a friend these rooms have been permanently secured, and put into a perfect state of repair for the use of the Temperance Club and Mission Hall. Since the commencement of the Gospel Temperance Mission in Bedford in 1883, a steady and successful undenominational work has been carried on. During the last five years, the energetic missionary, Mr. Crossley Sutcliffe, has been the instrument in God's hands of much good to the town, where he is known and respected by all. It is hoped that under the new conditions, with God's blessing, fresh advance will become possible.

A GOOD WORK IN NORWAY.

It may interest your readers to know something of our Mission in Christiania, Norway. I rejoice to say that God has in a special manner touched the hearts of many and brought them from death into life. Probably, I am at present the only Englishman working as a minister in a Norwegian congregation. From boyhood I have had the constant opportunity, with the exception of some years of college life in England, of observing the customs, character, and life of the Norwegian people.

More than twenty years ago, my father was superintendent at the Varaldso Mines, Hardanger. This place has been the centre of much attraction. The miners, coming from various parts of the country and Sweden, were at first a set of rough, drinking, swearing, and gambling men, often the cause of many wild scenes. The change wrought on them and their families by the Spirit of God, through the preaching of a Saviour's love, temperance work, and the constant and holy example of my dear parents, has well been termed the "turning of a hell into a paradise."

I was led step by step into work for Christ. At Voss, a place well known to tourists, the Lord graciously manifested his power to save.

More than four years ago a new Mission for reaching the multitudes was started in the heart of the capital of Norway. Rev. A. Gundersen commenced the work, and was greatly blessed. Sinners were awakened to see their danger, and many remarkable conversions took place. It has been my privilege to continue the work, and many praise God today for the revelations of his love and saving power during the past year. A number of open-air services have been held. The law forbids meetings in the streets or market places, but private grounds have been placed at disposal, or meetings have been held on the piers, in which case the preacher has taken his stand on some vessel close by, by permission of the owner.

Meetings have also been arranged for the public in large halls, and active interest has been shown for the good work by ministers of several dissenting congregations. Meetings for mutual work and fellowship between Dissenters have also been arranged, and greatly blessed. The Lutheran clergy kept aloof, I am sorry to say. Few meetings have this year been held at which some inquirers have not remained to receive words of advice and consolation. At times the Spirit of God has wrought so mightily that many penitents have sought salvation. The people of God have often in like manner sought and in many cases experienced great blessing.

We feel that our lives ought ever to be a hymn of praise to the glory of so great a Redeemer. Our present hall is far too small, but God will surely listen to the supplications of his people, and crown our further efforts with success. We pray that our work may be remembered at the throne of grace.

PORTSMOUTH AND GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.—After thirty-seven years' service Mr. Henry Cook, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport, is still working on in service for the Lord, in visitation, by means of boat, ketch, and schooner, to ships in harbour, fishermen, soldiers embarking for abroad, lightships and forts, with occasional invitations to social gatherings on board the Mission vessels. Large supplies of Bibles, books, and tracts have been circulated. It is hoped to replace the worn-out schooner by a new and much larger vessel. The Sailors' Mission House at Trouville is now furnished and being used by a resident missionary, who also visits the ships and delivers addresses for English, French, and Scandinavians. The work is welcomed in ports at home and abroad and has resulted in the salvation of many.

COLPORTAGE WORK IN IRELAND.

At the close of the annual Convention in Dublin, an exceedingly encouraging conference was held in connection with the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland. Eighteen colporteurs from the Dublin and Belfast branches were present, the Derry agents having had a meeting of their own earlier in the season. The men had been in attendance during the entire week, and expressed themselves much refreshed by the proceedings of the Convention, and ready to return to their work with renewed zeal.

On Friday, October 3, three meetings were held in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin. At the first, under the presidency of Rev. Thomas Lyle, secretary of the General Board, colporteurs from Cork, Kerry, Waterford, Carlow, Cavan, Leitrim, and Armagh gave details of their work. The testimony of one was that not unfrequently tears rolled down the cheeks of Roman Catholics to whom in his visits he told the story of redeeming love, and impressions became apparent in a way he had never witnessed in the case of Protestants. Another, who stated that the colporteur was an "all-round man," taking part in Sabbath-schools and conducting prayer-meetings, besides being a walking book-shop, considered that the success of himself and his fellow labourers lay largely in preventing scattered Protestants from

LAPSING INTO ROMANISM.

A third carried the audience with him in saying that, whilst he could not ask his fellow-countrymen to join his own denomination, he could bodly ask them to join Christ. Several members of the audience put questions to the men regarding the methods of their work, their difficulties, and encouragements, and obtained prompt and intelligent replies.

The second meeting was largely attended. Mr. John R. Fowler, of Dublin, presided, and emphasised the claims of Ireland upon God's people. Rev. Horace Townsend pointed out the necessity of the circulation of the Scriptures. Rev. R. C. Hallowes, Arklow, also gave a very helpful address. Questions were again put to the colporteurs, the audience taking a deep interest in hearing their views and experiences. In the evening an immense audience assembled, filling both the larger and minor halls, Mr. Paul Askin, J.P., of Dublin, being chairman. An address was given by Rev. Thomas Lyle, who thought the Christians of Ireland ought to be characterised by a love of their country, and a love of the Word of God, and that in offering others the Scriptures, which had been blessed to themselves, they were taking the best means of securing a united Ireland. Three of the colporteurs gave addresses of ten minutes each. The case of one woman was described, who offered her as if it had been gold, and refused to give it up, although she had not sufficient money to purchase it. Of course, she was gladly allowed to retain possession of the coveted treasure. Quite a number of cases illustrative of the good work being carried on were given. Mr. J. R. Fowler stated that the Committee wished, not only to maintain the work, but to increase the number of agents.

Rev. Samuel Reuter, M.A., who had been present at all the meetings, and taken an active part in the proceedings of the entire day, gave expression to the pleasure with which he observed the awakened interest in the work of the Society, and contrasted the attendances at the present meeting with others that had been held previously. Rev. Thomas ("Father") Connellan was warmly received by the large audience. In the course of his able address, he said there was no Christian Irishman but had the question on his heart, "What can I do for Ireland?" He asked himself why it was that his country was less prosperous than other nations? He could not think that Irishmen were less gifted than others, or less capable of doing good work. He was impressed by the fact that the three leading nations of the world —England, the United States, and Germany— enjoyed the free circulation of the Scriptures, and that Ulster, the most prosperous of the provinces of Ireland, had the same privilege. The prosperity of his country would come with an extended knowledge of Gospel truth.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

Dear Sir,—Your readers have from time to time been interested in hearing details of the work of evangelisation amongst the coal miners in the Pas de Calais. I am again in the centre of the coal country, and thankful to report the advance of Gospel truth in the hearts of the people. We have had some good meetings in the cottages, and the unexpected arrival of MM. Réveillaud and Bertrand, of the "Mission Intérieure," has added to the interest of the gatherings. The people crowd to listen to the Gospel, wherever it is proclaimed, and the singing of the hymns is a marvellous means of grace.

At Tergnier (Aisne) the centre of the railway works of the Chemin de Fer du Nord, where 2000 men are employed, we had a most interesting meeting. We had had much prayer about this meeting, and the small Protestant church was crowded, as well as the corridor and staircase. A good many railway men were present, and so earnest was the attention that we prolonged the time considerably beyond the prescribed limit. Workers are greatly needed at Tergnier as well as everywhere else in France. It is the great cry. In many places the presence of a consistent Christian family would be an immense power for good.

I receive letters from pastors, asking for English ladies to go and help in the work. At Laon, the pastor would gladly welcome an English or a French family. It is a grand cathedral town, high and healthy, and with excellent educational advantages. Our tour has been full of interest. One of the best meetings was held in the open air, under a magnificent elm-tree, near Chauny. About 150 assembled.

KENSAL MEDICAL MISSION.—Having felt for some time that a Medical Mission would be a great blessing in this very poor, over-crowded neighbourhood, we started one last February, worked on the same basis as the Medical Missions in St. Giles, Marylebone, &c. It is meant for those really deserving people who are too poor to join provident clubs or dispensaries, and who cannot spare time to attend a hospital. There have been over 900 attendances, and most of these have been restored to health, while many have got new life for their souls. We have none but poor people around us. Our doctor gives his services free of charge, and we have a lady dispenser who also works for nothing, so that our expenses are mainly for drugs, and for providing nourishment for the patients in cases where the doctor finds food is more needed than medicine. We have also a trained nurse. As soon as we can find a Christian lady who is trained in midwifery, we hope to secure her services for the mothers in the district, and we feel sure that this special part of our work will appeal to the sympathies of ladies in the upper classes, who are surrounded with every luxury at such times, while the poor mothers here are often devoid even of proper attendance, to say nothing of the poverty which debars them from even common necessaries. This addition to our staff will, of course, need increased funds, which are earnestly requested, and gifts of clothing, sheets, flannel, air cushions (for invalids), would be most acceptable, as well as monetary gifts.

A VILLAGE EFFORT.

The spiritual darkness of many of our villages and hamlets is proverbial, and how to change it is still, to a great extent, an unsolved problem.

Much has been accomplished by flying visits of evangelists holding tent missions during the summer months, but a great deal more remains to be done before we can hope to see the longed-for change. Meantime Popery is insinuating its presence with stealthy persistence.

What is wanted in such places is concentrated and sustained effort. Where this exists, carried on for the glory of God, there must be good results. As an example, in the little village of Outwood, Surrey, with a population of about 500 souls, a quiet but real work of grace is being carried on by two ladies, Mrs. Alexander and her sister, Miss Dyce.

Led to settle in this neighbourhood some three years since, they were stirred to do something towards brightening the homes and hearts of the people by spreading the light of the glorious Gospel.

Beginning by holding meetings for the people in their own coach-house, the attendance grew until no available room could be found large enough, and so they built one on their own estate. On Sunday afternoons is held a men's Bible-class, with an average attendance of thirty-five members, of whom nearly all are living Christians. Then there are evangelistic services, singing classes, special meetings for women and children—of the latter most belong to the Children's Scripture Union. A nurse, who has received a hospital training, is kept for special work among the sick, and ministers to their spiritual needs at the same time. Many poor children from the East-end of London, in connection with Miss Macpherson's work, can testify, too, of the tonic properties which the Outwood air possesses; for in a cottage set apart specially for their reception they come in batches and stay for a month or five weeks at the time, gaining health and strength, and finding that such a "life is worth living."

Surely there are many children of God, with both the means and the time, who could go and do likewise, and who would receive for their reward the smile and approbation of their Master. This is just the sort of work our country needs. Get the young people of the villages converted, and they will be bright lights when they are drawn to live in the cities.

RAILWAY WORK IN IRELAND.

On Sunday, October 5, two meetings were held to open new premises at 22, Eccles-street, Dublin, which form the Irish centre of the Railway Mission. Under the same roof as the offices is an airy meeting-room, wherein Miss L. Crossle, district secretary, expressed grateful praise to God and thanks to his people for the speedy acquisition of the needed building. Then Miss Power, who sails on the 20th inst. for mission work in China, gave an earnest missionary address. Miss Crossle delivered a similar address in the evening. Collections were made towards the expenses of another worker on the railways in connection with the Cape Mission.

In the market house of the ancient town of Clones, co. Monaghan, the story of the cross has lately been repeated night after night, and has brought new life to the dead and sleeping souls around. Very earnest prayer had been made beforehand, and at the close of the mission, answers were evident. Many friends came forward to help the work. May God give them love and wisdom, issuing in prosperous work in this Clones branch of the Mission. At recent Sunday services in the Union Hall, Newbliss, co. Monaghan, Rev. Mr. Maturin was present and took part in service; and on that stormy day some of those who were present accepted Christ as their Saviour.

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.

This beneficent work is now in its twentieth year. In the past year's report interesting details are supplied by the superintendents of the eight Homes in various parts of London, wherein the lads are sheltered; but the inmates work in outside situations as shop boys, errand boys, and outdoor apprentices, and from their earnings contribute towards cost of maintenance. It is impossible to tabulate results. Many of the boys who are successful in after life, as well as of those who fail, are not heard of again for years. While the Homes accommodate only 350 at one time, a far larger number are benefited by temporary assistance. Some, after a few weeks, are able to obtain indoor situations, others find relatives with whom they can live, while others perhaps return to parents in the country. In such cases, the temporary shelter and comfort is often of great value, saving from dangerous companions; while it is hoped some take away with them religious impressions which may result in changed hearts and lives.

Gentlemen give addresses in the Homes on Sunday and other evenings, and perhaps these homely talks are more suited to the boys than the sermons which they hear in Church; and a powerful influence is found in the consistent Christian lives of some of the elder lads. Educational classes, cricket clubs, and mutual improvement societies provide for recreation and mental growth.

Past neglect and unhealthy employment have made some of the boys physically weak and delicate; but the good food and comforts of the Homes generally do much to restore health and strength. The work has strong claims on behalf of the future working men of our country, by whose characters the nation's future will be determined. Statistics prove that of a lad kept out of prison until he is eighteen there is every hope that he will be kept out altogether.

Many who know the pleasure and value of home life will pity boys who have known neither a mother's love nor a father's care, while their so-called homes have been full of misery, poverty, and drunkenness. One of the matrons asked a little orphan if she could do anything to make him happier. "No, thank you, Mrs. ——, only that you would love me." As far as possible, parental care is gladly undertaken by superintendents and matrons; and all that is required is that necessary funds shall be forthcoming, especially as the year closed with a heavy deficit, and there are heavy expenses to meet for dilapidations in the old premises of two Homes. Left-off clothing and sound and attractive literature will also be acceptable. The office is 18, Buckingham-street, Strand.

THE SCOTCH CHURCH AND YOUNG MEN.—The Young Men's Guild has been holding its sittings in Hamilton. It now has 504 branches, and a membership of 19,827. The growing interest in the Guild Foreign Mission and the hearty support of the effort to erect a church at Kalimpong shows that the mission is fulfilling its purpose. At the conference, the chairman, Rev. George Wilson, of Edinburgh, in summing up a discussion on gambling, said what is needed is to raise the tone of the people. If he were not a Christian, he would say that he did not know a man so much to be despised as the loafer who stood at the workshop door or the street corner, and with slouched gait and evil eye bore down on the man who had just got his wages, and was taking them home to his wife and children, and swept them into that evil net of his. Mr. James A. Campbell, M.P., presided over the public meeting, which was mainly occupied with the subject of Church defence, and Professor Charteris spoke to a resolution pledging the Guild and the meeting to make the Church so useful in good work and so truly a living tree that their could be no woodman who would lay his axe at her root.

MISSION IN HAUTE SAVOIE.

A work was begun in Thonon, a little town of Haute Savoie, on the borders of the Lake of Geneva, a year and a half ago, by two English ladies; at first simply visiting among the people, and holding one Gospel meeting a week in their own kitchen.

Last winter the people came in numbers too great for this, and a small hall was rented. There was then added to the Gospel meeting on Sundays a Temperance meeting on Thursday evenings, reading-room for men two other evenings, as well as children's meetings.

This summer these ladies have been joined by two others from England, one of whom has come specially to devote herself to nursing the sick, a Medical Mission having been opened in connection with the work.

Of course there is opposition, and the people frequenting the meetings have much persecution brought to bear upon them. In many cases employment has been denied to both men and women, and they must have starved but for the help of the missionaries. In consequence of the persecution he had to bear, the owner of the little hall refused to allow it longer to be used for the meetings. It was therefore necessary to seek another room. No one in Thonon would let house or room of any sort to the missionaries, so it became evident that whatever arrangement was made must be done at the mission house (the landlord of which is a Protestant, of Geneva).

The ground floor of the house was a large cellar—not below ground—with the dwelling rooms above. This the ladies have had converted into a comfortable hall, which will seat 160 people. The cost of this with stove and lamps will be about £30.

This coming winter, in addition to what was done last year, it is desired to have women's sewing meetings. There is no industry of any sort in Thonon, and the poverty during the winter is terrible. These meetings will give opportunity for personal conversation with the women, as well as regular Gospel addresses.

The work is well known to Rev. J. G. Gregory (Mr. and Mrs. Gregory having visited the Mission last summer), who would act as referee in England; Rev. A. F. Buscarlet, Lausanne; and Mme. Merle d'Aubigné, Geneva; or communications may be made direct to the missionaries, Miss Larritt and Miss Wilson, Concises, Thonon-les-Bains, Haute Savoie.

CHICAGO. — The Pacific Garden Mission, founded thirteen years ago at 100, East Van Buren-street, by Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, proclaims the Gospel, assists the poor and sick, and seeks to prevent crime. The work seems to be advancing in growth and importance, and its success is largely due to faithful voluntary effort. A Gospel meeting is held once or twice every day in the year, the audiences, ever changing, being made up mostly of young men. Mrs. Clarke visits the county jail two or three times weekly, going from cell to cell for Bible reading, conversation, and prayer. Many prisoners have thus been turned from a criminal life to honesty and godliness.

A CALL FROM THURINGIA.—The new lines of railway in course of construction in this central part of Germany have brought about 3000 Italian workmen—some with their wives and families—into our close vicinity. As no one is in any way attending to the spiritual wants of these poor people, we consider it our duty and privilege to do so, as far as we can, by means of Gospel meetings, distribution of Gospels and tracts, &c. We have made use of a part of Mrs. Robertson's (free distribution of Scriptures) grant of Gospels, but we are in great need of Italian tracts. We should be most grateful, were English friends, at home or in Italy, kind enough to send us any they can spare. Book-post is a very simple and cheap mode of transmission. Anna von Weling.

"ALL FOR JESUS!"

I have heard thy voice, Lord Jesus,
Saying, in thy grace Divine:
"Fear thou not, I have redeemed thee;
I have called thee, thou are mine."
So I come to Thee, Lord Jesus,
So I yield Thee everything,
Answ'ring, "Yea, Thou hast redeemed me;
I am thine, my King, my King!"

All for Jesus! all for Jesus!
All for Him who died for me;
Ever, only, all for Jesus,
Now and through eternity.

I have nothing worth thy taking,
Thou whom highest heavens adore!
But my heart is longing, yearning,
To be thine for evermore;
Longing but to own Thee Master,
Yearning, in obedience meet,
All I am, and have, and hope for,
To surrender at thy feet.

All, yes, all for Thee, Lord Jesus!
Sealed and purchased by thy blood;
Thine am I, thou Son of David,
Thine am I, thou Son of God.
All the heart-rebellion ended,
All the half allegiance past,
All thy rightful kingship owning,
I am thine, at last, at last!

"All for Jesus!" Master, keep it
Chiming on within my heart!
Chiming when the path is gladsome,
Chiming when the tear-drops start;
Chiming when the shadows gather,
Chiming when the sunbeams throng;
Chiming till its music merges
Into heaven's eternal song.

For the words that now thy children
Whisper upwards falteringly
Soon shall be their shout of triumph
Echoing far from sea to sea!
We shall sing it, at thy coming,
When thy foes are prostrate hurled;
"All for Jesus! all for Jesus!"
Shall go ringing round the world!

"All for Jesus!" all for glory,
All the kingdoms, thine shall be;
"All for Jesus! all for Jesus!"
Now and through eternity!

SCHOOL FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—In one department of this institution men are trained as Y.M.C.A. secretaries; and, since June 1887, some twenty-eight of its graduates have entered upon appointments. There has also been a demand for the school's trained Sunday-school workers and pastors' helpers. All American denominations seem to be recognising the need of such training; and unsought testimony has been received to the value of the course of instruction. The secretary is Mr. R. C. Morse.

WEST LONDON MISSION.—A circular just issued, signed by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and his fellow-workers, says:—"If we are to do the blessed work which God has put within our reach this winter, we must raise £3000 in connection with our approaching anniversary. No one who knows the peculiarities of West London will deem this a large sum, when as much as £60,000 has been spent on some of the liquor shops and music-halls with which we have to compete. Rents have been forced up by business and pleasure to such a point that we have to spend £2000 a year on hired buildings in which to carry on the work. Some day, no doubt, we shall be as well off as the other branches of the Mission, and have freehold buildings of our own. This Mission was started three years ago, without a building, without a penny, and without a member. This spring we reported 827 members, with 251 on trial. These represent only a minority of the persons who have been brought to Christ by this Mission, which is entirely unsectarian in its spirit and methods, seeks the prosperity of all churches, and eagerly welcomes the co-operation of all true Christians. We are taking vigorous steps to make this Mission, and each of its departments, as soon as possible, self-supporting; but, for a few years longer, we shall need the special help of those who love God and humanity." The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Mr. Percy Bunting, 11, Endsleigh-gardens, S.W.

Cambridge Notes.

By a Graduate.

We have commenced another year of University life. To many it is beginning a fresh period in their career, and one full of peculiarly important opportunities and temptations. The first term, especially its first few days, are all-important deciding times to the Freshman. Gladly, therefore, we welcomed Rev. H. C. G. Moule's address to members of the University, delivered to a large gathering in Trinity Church after the usual service.

The annual tea of the Church Missionary Society is to be held in the Guild Hall on October 21, when Rev. J. Barton, on his return from South India, and Rev. J. C. Hoare, Principal of the C.M.S. College at Ningpo, will give accounts of their work.

Last Monday, October 13, a valedictory service was held in Holy Trinity Church to take leave of missionaries. The following were returning to their work: Rev. J. Ireland Jones, M.A., Ceylon; Rev. H. D. Goldsmith, M.A., Madras; Rev. J. A. Horsburgh, M.A., and Rev. J. Neale, B.A., China. The following were entering on mission work: Rev. J. N. Carpenter, B.A., Rev. H. J. Molony, B.A., and Rev. E. T. Sandys, M.A., North India; Rev. C. E. T. Biscoe, M.A., the Punjab; Rev. D. M. Lang, M.A., and Rev. C. T. Warren, B.A., Japan. The address was given by Rev. H. C. G. Moule.

Last Sunday Dr. Grattan Guinness visited Cambridge, and preached in St. Andrew's-street Chapel.

Since last we met up here one well-known Cambridge man has entered into his rest. The death of Mr. J. Hill, B.A., who volunteered at a few days' notice for Africa, has been a severe blow to many still in residence, who knew and valued his ever bright and cheerful companionship.

On October 26, Rev. J. E. C. Welldon, M.A., Head-master of Harrow, will lecture in Great St. Mary's on "Social Purity."

Rev. H. E. J. Bevan, Gresham Lecturer, will give an address in the same church, on "Church Work in East London," on Dec. 7.

The following are the preachers of the University Sermons during the present term:—October 5 and 12, Rev. C. E. Searle, D.D., Master of Pembroke; 19 and 26, Rev. T. N. Wilson, M.A.; November 2, Ven. Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.; 9 and 16, Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A.; 23, Rev. T. Field, M.A., King's School, Canterbury; November 30, and December 7, 14 and 21, Rev. T. D. Davies, the Hulsean Lecturer.

For nine Sundays, including and following November 2, Sunday evening lectures will be delivered in the University Church, on "The Church and the Protestant Sects." The following are the subjects and the respective preachers:—The Presbyterians—Rev. W. Cunnigham, D.D.; The Congregationalists—Rev. Professor Creighton, M.A.; the Baptists—Rev. Professor Creighton, M.A.; the Society of Friends—Rev. Professor H. C. Shuttleworth, M.A.; the Church and Sects in Foreign Mission Fields—Rev. A. Caldecott, M.A.; the Methodists—Rev. F. Watson, B.D.; the Salvation Army—Rev. Professor H. C. Shuttleworth, M.A.; the Plymouth Brethren—Rev. Canon Teulon, M.A.; the Unitarians—Rev. W. Cunningham, D.D.

Last Monday evening, a meeting of the Cambridge Church Missionary Union, was held at Ridley Hall, and addressed by the missionaries who were subsequented dismissed at the valedictory service.

PASTOR FRANK H. WHITE hopes to resume his ministry at Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater, on Sunday, October 19.

REV. T. CONNELLAN AT DUBLIN CONVENTION.

At the recent Christian Convention at Dublin, Rev. Thomas Connellan delivered an intensely interesting address. He said that when, about eighteen months ago, he went down to the West of Ireland, to stand up for Jesus, many advised him not to go. They had pointed out to him that, if he, formerly a Roman Catholic priest well known in the West of Ireland, returned, after having resigned his position in the Church, it would be certain to procure for him violence and perhaps death. Still the "small still voice" spoke in his ear and said, "Go," and go he did. He had only been there a short time when a certain book he had written was put into circulation. The Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese thought himself bound to excommunicate him, and so he was denounced in the chapels, and the priests all denounced him, and warned the people to beware of him as a renegade. On the very Sunday on which he was denounced he thought he would try whether the Roman Catholic people, the laity, were as bigoted as was represented if left to themselves; and so he walked down to the little village chapel, where the people gathered around him. He said: "You have all heard what the priests inside said of me. I think that you will in fairness listen to what I have to say." It was an exceedingly sultry day, and he spoke at the open cross-roads for forty-five minutes under the blazing sun.

A priest asked Mr. Connellan's father to turn his son out, but his father told the priest to go about his business. He had been living in his father's house since that day, and had been working round about the surrounding country. The whole population was Roman Catholic, but Christ had absolutely and comfort at the manifestation of his love and power in the hearts of those people to whom he had spoken. He had gone into the cottages very frequently alone at night. He had gone four, six, and eight miles over the hills to hold cottage meetings, of which the fathers of families had had notice, and these in turn had given notice to their neighbours. Sometimes he had thirty people present. They had prayers, he read to them the Word of God, he explained it to them to the best of his ability, and they had listened to him with the greatest respect. These people had assured him individually that they believed he was right. He was greatly comforted to see these people stand up and argue against him. He could see Jesus Christ working in their hearts, and after a little time these were the very people who came to him, sometimes after a meeting, and in a quiet conversation told him they believed they had been led astray from the truth. Of course he had been writing a good deal, and his little effusions had been circulated broadcast. He had travelled twenty miles around the district, holding cottage meetings, and not a hand had been raised against him, not a word of insult had he received. Christ had made the work so easy that absolutely there was no difficulty, no danger, so far as he was aware. Probably they knew of his brother's conversion. There was not a member of his family who was not now in thorough accord and sympathy with him. Extraordinary things had been said about him, but his family, who lived in the closest communion with him, were after his conversion. He had experienced strong opposition, and Roman Catholic priests had not been idle. First it had been attempted to incite the people to offer violence to his person, then to boycott his father in business. All these methods failed, and the tongue of slander had been employed; but within the last week Christ had given him a joy and a consolation which had flooded his soul with gladness, through the conversion of his sister, which seemed to have been the result of this slander. From these few facts they could gather that there was an open door in the West of Ireland; and he believed that in every part of Ireland, if they only approached the Irish Roman Catholics in a proper spirit, there would be an open door very soon; and so they ought to pray very fervently, work very fervently, and, above all, show great sympathy and love for their poor Roman Catholic brethren. If the people were approached in a proper spirit, and with constant prayer, he believed that Ireland's evangelisation would be very near, that the Sun of Justice would soon flood her green hills and valleys, and that

The Star of the West will yet rise in her glory,
And the land that was darkest be brightest in story.

NATAL EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

Dear Sir,—The Mission in Cape Colony, which I was permitted to start ten years ago, and which has been furthered in many ways by your readers, was a year ago placed in the hands of Mr. W. Spencer Walton and a council in London of well-known Christian gentlemen, and designated the Cape General Mission. My object in taking this step was the extension of the work. I saw many open doors in South Africa; but, with ill-health, and none to represent the need in England, it seemed impossible to enter them.

Now, under the new arrangement, not only will the plans formed and prayed over for years be put into operation and efficiently carried out, but, being able myself to reside in healthier parts of the country, I shall not, I trust, be debarred by ill-health from devoting all my time to the development of work which has had my sympathies for years.

But there is "very much land to be possessed." It has therefore been decided in council to divide the wide and widening field. Eastern South Africa, including Natal, Zululand, and Orange Free State, will be one division, and in it I shall find my new sphere of work.

Cape Colony, the Transvaal, and native territories, North, South, and West, will be occupied by the Cape General Mission.

To multiply missions is an admitted mistake: it is hoped, therefore, that the projected work in Natal, being evangelistic and itinerant in its character, will tend rather to help missions which already exist. Whilst the native branch will be held of first importance, our efforts will be on behalf of the scattered Europeans who greatly need spiritual help—railway-men and British soldiers.

Although the Cape General Mission and the Natal Evangelistic Mission will have no official connection, the fullest sympathy will exist between the workers.

(Mrs.) M. S. Osborn,

STORNOWAY.—Mr. Charles Cook, who has been staying in this northern town, writes:—"The islanders are a Godly folk. Among the Gaelic-speaking portion, even the political meetings are opened with prayer. I had the extreme pleasure of preaching almost nightly in the open air, and among a population of some 3000, lecturing in the Drill Hall to 1000. A splendid work is being done by the Free Church minister, Mr. Martin, who has gathered a nice body of young men round him. Mr. Stuart, of the Established Church, being ill, I supplied his place on the Sunday afternoons, and preached in the Free Church in the evening. Fifteen hundred fishing boats visit the town in the season. From Stornoway to the Isle of Skye I came by the steamer Claymore, finding some on board who had been converted the previous night in the Free Church; then from Portree to the mainland, and on to Inverness, where, with Dr. Black, I had two good days."

BRITISH GUIANA.

Dear Sir,—For years past I have been receiving The Christian, and it has been a great help and comfort to me in my isolated sphere of service among the aboriginal Indians of this colony.

For ten years we have been shut out from regular intercourse with intelligent Christians, and sometimes it has been six years that we have not seen the sea coast. Your reports of the addresses at the various conferences, and such articles as those from the pen of Mr. Meyer, have therefore been in a special manner helpful, and have cheered us much. The Lord has graciously owned the preaching of his word to the Indians of this River, and we have had the joy of seeing many confess Jesus as Lord.

It now appears to be his will that we should change our sphere of service from Berbice to the Demerara River, where there is much need of testimony for God among the Indians, and we hope to be leaving here at the end of this month (September). My address after that will be, Mission House, Hyde Park, Demerara River, British Guiana. I trust you will be enabled long to continue bearing witness to the truth. May the Lord bless your testimony. —Yours truly in Him, Henry Tayler.

DR. BARNARDO'S RETURN.

It was pleasant to turn in from the cold and gloom of Monday night's fog to the brightness and cheerfulness of "Edinburgh Castle." The enthusiasm of the crowded gathering was something to do the Christian heart good, and there was an air of reality throughout the meeting. On the Doctor's entry, he was received with cheers, again and again repeated, and his eye was gladdened by some dozen mottoes on the walls, such as, "The sick little ones send you their love," "Sheppard House tinies are so glad you're home," "Stepney boys give you right hearty welcome." The Chairman, Mr. Samuel G. Sheppard, said how glad the committee were for the Doctor once more to take the helm, with increased experience and vigour of body. Their enemies seemed for a time to have had enough of the conflict. Mr. Odling, the secretary, spoke words of welcome and cheer on behalf of the workers and children, from whom he presented the Doctor with a purse of £50 as a token of goodwill and sympathy. Deputations of boys and girls filed across the platform to present addresses to the man who has done so much for them. Loud cheers greeted the appearance of some healthy looking girls with floral offerings.

Canon Girdlestone found great pleasure in welcoming back, in the name of many others, one who has something wherewith to meet his enemies in that, if God be for him, who can be against him? Rev. W. J. Mayers remarked that there is light and shade in connection with God's work, and he was sure that the one heart of that meeting went out in sympathy with that vast organisation which has been called to suffer so great a loss. All denominations and all connected with the work would join together in thanking God for their dear friend, and praying that he may be spared for much more good work. After hearty words from Dr. H. Grattan Guinness and Mr. W. Baker, a member of the committee, Dr. Barnardo said he felt himself at home. The kind gifts made to him would be devoted to a proposed Children's Church, near the entrance of the Ilford Homes. The main points of the Doctor's long narrative were that he found his emigrants in greatly improved condition, with plenty of room for addition to their numbers, and more demand for their labour than he could supply; and that he successfully combated unfounded prejudice (which has no existence in Manitoba) on the part of labour organisations in Ontario, against the introduction of boy and girl workers. Next week we shall give further details of his trip.

Evangelistic Notes.

Cheltenham.—Rev. F. Innes Jones and Mrs. F. Innes Jones have begun an eight days' mission in the parish of St. John's, Cheltenham.

Mr. William Forbes, who has been for several weeks past conducting services in Scotland, began a short mission on Sunday at Paisley.

Co. Wicklow.—A special Gospel Mission has been held in Callary, co. Wicklow, by Rev. E. S. Daunt, incumbent of Greystones, assisted by Rev. F. L. Merrick and others, and has been attended by much blessing. A similar mission has just been held at Loughall, co. Armagh, by Rev. W. E. Burroughs, M.A.

Sale.—A seven days' mission has been concluded at Sale, by Rev. R. Balgarnie, and many young persons have been brought to decision for Christ. Rev. Adam Scott, pastor, conducted an open-air service every night. All the services were well attended, and steps are being taken for continuing the good work.

Galashiels.—God has been blessing our town in a signal manner during the last week or two. The instrument used was Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, who, on the invitation of the Galashiels Home Mission, carried on services from September 21 to October 5 inclusive. The Town Hall, which is capable of holding about six hundred people, was well filled each evening; and on the second and third Sundays the Volunteer Hall was secured, and was packed with an audience of 1500 to 2000 people. During the second week of his stay Mr. Dunn conducted Bible-readings at half past three in the afternoon, and even at that hour a large number came together. Several of the ministers of the town assisted, and we all felt we had cause to praise God that the work of the winter has commenced so auspiciously. Probably every church in the town has received a share of the blessing in the shape of the conversion or the arousing of some of their people; and quite a number of boys and girls were among those who professed faith in Christ. We pray that the converts may stand firm, and that the work commenced here by this honoured servant of the Lord may go on with increasing results during the winter.

J. Bell Johnston, Baptist Minister.

HOW TO HELP OUR SERVANTS.—Several correspondents have written us in reference to an article which appeared in a recent issue on the relations of mistresses and servants. One friend suggests the considerate practice which she follows of making one's own bed and tidying up the room on Sundays, in whatever house one may be found. She has often been struck by the bright flush of surprise and pleasure thus caused, and the grateful words of thanks have made her feel all the happier. Where there are many beds to make, the kindness suggested means a whole morning saved. Visitors in hotels and elsewhere, are often leaving their rooms for church as the housemaids enter them for hard work. This is a practical form of doing the command, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." Another correspondent grieves to find servants in some situations allowed only the second and third Sunday for attendance on public worship; and a lack of welcome even when they do so attend. Doubtless these and many similar points will occur to the minds of our readers, and we commend them to thoughtful attention, in the hope that many may be led to show to their servants the consideration which becomes those who profess the name of Christ.

M. HENRI LASSERRE, whose translation of the Gospels into French was placed in the Index of corrupt literature after having received the cordial approval of the Pope, continues to be treated unkindly by dignitaries of the Church which he has long served with singular devotion. As will be remembered, M. Lasserre did much to establish Lourdes in the hearts of Romanists by his work on the alleged miracles there. Now the Bishop of Autun has forbidden the reading of a work M. Lasserre has written on "Notre Dame de Lourdes," not because of a desire on the part of Rome to discourage the worship of the Virgin, but because the work is from the pen of the translator of the proscribed Gospels. Many are praying that Lasserre will see his way into the fulness of Gospel light and liberty.

Personalia.

Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, has returned from his tour in America. On Thursday last a "welcome home" meeting was held at Exeter Hall, when Mr. Kirk gave a sketch of his impressions.

Lady Ashburton has been staying at Lewis Castle. The island of Lewis formerly belonged in its entirety to her family. The people held her ladyship in high esteem. Stornoway has been greatly benefited by Lady Ashburton's stay, for at her invitation Sir Alfred Lyell has lectured on India, Professor Knight on Tennyson, whilst Rev. Marcus Rainsford has held a series of Bible-readings which have been greatly appreciated.

M. Adrian Monod, son of Pastor Theodore Monod, is in England, seeking the sympathy of Christians on behalf of an important undertaking in connection with the McAll Mission at Paris. A hall, with class-rooms, including accommodation for Y.M. and Y.W.C.A., has just been opened at Bercy, and is under the care of Rev. C. E. Greig and M. Adrian Monod. The district has been the scene of a most interesting work. M. Monod's address in London is 41, Queen Anne-street, Cavendish-square, W.

Pastor J. Bennett Anderson spoke last week in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, London, on Tuesday; at the noon meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Wednesday; and at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle the same evening at the Gospel temperance meeting. In each place our brother was earnestly prayed for and commended to God. On Friday morning he left Tilbury Dock, London, by the Orient steamer Orotana, and expects to (D.V.) commence evangelistic services at Sydney, New South Wales, on Lord's Day, November 30. Earnest prayer is desired by Mr. Anderson that he may have utterance given to preach the word in Australia and New Zealand.

Obituary.

MISS CATHERINE A. GAMACK.

This devoted lady, for nearly 18 years a Mildmay deaconess, passed from her mission house, St. John's Parish, Hoxton, to her eternal rest, on Sunday afternoon last. Miss Gamack was essentially a servant of the Church, and a labourer in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. Her work in Hoxton had the seal of the Holy Ghost on it, as Pentecostal and Apostolic. She lived with God, and breathed out her life day by day in longing desire, prayer, and effort to see Christ's reign established, and his will done on earth as in heaven. "Blessed is she that believed; for there shall be a performance of those things which have been told her from the Lord" (Luke i., R.V.)

REV. JAMES CHAMBERS, M.A.

We regret to announce the death of this useful minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion. In the course of an address a few days ago at a district meeting in the Central Hall, Manchester, he suddenly remarked, "I think I have said enough." He appeared to faint, and fell forward, but was caught by a gentleman sitting near him, and laid on a seat. In a few minutes, and without speaking again, Mr. Chambers expired. He was superintendent of Victoria Circuit, Cheethamhill, had spent twenty-two years of his ministry in the Manchester District, and had laboured successfully in the North of London, Birmingham, Southport, and other places. He had been in the ministry thirty-eight years.

REV. JACKSON SMYTH, D.D.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has met with a serious loss in the death of Rev. Jackson Smyth, D.D., who passed away at his residence, Armagh, on Saturday morning last. Deceased was brother to the late Professor Richard Smyth, M.P., who was instrumental in getting the Irish Sunday Closing Bill carried through Parliament. In 1860 he became successor of Rev. Dr. John Hall, now of New York, in the pastorate of the first Presbyterian Church, Armagh, and has proved himself a devoted minister of the Gospel. He was an able preacher, an excellent pastor, and a kind and sympathetic friend. He was an earnest temperance advocate, and took a great interest in evangelistic efforts. He was an ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, and a Senator of the Royal University.

The Book World.

"Scripture" Stories.

Come Forth! By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and Herbert D. Ward. 7s. 6d. W. Heinemann. This is the story of Lazarus extended into a romance. Viewed as a novel, the work is excessively sentimental, and the characters are much overdone. Looked at from a higher point of view, the book must be pronounced a failure, for while professing to make Christ "real to the imagination," it only does so by presenting Him in a light impossible of harmonisation with the Gospel record.

Leah of Jerusalem: A Story of the Time of Paul. By Edward Payson Berry. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a work of more solid interest. The execution is as clever as the conception is attractive. Leah's sufferings through the heresy-hunting zeal of Saul the Pharisee are depicted in terrible detail; at last, after being sold into slavery at Rome, Leah is confirmed in the faith of Christ by Paul the Nazarene. The career of the Apostle of the Gentiles is sketched, and the book powerfully describes some phases of the tribulation through which many of the early believers had to pass, not only at the hands of Jews spiritually blinded, but also of Romans sunk in pagan darkness.

A Great Work of Reference.

The Century Dictionary: An Encyclopædic Lexicon of the English Language. Prepared under the superintendence of William Dwight Whitney, Ph.D., LL.D., professor of Comparative Philology and Sanscrit in Yale University. Vol. iii. £2 2s. T. Fisher Unwin. This volume completes the first half of a singularly valuable work of reference. We have all heard of the man who bought a dictionary because he wanted something fresh to read; some compilations would disappoint any such expectation, but assuredly this would not, for every page contains reading of great interest and utility. Printed in triple columns, and embellished with many elucidatory woodcuts, the various articles are full and precise. Volume iii. contains words beginning with the letters G to L inclusive. Theological terms are described at length, and with evident care. About a page is devoted to the word "grace," alone and in combination with other words. Variety of orthography, details of etymology, and clearness of definition are some of the many excellent features of this great work, upon the preparation of which, by a large staff of specialists, no pains or expense have been spared.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

Sarah, a Princess. By Faith Chiltern. 1s. Lessons of contentment are inculcated, and, above all, it is shown that Christ is the great Satisfier.

The Mysterious House. By Mrs. Walton. 1s. The singing of a little blind girl is blessed to the conversion of her father, who had led a life of dishonesty as the maker of counterfeit coin.

Harold's Friends; or, The New Rector of Greythorpe. By C. A. Burnaby. 2s. The kidnapping of children raises a little excitement, but the loving attachment of two young men and the experiences of an earnest clergyman make the story pleasant and wholesome.

A Young Oxford Maid. By Sarah Tytler. 3s. 6d. This is a historical tale from a practised pen. It is admirably constructed, and presented with animation and grace. The scene is laid in the times of the Charleses, when political troubles were attended by horrors of fire and plague.

No Choice: A Story of the Unforeseen. By Rev. T. S. Millington. 5s. Boys will enjoy this as well as any of the author's well-known stories. Clear Gospel truth is pleasantly interwoven with the narrative, which is of engrossing interest, although not improbable in character. Much useful information is conveyed, and the evidences of Christianity presented in a manner which thoughtful readers will experience pleasure in following.

A Marked Man. By E. A. B. D. 2s. 6d. The career of a soldier who, to his discomfort, was "marked" as a deserter, and, to his joy, was "marked" as a Christian when again in his regiment. The "filling-in" of the story presents the contrast between those who follow the Lord and do his works and those who have no sense of sinnership in the sight of God, but are haughty in a righteousness of their own.

Not by Bread Alone. By the author of "The Occupations of a Retired Life." 3s. 6d. A book for grown-up people rather than the young. By a story typical of many actual occurrences, it discredits the theory of the survival of the fittest. A deserted boy, under the training of godly people, turns out a useful member of society, as well as a follower of Christ. The son of a sceptic, in spite of many privileges, developed into a good-for-nothing wastrel. The Christian lad lost his life in an attempt to save the other from drowning, thus illustrating the great doctrine of self-renouncing love. The volume is well worth reading.

The Blind Man's Creed, and other Sermons. By Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D. R. D. Dickinson. Sixteen discourses by the pastor of Madison-square Church, New York, the title being suggested by the first, which is based upon John ix. 25:—"One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." Uniformly practical and direct, the sermons are good stimulating reading.

Among the useful publications by the Sunday School Union are The Sunday School Teacher, a Biblical and educational magazine and treasury of illustrations; and Notes on the Scripture Lessons, for 1890. In volume form, the "Teacher" (3s.) is a goodly body of well-digested information on many subjects. The "Notes" volume (2s.) for the present year is also full of expository and helpful matter specially arranged for the use of Sunday-school teachers.

Greek Pictures, drawn with pen and pencil. By J. P. Mahaffy, M.A., D.D. 8s. Religious Tract Society. This is a very attractive addition to a deservedly popular series. Dr. Mahaffy's works on Greece and Greek life are well known. This volume, which is profusely illustrated, has involved him in special travels and close study, for he addresses the general reader rather than the student or specialist. The leading features of classical Greece are sketched in a way that can hardly fail to interest and instruct; while the Greece of to-day, with its institutions and scenery, is delineated by a graphic and sympathetic pen.

Wild Nature Won by Kindness. By Mrs. Brightwen, vice-president of the Selborne Society. 3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. Surely natural history was never so charmingly displayed as in this volume. The talented author has cultivated the friendship of various birds and insects, and has been remarkably successful in taming small animals which most of us have regarded as irrecoverably wild. She here tells us how she treated her pets, and how they, in many cases, reciprocated her kindness. The book is eminently calculated to foster in the young such a love of animated nature as will promote a merciful disposition. Whether giving us the biography of a nuthatch, or describing the antics of a squirrel, Mrs. Brightwen is always very interesting, and we cordially commend her book to those who find delight in the works of God in the feebler creation. There are a number of illustrations by the author and F. Carruthers Gould.

Twenty-one Prophetic Papers: A Suggestive Outline of the Whole Range of God's Dealings with the Jew, the Gentile, and the Church of God. By F. C. Bland. With coloured diagram. 1s. 6d. J. E. Hawkins. Those who have, during the past five-and-twenty years, attended the Believers' Meetings and similar gatherings in Dublin, will remember the very interesting and profitable teachings of Mr. F. C. Bland. On these occasions prophecy was not generally his theme, but it has occupied much of his thought. The little volume before us presents us with a succinct and easily apprehended epitome of prophecy as conceived on Futurist lines. We think not only that the prophetic word is large enough to include a Preterist, Presentist, and Futurist interpretation, but that what is essential in each has of necessity been the comfort and sustentation of the saints of God during the process of this dispensation. We cannot, however, too much commend the undogmatic spirit of Mr. Bland, who says, "We have all much to learn, and, it may be, much also to unlearn; and if there is one thing above another that the search into prophetic truth teaches us, it is that we know nothing yet as we ought to know." If this had been the tone generally adopted by the advocates of different systems of prophetic interpretation, they would in all likelihood have seen some truth in each other's scheme, and some error in their own, and thus have been drawn closer together in lowliness and love. The coloured diagram presents at a glance Mr. Bland's view of the successive dispensations.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

CHRISTIAN COLONISATION is not very commonly attempted, but M. Cook, a paper-maker in the Dordogne, France, has decided to leave for New Caledonia, taking with him his workpeople, consisting of fifteen families, there to found a Protestant community.

EVANGELISATION IN SARDINIA.—The Gospel workers of Italy have either had a freer hand to labour or else they have been more successful than their French brethren in the neighbouring island of Corsica, seeing the former have created a constituency of readers who take over three hundred copies a month of the little Christian journal Il Testimonio of Mr. Walker, of Naples.

THE BASEL MISSIONARY SOCIETY shows signs of great activity, and, when its surroundings are considered, a most satisfactory progress. Pasteur Blumhardt opened the training institution with one pupil in 1816. Now there are 200 missionaries in the field, with 312 native helpers, 45 principal stations, 130 sub-stations, 22,000 Christian communicants, and 10,000 scholars in its mission schools.

SWITZERLAND.—The Deaconess Establishment at St. Loup, Canton Vaud, by its report, shows much good work and a large extension of its sphere this year. Two special forms of help have been granted to this worthy work. An unknown donor has given £4000 towards its extension, and after six years labour the pure water supply from the springs of the Cressonnière has been brought into the establishment.

IMMORALITY IN FRANCE.—M. G. Mace, a former French police official, has, in a work which he has recently published, under the ironical title, "My Criminal Museum," given us a sad picture of infant morals in that country. He says that 27,000 children were brought before the magistrates in 1889. In 1877 there were 141 suicides of young persons under sixteen, and in 1887 they had increased to 200, and the increase has been maintained. M. Mace avers that these frightful results are the fruits of the banishment of the name and thoughts of God from the schools "by authority."

CATHOLICS AND THE SCRIPTURES.—We recently called attention to the fact that the Bishop of Bayeux had given his authorisation to a popular edition of the Gospel according to Matthew, for circulation among French Catholics. The religious newspapers of France did not make it clear, however, that the Popish comments are so embodied in the text that the pure Gospel and perverse theology are read at one and the same time. It is hoped that Protestants will be on their guard against assisting in the circulation of these books.

THE EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF FRANCE exists for the express purpose of propagating the Gospel in France. The fifty-seventh report, just published, shows that a real mission work is going on in different parts of the country. The schools of the various stations are largely attended by the children of Roman Catholics, and the meetings for grown-up people are conducted by men of thought and energy, who command attention and respect. It is not without much anxiety that evangelistic work is sustained in France. The balance-sheet of this Society for last year shows a considerable deficit. The director is Pasteur H. Mouron, rue d'Assas 76, Paris.

NOVEL METHOD OF CHRISTIAN HELPFULNESS.—The converts in the islands of the Pacific Ocean have from time to time both pleased and surprised the Christian Church by their ingenuous inventiveness as to the help they wished to render to the good work to which they owed so much. But those of the isle of Porapora surely are distinctly original in their method, which was as follows:—They had for some time made their desire to help, notwithstanding their poverty, a matter of prayer without being directed to what they conceived to be the desired end, when one day there appeared in their midst collectors of a species of snail, with which the island abounded, and which were in demand by the Chinese gourmets. The people turned out en masse to gather these for the dealers, and earned as their reward £168, which they handed over to the missionary society, being between three and four shillings each.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—A crowded public meeting was held on Tuesday last week, in Exeter Hall, for the purpose of bidding farewell to a number of missionaries who are about to proceed to India, China, Africa, and elsewhere. Sir John Kennaway, Bart., M.P. (president of the Society), occupied the chair, supported by Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, F. E. Wigram (hon. secretary of the Society), and other prominent members. Most of the missionaries, numbering in all about seventy, were present on the platform. Of the ladies and gentlemen who were going out, thirty-nine (of whom seventeen were ladies) were going out for the first time; twenty returning to their fields of labour, fifteen accompanied by their wives; four ladies who go will soon be qualified to rank as missionaries' wives; whilst two married missionaries were taking out their daughters. Short speeches relative to their respective fields of mission work were given by several missionaries, and an address by Rev. S. A. Selwyn, of Hatcham.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Exeter (Dr. Bickersteth) will probably visit Japan next year. His son is the English Bishop there.

Rev. Wyndham S. Heathcote, who five years ago gave up a suburban curacy to join the Salvation Army, has returned to the Church of England. He has taken a curacy at Streatham.

At a meeting at the C.M.S. House, Salisbury-square, a few days ago, Mr. Eugene Stock remarked that in all probability the Church Missionary Society would be sending out 100 new missionaries during the current year.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone, who is on a visit to England, has prepared a scheme by which the children in the mission schools under his care shall receive an industrial training. He will take back with him to West Africa a good supply of carpenters' implements, and he is on the look-out for a capable man to undertake the supervision of this work. The Bishop is of opinion that the great need of Africa is not the importation of an army of clerics, but of Christian men and women able to teach the natives useful callings in this life as well as to prepare them for the life to come.

Dr. Thorold, who has been Bishop of Rochester since 1877, has been appointed to succeed Dr. Harold Browne in the bishopric of Winchester, on his retirement at the end of the present year. In the course of an address, taking farewell of his diocese last week, Dr. Harold Browne said that long before Newman's time he had been led to study the writings of the Reformers, and by them had been led to consult the Primitive Fathers, who in their turn had referred him to yet more primitive authorities. Would that all the followers of the Tractarians, who so readily directed them to primitive antiquity, had always adhered to it! If these were his last words he would say that the Church of England could stand only on primitive principles, and that if there was corruption in her she could only throw it off by returning to them.

CONGREGATIONAL.

On Sunday last services were commenced in the Town Hall, Streatham, under the auspices of the London Congregational Union. Rev. Alexander Hannay, D.D., was the preacher.

Rev. W. F. Clarkson, of Francis-road Church, Birmingham, has been offered the important post of secretary of the Congregational Church Aid and Home Missionary Society. Mr. Clarkson has not yet decided as to whether he will accept the position or not.

Since Rev. Dr. Nigel McNeill became pastor of Bedford Church, Charrington-street, N.W., in June last, there has been a notable increase in the attendance, and the various Christian and philanthropic agencies have been characterised by renewed activity. A week-day Bible-class, which Dr. McNeill has started, is attended by large numbers of young people.

Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas announced at a recent meeting of the members of the church at Tolmer's-square, Hampstead-road, N.W., that during his first year's ministry among them ninety members had been received into fellowship. A Christian Workers' Association has been formed in connection with the church. Two hundred members have already been enrolled.

An interesting meeting was held at Ventnor recently, when Rev. R. Allen Davies, pastor of the Congregational Church, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his settlement there. Mr. Davies, writes a correspondent, has been a true and loyal servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, and his labours all through his ministry have been crowned with marks of great and evident blessing. Earnest and devout, he has ever kept in the forefront of his teaching the need of a personal, suffering Saviour. Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Primitive Methodist, and Bible Christian ministers took part in the meeting.

Rev. Dr. Allon, in his Merchants' Lecture on Tuesday last week, took as his subject the interview of Christ with the Greeks, and his final estimate of his mission. Life through death must have seemed a strange answer to the Greeks, but we who read it in later time see the full truth of what Christ said, and with our experience of the moral power of Christ's cross can use it intelligently. Until Christ died his mediation was not accomplished, and without finally dying He could not have been the atonement for sin that He was declared to be. The tendency of modern thought was to substitute the incarnation for the death, yet the fruit of his death was the quickening and conversion of souls. There was no being so inscrutable and paradoxical as Jesus Christ viewed apart from his mediatorial and atoning work. His death, only, made his life fruitful, and gave the vitality and power that had since then made Him Lord of the world.

Resignations.—Rev. John Foster, the pastorate at St. Leonards.—Rev. J. M. Dryerre, Ashby and Boundary Chapels, Ashby-de-la-Zouch.—Rev. Henry Banks, Park Chapel, Ramsbottom.—Rev. Walter Baxendale, the church at Limerick.

Calls Accepted.—Mr. W. Scott, of New College, to Trafalgar-road Church, Birkdale, Southport.—Rev. Sidney J. Baker, of Edge-hill, Liverpool, to Kent-street Church, Brisbane, Queensland.—Rev. R. E. Williams, the Welsh Church at Cilfynydd.

SALVATION ARMY.

A cable from Bombay announces the opening of the Kaira district; 400 Hindoos came out to the penitent form the first week.

"The Cascades," near Hobart Town, has been given to the Army as a settlement for the rescue and prison gate work. A large market garden and poultry farming establishment near Adelaide has been secured for the same purpose.

The wine farmers of Paarl are very hard to convince, and they have succeeded in getting their magistrates to imprison Staff-Captain Unsworth and others for three days, despite the recent decision against them in the Supreme Court of the Cape.

The police at Helsingfors, Finland, are exceedingly kind to the Army there, keeping order in the meetings, &c., one magistrate having just punished a man for using profane language at the door of a hall in which the Army hold their meetings. The judge declared that the Army had as much right to protection as the Church.

The large mission hall in Edward-street, Brighton, which for a time was rendered so notorious by the vagaries of Mr. Wood, who styled himself King Solomon, after having undergone a thorough renovation and adaptation was publicly opened on Sunday by Major Bremner. The Salvationists will henceforth hold services there every week night and all day on Sundays. It is the centre of a densely crowded district.

BAPTIST.

After the third Sunday in November the Metropolitan Tabernacle will be closed for two months for renovation, during which Mr. Spurgeon will go to the South of France.

The sixth anniversary of the Goodinge-road Mission (in connection with Camden-road Church) was recently celebrated. By means of this Mission a good work is being carried on among the drovers employed in the Islington Cattle Market, and encouraging results were reported.

At a meeting of the Tabernacle church, Nottingham, on Monday last week, about 450 being present, a letter was read from the pastor (Rev. H. E. Stone) stating that he felt, the church being now strong and united, his work in the town was done, and he had determined to resign. A resolution was unanimously adopted, expressing the feeling that the loyalty of the church to their pastor had never been stronger, that the course he proposed was a mistake, and that he be asked to reconsider the matter. Mr. Stone has just celebrated his tenth anniversary, when a very prosperous state of things, both spiritual and material, was reported. We learn that Mr. Stone has accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate of Abbey-road Chapel, St. John's Wood. He will commence his ministry with the New Year.

Resignations.—Rev. H. C. Leonard, the church at Bowdon, Cheshire.—Rev. A. Tessier, the church at Bromley, Kent.—Rev. G. E. Buckeridge, Manchester-street Church, Oldham.—Rev. A. A. Cole, Goodall-street Church, Walsall.

Calls accepted.—Rev. Lawrence G. Carter, late of Adelaide, South Australia, to Lower Chapel, Chesham, Bucks.—Rev. F. J. Steward, late of Corsham, to the pastorate of the churches at Stockport, Tarlee, and Saddleworth, in South Australia.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. D. M. Connan is doing good work preaching in the streets around Chalk Farm to those who cannot be induced to enter a place of worship.

On the question of amusements, the Presbytery of Newcastle, which met on Tuesday last week, appeals to the Synod to charge all church sessions to prohibit everything in connection with all meetings under their jurisdiction that is inconsistent with the Church's great mission.

Dr. Donald Fraser presided over a missionary valedictory on Monday evening in Marylebone Church. The missionaries were to have sailed yesterday (Thursday). Dr. and Mrs. Riddel, Mr. George Wales, and Miss Balmer go to China, and two ladies go to labour in connection with the Jewish Mission in Morocco.

In the absence of Rev. J. W. Rodger, who has gone to Montreux for well-earned and much-needed rest, the pulpit of St. Andrew's, Bournemouth, is being occupied by Rev. J. T. McGaw, of London. Rev. Dr. Saphir will be morning preacher in November and December. Mr. Rodger hopes to resume his pastorate on January 1.

A deputation appointed at a meeting called by Sir George Bruce waited upon Rev. John McNeill last week to see if anything could be done to retain him within the Presbyterian fold. A special meeting of the Regent-square congregation has been called for to-day (Friday) to confer with their pastor. Mr. McNeill had intended to make a statement before the Presbytery on Tuesday.

On Friday evening the London Presbytery (North) of the Presbyterian Church of England met in Regent-square Church, and formally inducted Rev. John Skinner, M.A., late Free Church minister of Kelso, to the chair of the Old Testament Literature and Apologetics of the Theological College of the Presbyterian Church of England. Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser was moderator. In the address to the new professor, Dr. Fraser dwelt in detail on the high duties and responsibilities of the chair, and of the functions which he was expected to discharge to the Church, to the Presbytery, and to the students, judiciously mingling words of caution and encouragement, and concluding by stating that mere literary acquirements would not suffice to make a man able to discharge his duties, unless supplemented by daily communion with Heaven.

METHODIST.

A Wesleyan local preacher recently occupied the church pulpit at Pembroke Dock at the request of the rector.

In many districts arrangements are being made for united evangelistic services to be conducted by special agents during the winter, while in others preparations are being completed for ministers to visit each other's stations and hold special revival services.

Rev. Henry Hope, of the Methodist New Connexion, has commenced at Shrewsbury a series of "Pleasant Sunday Afternoons" for men only. Mr. Hope has also been endeavouring to get in touch with the people by a series of open-air services, and a "Homely Talk for Homely People," on Sunday evenings, once a month in the chapel.

Sunday and Monday next, October 19 and 20, are to be observed in the Methodist New Connexion as days of special prayer and appeal on behalf of Sunday-schools. The Conference has recommended that special sermons and addresses be given in all the chapels and schools with a view to arouse livelier interest in Sunday-school duties, and inaugurate more definite movements for drawing teachers and scholars closer to Christ.

Some time since services were commenced at a farm-house at Frankton (Shropshire), the village being remote from any place of worship. Rev. J. W. Thomas, a supernumerary minister of the United Free Methodist denomination, realising the needs of the locality, gave a site on which to erect a chapel, which has lately been opened. There are twenty-two houses in the neighbourhood of the chapel, and from twenty-one of them contributions came.

The Methodists of Australasia are making progress with the plans for their mission to New Guinea. Rev. G. Brown, an old South Sea Island missionary, has made an informal report on the results of his recent visit of inquiry to New Guinea. He states that the islands of Normanby, Ferguson, and Goodenough, in the D'Entrecasteaux group, will constitute an important field for Methodist work. The head stations will probably be Basilaki, Moresby Island, for the Louisiade archipelago, and Normanby Island for the D'Entrecasteaux group. The natives of the latter are fiercer and more treacherous than those of the Louisiades.

The autumnal meetings of the Methodist New Connexion Evangelistic Union, extending over three days, were recently held in Sheffield. The Union is an organisation formed among the ministers of the Methodist New Connexion about three years ago, for the promotion of aggressive and evangelistic work, and of a higher Christian life in the churches of the denomination. There are upon the roll of members more than half the ministers, the younger ministers especially having joined in it heartily; and as opportunities arise, its members co-operate with each other in circuit evangelistic work, while from time to time the Union holds district conventions for the objects indicated.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Committee of the Sunday-school Society has issued a circular suggesting that Sunday, Oct. 19, and following day, should be observed as days of special prayer on behalf of Sunday-schools.

A special mission, conducted by Rev. E. S. Daunt, incumbent of Greystones, assisted by Rev. F. L. Merrick and Rev. E. H. Waller, has been held in the parish of Callary, co. Wicklow. The various services were well attended, and many have received great blessing.

The minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland have just been issued, and they give most satisfactory statistics in regard to the progress of the body, there now being 627 ministers on the roll, with 41 assistants, 61 licentiates, and 137 students.

Dr. Knox, Archbishop of Armagh, in his triennial visitation report states that there are now 4548 communicants in his diocese, being a small increase as compared with three years ago, that nearly 14,000 persons attend public worship, and that there are 162 Sunday-schools with 1076 teachers and 13,130 scholars.

A valedictory service was held on Thursday night week in the Gregg Memorial Hall, Dublin, to bid farewell to Rev. Thos. McClelland, B.A., who is going out to the Fuh-Kien Mission, China; Rev. G. W. Walshe and Miss Power, who are going under the C.M.S. to Mid-China; and Rev. A. E. Johnston, who is going in connection with the same Society to Allahabad, India. Rev. Dr. Gwynne, of Trinity College, Dublin, presided, and there was a large attendance.

Y.M.C.A. work is being pushed on with vigour and earnestness at present in Ireland. The Banbridge, Newry, and other Associations have entered on the duties of the winter session under encouraging auspices, and the Belfast Association, in which there are now over 2000 enrolled members, is going ahead by leaps and bounds, so much so that on one evening last week as many as 135 young men became members. It has also seventeen evening classes every week in active operation under able teachers, besides numerous religious meetings.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Patrick J. Forfar, minister of the Presbyterian Church, for many years labouring in Liverpool.—Rev. O. T. Dobbin, LL.D., formerly incumbent of Bellevoir, Meath.—Rev. James Ireland, senior pastor of the U.P. Church, Ellon, N.B.—Mr. John Bibb, of Wolverhampton, a local preacher in the Methodist New Connexion for fifty-four years.—Rev. John Joseph, minister of the English Church connected with the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Connexion at Bethesda, Montgomeryshire.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 19.—Proverbs XIII.

1. Comp. iv. 3, 4. Solomon's example enforces his teaching. A still wiser than he also heard instruction (Isa. l. 5).

2, 3. The mouth feeds the man not only by what it receives, but by what it speaks In an important sense every man "eats his own words" (Rom. vi. 21, 22; Matt. xii. 37). How needful to pray the Psalmist's prayer (cxli. 3)!

7. In the affairs of this world this is true, but it has special application to the higher riches. Boasted wealth is associated with wretchedness and poverty (Rev. iii. 17, 18); acknowledged poverty is the condition of possessing greatest wealth (Luke xviii. 13, 14).

8. "The primitive Christians quoted this in defence of their occasional habit of giving money to restrain the fury of their persecutors." The ransom of the soul from sin required a much higher price (1 Pet. i. 18, 19).

9. So the wicked may have a "lamp"—an outward profession of religion (Matt. xxv. 3); but when that is "put out" the "light of the righteous" will rejoice (Matt. xxv. 10).

10. Comp. Matt. xx. 21; 3 John 9; Luke xxii. 24. All contentions can be traced to this as their source, "Pride is the inmost coat which we put on first, and put off last."

12. This is true only of spiritual things. Godly men may know the heart-sickness of hope deferred (Gen. xv. 3); and even Jesus Himself (Ps. xxii. 1, 2). But how great the joy of fulfilled desire (Gen. xxi. 3-6; Ps. xxii. 22-25)! If you have tasted the first, wait, for the second is yours also.

15. In the way, as in the end, the righteous have the advantage. "The road to hell is strewed with the thorns and thistles that are the product of the curse." See R.V.

22. Not always an inheritance of worldly good, which has often cursed rather than blessed the children. But a godly example, a good name, wise instruction—this is the best inheritance.

23. Very little may be improved by industry; very much may be destroyed by indiscretion. It is not what you have, but how you use it, on which the result depends.

24. Our Father is never guilty of doing his sons such an injury (Heb. xii. 7). It is not love for the child, but self-love which prompts a man to withhold needed chastisement. Yet it is needful to do it "betimes" (Heb. xii. 10, 11).

MONDAY, OCTOBER 20.—Proverbs XIV.

1. "A fortune in a wife, is better than a fortune with a wife."

2. Character—either good or bad—results from right relationship with God. Not profession, but conduct proves a man's fear of God.

4. Either a household proverb reminding us that "labour has its rough unpleasant side, yet it ends in profit"; or "clean" may mean empty. There is no food where there is no labour. Of spiritual as well as natural husbandry this is true (1 Cor. iii. 9; 1 Tim. v. 18).

7. See R.V. Either rendering gives good sense.

9. See x. 23. Find their sport in it; but only because they are "fools." "Sin offering" (R.V. margin). To mock at this is the greatest aggravation of their guilt.

10. Both our sorrow (1 Sam. i. 10, 13, 16; 2 Kings iv. 27), and our joy (1 Sam. xviii. 13, 20; 2 Sam. vi. 12-16), are beyond human sympathy. Jesus felt this lack, in his joy (transfiguration), and his bitterness (Gethsemane), and is now able fully to sympathise with our highest joy, and our deepest grief.

12. Therefore: (1) Do not be misled by appearances. "Things are not what they seem." (2) Judge of the present in the light of the future. Who would choose a path because it is pleasant for a while, if it soon ends in death? (Matt. vii. 13).

14. No one is more unhappy than the backslider. Memories of former days of blessing destroy all pleasure in sin. He reaps a terrible harvest from his own sowing (Jer. ii. 17, 19). Thank God the way of return is open, and the welcome sure (Hos. xiv. 1-4).

15. Distinguish between faith which believes every word of God, and credulity which too readily believes man. The one results in salvation, the other in shame (18).

17. A hasty temper is bad—even a man of God may be overcome by it (1 Sam. xxv. 21). But the spirit which cherishes the memory of wrong, and meditates revenge is worse. Avoid both evils. See 1 Cor. xiii. 5.

23. Contrast between work and talk. "Loud talkers are lazy workers." It is labour which the Lord rewards at last (Heb. vi. 10).

26, 27. What a rich cluster of blessings resulting from "the fear of the Lord"!

28. A political proverb; and yet applicable also to our great King. What must his glory be in the possession of such a multitude (Rev. vii. 9, 10).

32. What a contrast between the end of the wicked and that of the righteous! "Driven away" as chaff (Ps. i. 4).

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21.—Proverbs XV.

1. This is the noble art of self-defence according to Solomon. There is no better.

4. This is the fruit of righteous lips (xi. 30, Heb. xiii. 15). Does our speech heal, or wound?

6. Outwardly this would not appear. Yet "the revenues of the wicked" are not "treasure," but only an occasion of trouble. The righteous possesses what riches cannot buy.

7. Because wisdom is in his heart, it speaks through his lips. His works are scattered like good seed—everywhere and always (Eccles. xi. 2, 4, 6).

8, 9. Note the intimate connection between a man's worship (8) and his conduct (9). Even a wicked man may be religious—often is rigorously exact in outward ceremonialism, because he is wrong in life. Yet as is "the way," so is "the sacrifice," though it be very costly. If the one is abomination, so is the other. You must be right before you can offer acceptable worship (John iv. 23, 24).

10. Correction is given for wrong-doing (Job xxxvi. 8-12); but whether it issues in life or death depends upon how it is received.

16, 17. "Riches and poverty are more in the heart than in the hand. He is wealthy that is contented. He is poor that wanteth more."—Leighton. Prison fare was an abundant feast to Paul (Phil. iv. 18, 19).

19. Where there is no difficulty, the sluggard makes one. The lazy man never wants for an excuse for his indolence. How true this is of many when urged to enter the way of the Lord!

23. Again, note how a man's words come home to him. The advantage of speaking "a word in season" is great to the man himself, and is as life to those who hear (xii. 25; Isa. l. 4).

31, 33. Wisdom's message reproves sin (31); only the humble will hear it (33); to hear it is the way to life (31) and honour (33).

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22.—Proverbs XVI.

1. The Revised Version gives a different rendering. "Man proposes, but God disposes." Whatever plans a man may form, it is God who gives right speech and the right way (9). Don't neglect prudent planning, but don't trust it.

2. God's judgment of a man's ways is more accurate than that of the man himself. "By Him actions are weighed" (1 Sam. ii. 3).

4. See R.V. He does not make men wicked; that is their own work; but He makes their wickedness show forth his glory (Rom. ix. 22). This solemn word should arrest the wicked.

6. The two parts are connected. "The fear of the Lord" results from the "purging of iniquity" (Ps. cxxx. 4), because "truth" as well as "mercy" secures it for us. He forgives in such a manner as to reveal the evil of sin.

14, 15. Life and death are in the hands of the king (Eccles. viii. 4; Esther vii. 7-10). But with the King of kings we have to do. What wrath is so terrible and so irresistible as his!

18, 19. Our fallen condition is proof of this statement. The world's history has furnished many illustrations. Pharaoh (Exod. ix. 16, 17); Haman (Esther v. 11, vii. 10); David (2 Sam. xxiv. 1); and, notably, Peter (Matt. xxvi. 33, 69-74). Our only safety is in self-distrust (1 Cor. x. 12).

21, 23, 24. Another reference to the connection between the heart and the speech. When the heart is filled with wisdom, the tongue is "as the pen of a ready writer." "The pen of the tongue must be dipped in the ink of the heart."

27-30. The diligence of the wicked in doing evil is a reproof to the lethargy of the saint. He is energetic in sin (Micah vii. 3). Yet what mischief he causes to others! and what an unquenchable fire of remorse he prepares for himself! Let us imitate his energy, and be as fully and constantly engaged in righteousness as he is in sin (Rom. vi. 19).

32. This is a difficult battle. "I can govern my people, but how can I govern myself?" asked the Czar Peter. Do we not know the secret (Gal. ii. 20)? Then live it.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23.—Proverbs XVII.

3. Comp. 1 Peter i. 7. God undertakes the testing of his children (Is. xxxi. 9; Jer. ix. 7; Mal. iii. 2). The process is painful, yet it is watched by the Refiner with jealous care. Do not complain (Is. xlviii. 10).

5. God identifies Himself with his poor (xiv. 31) Rejoicing at calamity was the sin of Shimei (2 Sam. xvi. 5-8). For this sin both Tyre and Edom were threatened (Ezek. xxvi. 2; Obad. 12).

8. Bribery accomplishes much; but there are some things which no bribe can purchase (Acts viii. 18-20). Jacob's gift to Esau (Gen. xxxii. 20), and Abigail's to David (1 Sam. xxv. 27), were a right use of gifts. In this way both of them "covered a transgression" (9).

10. What a wise man learns by a word of reproof, a hundred stripes cannot teach to a fool (Is. i. 5). Comp. xxvii. 22. "A generous horse is ruled even by the shadow of the rod; a lazy beast cannot be stirred even by a spur."

12. Witness the ungovernable ferocity of Saul (1 Sam. xxii. 18), of Herod (Matt. ii. 16), and of Saul of Tarsus (Acts ix. 1).

17. There have been instances of such true friendship among men; but in perfection this picture is found only in the Friend of sinners. "The ancient Jews saw in this prophetic proverb a testimony that the Messiah would, by his incarnation, become the Brother of man."

19. Contention resulting from pride again. "I will suffer many wrongs ere I will complain of one, and endeavour to right it by contending. To strive with my superior is furious; with my equal doubtful; with my inferior sordid and base; with any, full of unquietness."—Bishop Hall.

27, 28. Bishop Hall says quaintly, "He cannot be known for a fool that says nothing. He is a fool, not who hath unwise thoughts, but who utters them. Even concealed folly is wisdom." Into this folly the man of understanding often falls. He needs a cool spirit (27) that reviles not when provoked (1 Pet. ii. 23).

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24.—Proverbs XVIII.

1. Some see in this an illustration of wholeheartedness (Phil. iii. 13; 1 Tim. iv. 15). From everything that hinders he separates himself, that he may give himself wholly to the pursuit of wisdom. The R.V. suggests that the separation is the evidence of a selfish spirit and of Pharisaical pride. Instead of seeking, he "rageth" at sound wisdom. This is to be shunned, the former to be sought earnestly.

3. Contempt and reproach are still the portion of the righteous from the wicked. The servant must expect to be as his Master (Ps. lxix. 20).

5. Comp. 2 Sam. xxiii. 3. This excellent quality was acknowledged to be in our Lord even by his enemies (Luke xx. 21). With such righteousness will He judge at last (Acts xvii. 31).

6-8. Four evil consequences following the conduct of the fool—contention, strokes, destruction, wounds. All these resulting from his words. Rightly did the Apostle connect our depravity with the speech (Rom. iii. 13). See also James iii. 6.

9. "Idleness is the mother of want and the sister of theft."

10, 11. The rich man, therefore, does not need this strong tower. He has a high wall of his own; yet how poor a defence is his gold (1 Tim vi. 17). The name of the Lord! What a strong tower is He (Ps. ix. 10)!

14. Heaviness of spirit is sometimes the needful result of manifold trials (1 Pet. i. 6). It is an experience all the more painful, because so many cannot sympathise with it. Our Lord knows what it is (Matt. xxvi, 37, 38). Bring the "broken spirit" to Him (Heb. iv. 15-16).

19. Contention among brethren is painful and hard to be healed. It was bad in Joseph's brethren toward himself, and in Absalom toward Amnon. But among brethren in Christ it is even more lamentable, and works incalculable mischief. Chrysostom advises—"Have but one enemy—the devil. With him never be reconciled, with thy brother never fall out."

24. The way to have love is to give it. The highest form of friendship is realised only in Christ (John xiii. 1). Is He yours? (John xv. 14).

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25.—Proverbs XIX.

2. The spring of action is "the soul," the instruments of action are the "feet." He who is without knowledge acts hastily, thoughtlessly, and "sinneth" = misses his mark, even that at which he aimed. All sin is failure.

3. How true was this in Adam (Gen. iii. 6-12), and in his firstborn (iv. 8-13). They are fullest of complaints against God who have most reason for complaint against themselves.

6. No doubt it is selfishness which is here described. But there is one Prince whose hands are laden with cosliest gifts; have you entreated his favour?

11. A grace for which man finds abundant opportunity every day. "It is easier not to admit the passion than when admitted to govern it."—Seneca. Our Lord's patience under great provocation was accounted by Justin Martyr his greatest miracle.

12. This is solemnly true of the King of kings. Do you tremble under his wrath, or rejoice in his favour? (Ps. lxxii. 6; Hos. xiv. 5).

13. "He who hath a smoky house, a dropping roof, and a contentious wife, hath no need to go abroad for war; he has enough in his own home."

15. Another warning against slothfulness. It is repeated so often because it is the ruin of so many. See also 24.

21. It is better therefore to cease from our own devices, and to ask his council. How we trouble ourselves and grieve Him by neglecting this (Is. xxxi. 1-3).

27. There are instructors who lead astray, against whom we need to be warned (Matt. vii. 15), Satan has ministers (2 Cor. xi. 13-15), who, concealing their true character, lie in wait to deceive. Of such there are many abroad to-day; and often their power to injure is in proportion to their nearness to the truth.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE-BOAT CREW mustered on Tuesday last week in the fo'c's'le of the Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, E. After a hymn, Miss Tuck gave an interesting account of the harvest home. A sister present encouraged the "Crew" to move forward in their noble work. Many testimonies followed from seamen and others. Miss Child's message to the Crew was, "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength" (Isa. xxx. 15).

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH MISSION.—At a meeting in connection with the open-air meeting Mr. W. Benson, the Evangelist, reported having held during the season (his fifteenth year), 153 out-door services, attended by over 22,000 persons, chiefly working men. Several cheering testimonies were borne as to spiritual good received from the meetings. Rev. H. Grainger gave an earnest address to the workers, and Mr. J. R. Glanvill read a letter from the Rev. Newman Hall, congratulating Mr. Benson on completing his sixtieth year, "so many of them spent in the blessed work of teaching the Gospel of Salvation."

GENERAL BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The seventy-fourth annual report, among details and statistics of the Indian districts and stations wherein missionaries and native preachers labour, abounds in incidents showing the value of the work. During April, May, and June of last year 600 persons died in Berhampore, from the great cholera epidemic; but out of this number only six belonged to the large Christian community. By the death of Bhobani, the Berhampore Church has lost its oldest member, who, for more than half a century, maintained an unblemished Christian reputation, and has rendered valuable service to the mission. The Bible-women speak of the increased interest which the women take in hearing the word read, and with what evident pleasure they listen to the singing of Christian hymns. An English service is conducted every Sunday evening, which is attended by a good number of English-speaking natives. At the Society's station in Rome, the famous influenza made havoc of the meetings; but throughout the experiment of holding them in "Holy Week," there were fairly good congregations, rapt attention, and interesting conversations at the close. The need is such as to make the heart ache. The poor are ignorant and priest-ridden; while infidelity, the monstrous offspring of Romanism and misguided reason, devours the educated classes. But there is just now much encouragement for those that are willing to labour for the future. The secretary of the mission is Rev. William Hill, 60, Wilson-street, Derby.

Sunday Afternoon, October 26.

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE.—LUKE xxii. 39-53.

GOLDEN TEXT: ISA. liii. 3.

THIS lesson describes the garden agony and the arrest.

THE AGONY (39-46).—The narratives of Matthew and Mark need to be combined with this. (1) The place.—"Mount of Olives" (39). Its exact locality is uncertain; but after descending from Jerusalem, and crossing the Cedron (John), at the beginning of the ascent to the mount, was a garden (John xviii. 1), probably an enclosed olive orchard; its name, "Gethsemane" = olive-press (Matt. and Mark)—here the agony took place. How significant its name! Contrast the struggle in this garden with that which took place in Eden. Why such different results from the two places? Because there God's will was refused, here it was accepted. "As He was wont" (39).—It was his place of retirement and fellowship (xxi. 37; Jno. viii. 1, xviii. 2). Did He need, and find time to use such a place of prayer? His example enforces his teaching (Matt. vi. 6).

(2) Matthew and Mark tell us that only three entered the garden with Him—who were they? It was not through indifference but through heavy grief that they slept (45). Human sympathy was insufficient for Him. Be thankful that He was real man enough to ask it, and that he had experience of its failure; does not this qualify Him to be our sympathising High Priest (Heb. ii. 17, 18)?

(3) His severe anguish (41-44).—Many particulars are omitted by Luke. (Recal Matt. xxvi. 37, 38). But others are added. "Withdrawn" (41) suggests "the idea of some violence to which He was subject; He is dragged from the disciples by anguish."—Godet. "Kneeled down" (41). Contrast Matthew and Mark. This frequent change of posture intimates deep agitation. "Agony" (44). It seems like a death struggle, while the sweat of blood reveals its awful severity. He "bore all Incarnate God could bear, with strength enough and none to spare." (See Heb. xii. 4). "Cases are known in which the blood, violently agitated by grief, penetrates through the vessels which enclose it, and escapes with the sweat." The mere prospect of death, and the physical suffering accompanying it, are not enough to explain this anguish. He was to be "made sin" (2 Cor. v. 21), to suffer for sin (1 Pet. iii. 18), and to suffer from the judgment of God (Isa. liii. 10; Zech. xiii. 7). This explains his natural shrinking; while it shows that all are concerned in his death. The suffering was ours, but was visited upon Him as our representative.

(4) His relief was obtained by prayer (42), earnest, importunate, definite, yet submissive. What emphasis this gives to his repeated warning (40, 46)! "An angel" (43, comp. Matt. iv. 11). The Lord of angels has put Himself into such circumstances as to need the ministry of angels! We share their holy ministrations, too (Ps. xxxiv. 7; Heb. i. 14). The relief did not mean the passing away of the cup (John xviii. 11), but the deliverance from all fear (Heb. v. 7), and the "possession of a profound calm which perfect submission gave to the soul."—Godet.

THE ARREST (47-53).—The time, the place, the former relation of Judas to Jesus, the paltry sum he was to receive, and especially the sign chosen—all combine to make the act of Judas base to the last degree. None but one who had been in the position of a friend could be guilty of such perfidy. There was no need for the sign (John xviii. 4), for Jesus readily exposed Himself. Yet Judas gave it, and thus marked himself as the worst example of treachery and hypocrisy.

The disciples' mistaken zeal (49, 50) appears in great contrast to Judas. They were willing to defend Christ with their lives, and Peter was ready to take the lead (John xviii. 10). His zeal was not according to knowledge, though the outcome of real attachment. "Suffer ye thus far" release me to do this service. Such a miracle evidences the unquenchable love of Jesus, and his power even when a captive. Their undeserved hatred is met by still further love. In this way learn to resent injuries (vi. 27-29, 35).

His rebuke (52, 53) convicts his enemies of cowardice; through fear of the people they left Him unmolested in the temple (53); and of folly, for of what use were their weapons (52) against Him? If He was in their hands it was not because they were powerful, but because He surrendered Himself. Carnal weapons could not then, and cannot now, prevail against Him. "This is your hour," &c. They had chosen the darkness for their dark deed. Yet they do not know that it is Satan's hour, and only theirs because they are being used as his slaves. How brief was the enemies' triumph; and how glorious the Lord's victory obtained through it!

LESSONS.

See the love of the suffering Saviour. Tell the measure of it by the severity of his anguish. "The first Greenlander who was converted, Kajarnak, owed his conversion to the preaching upon the Gethsemane agony."

Beware of mere outward profession. It is easier to be a Judas now that Christianity is popular than it was in our Lord's day. Everyone who makes use of religion for mere gain is repeating the sin of Judas. Be true.

See the true way of treating enemies. Peter's was the most natural, but Jesus chose a better method. To answer insult with love—to refrain from striking back even when we know our superior strength—this is difficult, but it is Christ's way. Imitate Him.

The Temperance Cause.

GLASGOW has no fewer than three licensed houses to each thousand of the population, and of these public-house licences 218 are held by women.

John B. Gough used to say that every moderate drinker could abandon the intoxicating cup if he would; and every inebriate would if he could.

Intemperance is becoming more common in Greece, and, as a counteractive, efforts are being made to diffuse suitable knowledge among the people.

Our tobacco bill for last year represents a consumption of nearly a pound and a half for every man, woman, and child in Great Britain and Ireland.

A report of the Conference on "Alcohol and Childhood," held recently under the auspices of the Church of England Temperance Society, is about to be published by the Society in a separate form.

The Bishop of London preached in Upton Church, Torquay, in connection with the celebration of the Exeter Rechabite Jubilee. Seven districts have been formed out of the original Exeter district. The Society is largely composed of working men.

The centenary celebration of the birth of Father Mathew has been held at Cork, and has secured the interest of many Protestants there. Strong condemnation was passed upon the action of a small section of the Parliamentary party which, last session, advocated the publicans' interest.

The General Methodist Conference of Canada, which has just met at Montreal, pronounced strongly in favour of temperance. It also appointed an influential deputation to wait on the Government, and on the opposition leaders, to ascertain what legislation on the subject they would propose.

It is suggested that the best remedy for the threatened distress in Ireland would be to close the distilleries, as was done in 1809-10 and 1813-4, and with admirable effect. In those years the consumption of spirits fell to 4¼ millions of gallons, but when the distilleries resumed it rose to 7½ millions of gallons.

Dr. Parker devoted his one-minute sermon, on Sunday morning week, to the subject of sacramental wine. He said it was high time that intoxicating wine was banished from the Sacramental service. It had done incalculable mischief in every section of the Church, having driven men to long-abandoned habits of intemperance. He was also opposed to the vile concoctions substituted for wine. Plain water was the right thing to take in the sacred service.

KHOND MISSION.—A call to prayer has been issued asking for guidance and blessing in these matters:—(1) For Messrs. Wilkinson and Long, now at Berhampore, preparing to start about October 14, for the jungle for the third time; (2) for the native magistrate of Mdagiri, who desires to be a Christian; (3) for Mr. Thomas Wood, of Cliff College, who is going out November 13, to labour in the Coromandel on his own charges; (4) for the future of the mission to 1½ million Khonds, whose only missionary died when he had learned the language twenty-four years ago. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mr. A. F. Emeric de St. Dalmas, 11, De Montfort-square, Leicester.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

LETTER from an OLD PATIENT—Formerly at LEWES,

Whose husband is now the minister of Zoar Chapel, Great Alie-street, London.

It is 20 years since Mrs. Ashdown came to see me; but her case has never been published. At the time I saw her at Coombe Lodge, she was suffering from chronic bronchitis and disease of the right lung. Consumption (which had now set in) had been very prevalent in her family. Symptoms of the same were well marked, and strength and flesh were failing. She followed my treatment fully, and got well.

Writing me, May 29, of this year, from Endwell-Road, Brockley, on the case of a poor woman, she says:—

"I am one who has experienced great—very great benefit from your treatment, by the Lord's blessing. I was very ill before applying to you, with cough, expectoration, perspirations, fever, and great weakness. But my health slowly, but gradually improved. I had a daughter 5 weeks old when I sought your advice, and she is now over 20, and I had, after that, two sons. I have used your medicine at times since. My health has continued, and I am better than I ever was. Every one who knew me then, and who knows me now, says I am a miracle. I thought this would interest you."

I need not say I was deeply interested with this letter.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission,

Office: 98, High Street, Homerton, London, E.

October 20th, 1890.

Dear Readers of The Christian,

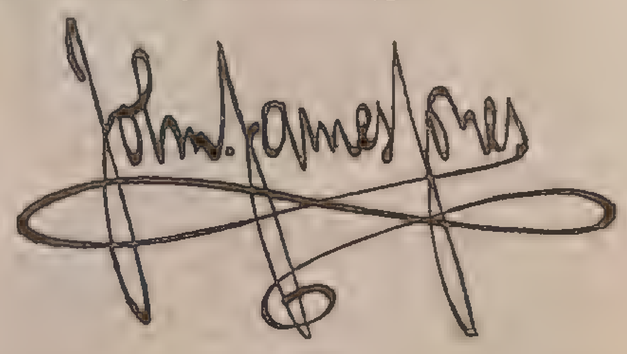
The pressing needs of this Society compel us again to ask for your kind sympathy and assistance. Owing to the recent Influenza Epidemic the applications from very poor men, women, and children for admission into our Convalescent Homes, from nearly all parts of the country, have been more numerous than ever, and from January 1 to September 23 of this year we have been able to receive 1685 patients in our Homes, the duration of their stay varying from one to six weeks. This change of air, with good food, was almost as life from the dead to very many, and to others it laid the foundation of renewed health for the work of life.

Through the thoughtful and generous kindness of our Subscribers and Donors for many years past, we have been able to make our arrangements for the Winter's Work of the Society among the Sick, Suffering, and Destitute Poor, but now we find our funds utterly exhausted, and we are unable to make our usual necessary arrangements with the Coal Merchants, Bakers, &c., who receive our relief tickets all over London and its Suburbs.

We sincerely trust that our efforts to relieve the sufferings of our poorer brethren and sisters may draw forth from each reader of this, some token of the love and care bestowed upon them by Him, "whose we are, and whom we serve," so that those who are sorely needing it may receive at our hands, that assistance which we are always ready and willing to give, if in our power to do so.

Sincerely thanking the many readers of The Christian for their generous and thoughtful kindness in the past, and hoping that this application will again meet with their approval, and early response,

Yours ever most gratefully,



P.S.—Donations will be received with sincere thanks, and acknowledgments promptly sent if addressed to me at the office of the Society; to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; Messrs. Josiah Beddow & Son (Chartered Accountants), 2, Gresham-buildings, Basinghall-street, E.C.; or the Society's Bankers, London & County Bank, Amhurst-road, Hackney, London, E.

St. Giles' Christian Mission

WORK AMONG THE LOST WOMEN OF ST. GILES' AND AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,—The generous response that was so kindly made to our very urgent appeal in the Spring enabled us to tide over our difficulty at that time, and to meet all necessary expenses.

The summer receipts, however, have been sadly disappointing, several large subscriptions not having come to hand, and we are again in sore straits to find the means to carry on our many-sided and ever increasing work.

We are loth to relinquish any part of the work without making an earnest effort to obtain funds to carry it on in its entirety, and now place ourselves in the hands of our loving Father, knowing that He will clearly guide us in the course we are to take.

Donations will be most thankfully acknowledged if sent to our Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; to our Secretary, Mr. W. Wheatley, 29, Brook-street, Holborn, E.C.; or to

Yours sincerely,

GEO. HATTON.

Superintendent of St. Giles' Christian Mission.

The Sabbath for Paris.

An earnest desire is expressed by the Committee of the

for the appointment of a special qualified Missionary to instruct the people of that Sabbath-desecrating city in the obligations, duties, and privileges of the Lord's Day. Evangelistic work in Paris has created a spirit of inquiry about the right observance of the Day.

Particulars will be gladly supplied, and contributions received, by the Hon. Secretary for England,

J. M. WEYLLAND.

The object of this Society is to promote Mission Work in the Church of England by supplying a Staff of Experienced Mission Preachers.

It is the earnest desire of the Committee to do a larger work in poor (town or country) districts, where without the aid of the Society a Mission could not otherwise be held, but they are unable to render such assistance from lack of money. THEY EARNESTLY, THEREFORE, APPEAL FOR FUNDS to enable them to meet this pressing necessity.

All applications and Contributions should be sent to Secretary, 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT

BY GOD'S BLESSING, the RESCUE WORK of this Society continues to make ADVANCES in seeking and saving Lost Women, both by MIDNIGHT MEETINGS and MISSION WORK IN THE STREETS.

Arrangements are being made specially in view of carrying GLAD TIDINGS OF SALVATION as far as possible to EVERY OUTCAST WOMAN on the LAST NIGHTS OF THIS YEAR, coupled with offers of temporal help.

THE COMMITTEE will be glad to enlist voluntary workers, so that the outlying districts of the Metropolis may also be visited, and the Fallen appealed to in the streets to REPENT AND TURN TO GOD, especially in such places as CROYDON, NORWOOD, HOUNSLOW, WANDSWORTH, STRATFORD, WEST HAM, WOOLWICH, GREENWICH, DALSTON, &c. Volunteers are requested to address by letter, to JOHN H. LE CHRISTIEN, Organising Superintendent, 8a, Red Lion Square, W.C.

SPECIAL DONATIONS are earnestly entreated for the work now being carried on, also for the Mission indicated above, which may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, or to the SECRETARY,

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

THE COMMITTEE are very unwilling to press the claims of this Charity, but every day most painful applications are made for admission, and the thought of refusing a helping hand to any young woman struggling to get out of her miserable life is very distressing, especially in the case of those who have made a first false step downwards. Very sad tales of suffering and wrong are told by these young women, many of them the orphan daughters of parents who moved in a good position, but were left when young, friendless, and wholly unprovided for. We are quite sure if the readers could witness the distress and anguish in many cases of those who apply, it would give them pleasure to aid us in restoring them to positions of usefulness.

It has scarcely ever happened in the experience of the Committee that the mothers rescued have fallen a second time. We are in urgent need of FUNDS, and any help will be most opportune at the present time.

Funds greatly needed to extend the Itinerant work.

The Scripture Readers are placed under carefully selected Superintendents, and not only located in Towns and Cities, but also sent into remote districts where they are generally well received by all denominations.

Irish speaking Readers are sent where required. Sailors in Seaports are visited, and Bethel Services held.

The work is carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy.

Reports and all particulars sent post free on application to Captain James Kearney White, Secretary, Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and 9, Paternoster-row, London.

Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of The Christian.

Please notice exact title of Society as above.

"Our readers will recollect the intensely interesting story of 'Little Kathleen.' Miss Butler has been able to obtain a considerable amount of information; and a sketch of the singularly beautiful life of this young friend of medical missions is published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott. We bespeak for the little book as wide a circulation as possible. It is one of the sweetest testimonies to the grace of God in the heart of a little child which has appeared in these days; and in its cloth edition at 1s. will be an attractive gift to readers, both old and young."—Medical Missions at Home and Abroad, Sept., 1890.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Samuel Langdon, Wesleyan Missionary, Ceylon.

☞ Our next issue will be a Double Number, price 2d., and will contain "The Christian" Almanack for 1891.

Rev. William Haslam, together with Mrs. Haslam, and Mr. Campbell (who accompanied Rev. G. C. Grubb on his recent tour), are starting to-day (Friday) for India. They expect to be engaged for some six months in mission work amongst the churches, endeavouring especially to stir up believers to personal consecration and service. It is intended to visit Bombay, Jubbulpore, Allahabad, and Calcutta, returning by the North-West Provinces. We wish our friends God-speed in this new effort, and are sure that our readers will heartily respond to their request for remembrance in prayer.

Dr. Barnardo's lengthened absence in Canada has naturally caused a slackening of the public interest in his home organisations. We regret to learn that he has returned to his post in London only to find a depleted exchequer and an over-drawn bank account. This is a trying time of the year for all voluntarily supported charities, and the immense scope of Dr. Barnardo's institutions causes them to suffer accordingly. Such a noble work ought not to lack the heartiest support, and we feel sure it is only necessary to state the need in order to have it supplied. Help rendered now will be worth much more to the institutions than if it were given a couple of months hence.

The Church Parochial Mission Society has done a very wise thing in securing the services, for a year, of Rev. Dr. Harrison, vicar of Lightcliffe, Halifax, to carry on the special work of evidential missions. All who heard or read his remarkable address at the recent Roxeth Conference of Missioners will recognise his unique fitness for the work of commending the Gospel of Jesus Christ to those who are the prey of intellectual doubts or questionings. We anticipate much blessing on Dr. Harrison's labours, and warmly commend him to the Christian communities up and down the land. Applications for his services should be made without delay to Rev. H. Muir, secretary, Church Parochial Missionary Society, 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, London.

There was the utmost force in the conclusion urged by Principal Cave at the Manchester meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, that the burden of proof lies on those who deny the Mosaic authorship of the Books of the Law. Concessions to the so-called "higher criticism," and the too ready acceptance of objections which eschew definite statements, are betraying the cause of God. Both in science and Biblical criticism an exaggerated estimate of the opinions of scholars, supposed to be learned, has been one of the greatest mistakes of these recent years, and such confidence has been proved to be altogether misplaced.

After a period of somewhat trying suspense, the Westminster Congregational Church have received from Rev. John McNeill, of Regent-square, a negative response to its renewed invitation that he should become their pastor. The reason given by Mr. McNeill, we understand, is that he is not prepared to throw off his allegiance to the Presbyterian body and turn Congregationalist, which would be necessary from the terms of the trust-deed. At a meeting of his own congregation at Regent-square on Friday evening, an earnest desire was expressed to co-operate with Mr. McNeill in utilising as far as possible his peculiar gifts for presenting the Gospel to the masses. The meeting resolved that he should be set free on Sabbath evenings to conduct evangelistic services in London as the way may open up. This arrangement seems to be one that will meet the demands of the case, and we trust it will be loyally observed.

In the late meetings of the Congregational Union we notice that one of the most successful was in connection with Young People's Guilds. We rejoice in any effort to attract young people into closer relations with the professing Church, and to interest them in all that is healthy and earnest in the corporate life of a Christian community. And yet we are not wholly satisfied with this Guild movement. We recognise that one branch is devoted to direct spiritual improvement; but we feel that this may be neutralised by the other three branches, one of which, if we mistake not, is devoted to the cultivation of amusement and recreation. Now, of course, we all need recreation. There is no sin, but the contrary, in the pastimes which relieve us, and especially the young, from the strain of severe work. But we gravely question whether it is the province of the Church to provide this relaxation. And we fear that the constitution of a branch of a society, with the distinct purpose of providing it, may introduce a very harmful element into church life, counteracting the better influences which the Guilds might otherwise exert.

Last Sunday was the day of universal prayer on behalf of Sunday-schools. It is well that the claims of the young upon the sympathy and solicitude of Christian people should be periodically enforced, as they were from many pulpits last Lord's Day. It is impossible adequately to estimate the importance of bringing Christian influence to bear upon the young. "In the days of youth, ere the evil days come," is above all the time to begin the service of God. Let this fact be duly appreciated, and the ministry of our juvenile population will be pursued with increased vigour by many who have not as yet realised the blessedness of labour in this direction.

The National Protestant Congress, which will meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, next week, in Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W., should witness a goodly coming together of Protestants of all evangelical denominations. Rome is ever busy sowing the seeds of superstition and tyranny; she aims at bringing mankind into submission by the assertion of sacerdotal claims. As Popery succeeds, liberty of conscience is imperilled; and wherever Popery has sway there is spiritual despotism, and much that is very degrading besides. We trust the Congress will stimulate co-operation among Protestants in face of a common foe. The speakers at the several sessions represent various denominations, and the subjects are devotional as well as practical. Tickets of admission may be had from the hon. secretaries, 18, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

In a letter to The Times of Tuesday last, Mr. H. M. Stanley expressed astonishment that only £2300 has as yet been contributed out of the £5000 needed for a missionary steamer on the Victoria Nyanza. He points out that the missions at work on the Congo, Lake Tanganyika, and Lake Nyassa are well equipped in the matter of steam power, and it is a great pity that the Church Missionary Society should not have this valuable aid in their evangelising work at Uganda. Surely some of the wealthy friends of the C.M.S. will hasten to provide the £2700 still needed for the purchase of the missionary steamer.

The subject of the persecution of the Jews in Russia has been frequently alluded to in these columns, but at least an earnest hope may now be expressed that the Commission which is announced to have been appointed to inquire into the subject may result in some real amelioration of their condition. But the repeated failures of numerous former Commissions—notably that of Count Pahlen in 1883, whose report was favourable to the Jews, and was (perhaps for that very reason) set aside—do not justify any sanguine expectations. So far as may be judged from its recent policy, the desire of the Russian Government is to increase rather than to lighten the existing grievous disabilities, which, it is stated, "attack the Jew's moral and material well-being; which not only cloud his public life, but penetrate into the most intimate recesses of his private life." For an exhaustive and lucid treatise on this subject in its various aspects, we commend to our readers the two articles, entitled, "The Jews in Russia," which appeared in The Times of October 9 and 13.

From the latter we quote the following passage:—

> It has been estimated that of the five millions of Russian Jews, two millions will, if these decrees are carried out, be deprived of their means of living and thrown upon the charity and hospitality of the other three.... These Russian edicts, if they are carried out, will cost Russia something like a million of Jewish lives, which will not even be spent elsewhere for the benefit of other nations, but will be miserably trampled to extinction in the fetid filth of the over-crowded Ghetto. We hear, we write, we repeat these things. We do not realise or, in truth, believe them. They are incredible of a Government which takes rank among the six Great Powers of Europe.

We are glad to observe that several appeals in London against the justices' decisions not to renew licences, in cases where brewers and brewing companies were the real owners, have been dismissed. The decision is of vital interest to temperance reformers, and certainly marks a decided step in advance. In Wales, too, during the past few days, similar decisions have been given, and, what is no less important, in several cases licences have been refused on the ground of the public-houses not being required, and no question whatever of compensation has been entertained. If licensing justices would only make up their minds to apply the existing laws firmly, there would, perhaps, be little need to agitate for more sweeping prospective measures. A licensing magistrate lately wrote to The Times to say that, if renewals were refused in all cases where there had been a breach of the regulations, it would amount very often to a sweeping reduction in the number of licences.

It is stated in Nature Notes, on the authority of Mrs. Knight, of All Saints' Vicarage, Derby, that the bright red birds worn in ladies' hats are prepared in France, and that in order to preserve the feathers in the best possible condition the birds are killed in a horribly cruel way, being put in a cool oven, which is gradually heated till they are dead. No wonder Mrs. Brightwen says, commenting upon this, "If this account can be corroborated, we cannot think that anyone worthy of the name of woman would degrade herself by wearing ornaments procured in so horrible a manner." We much regret to notice the renewal of this cruel fashion for the coming season.

The chairman of the recent annual Conference of the North-Western Poor Law Division was able to announce a considerable reduction in the number of paupers, the figures on January 1 last being 24,000 less than in the previous January. When it is considered that there are still 793,000 paupers in the country, little room is left, however, for congratulation. No allusion seems to have been made to the fact that fully three-fourths of English pauperism is the direct or indirect effect of drunkenness, and that not a few of the lunacy cases may be traced to the same cause. Remove this root of the evil by diminishing the drinking facilities, and in another generation half the workhouses and asylums would be empty. And as to the vagrants, who for the most part belong to the idle and worthless class, they should be subjected to penal discipline, and be made to understand that if they will not work voluntarily they must do so under compulsion.

It was also stated at the Conference that there are two hundred and forty-one thousand children under sixteen in receipt of relief. Mr. Hibbert expressed the opinion that the greatest hope for improvement lay among these, and urged that they should be so educated that they should not become paupers when they grew up. We cannot, however, entirely agree with him when among the means to such a desirable end he enumerates workhouse and district schools. The whole atmosphere of the former is pauperising, and although the latter are a great improvement, they also are open to the objection that in them the schoolfellows with whom the destitute children are brought into daily contact are the precociously vicious offspring of vicious and idle parents. It is rather by finding foster-parents for the children among people of their own class, and thus surrounding them with home influence and home restraints, that the entail of pauperism may be effectually cut off. Let those who would understand this question read the chapter on "The Orphan's Wrong" in Mr. Peek's excellent book, "Social Wreckage."

"Several years ago," says an article in The Christian Union of October 3, "the journeymen bakers of New York wrote courteously to five hundred city ministers of religion praying for their sympathy and help in reduction of their hours of Sunday labour. Painful to record, only six of these ministers vouchsafed a reply. The fact is noted to emphasise the change that has come over ecclesiastical opinion. Now the orthodox denominations in New York are forming influential committees, which are turning a practical attention to questions of labour, the aspirations of wage-earners, and the responsibilities of wealth." The movement is waxing powerful; so long as it enforces Bible principles, it will be preserved from dangerous issues, will go far to break down the prejudices of the people against the churches, and will prove hopeful as a sign of the period.

"In Darkest England."

None of the operations of the Salvation Army have received more general sympathy than the Slum and Rescue work; and this sympathy has been well deserved. When, therefore, we are told that in the stupendous scheme set forth in his new book, "In Darkest England and the Way Out," General Booth "does not propose to do anything on a large scale which he has not already proved his ability to perform by practical experiment upon a small scale," we can only desire with all our hearts that his benevolent undertaking may achieve complete and permanent success.

The condition of the 3,000,000 of our population, who, through ignorance and vice, drink and crime, helplessness and oppression, have become the "sunken tenth" which General Booth aspires to help, is a disgrace to civilisation; and when a man comes forward with a comprehensive and detailed plan, even those who think they see instability in its foundation, and defects in its superstructure, may well heed the counsel of Gamaliel: "Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

The million of money required is one of the smallest of the real difficulties. That would be contributed in an hour if the conscience of the Church of Christ were aroused, and its judgment convinced that this man, and this method, are God's appointed agency.

On one subject, however, we would utter an earnest note of warning. Let not a shilling contributed to this scheme be permitted to lessen the subscription to agencies which are already in the field, doing this very work on a smaller scale, with proved efficiency; and it certainly is not desirable, even if it were possible, that all these should be swallowed up in one great organisation.

We are not a little surprised at General Booth's "notable declaration" that > These starving, hungry crowds will not be saved in their present circumstances. All the clergymen, home missionaries, tract distributors, sick visitors, and everyone else who cares about the salvation of the poor, may make up their minds as to that. If these people are to believe in Jesus Christ, become the servants of God, and escape the miseries of the wrath to come, they must be helped out of their present social miseries. They must be put into a position in which they can work and eat, and have a decent room to live and sleep in, and see something before them besides a long, weary, monotonous, grinding round of toil and anxious care, with nothing at the further end but the hospital or the Union. If the Christian workers will join hands to effect this change it will be accomplished, and the people will rise up and bless them, and be saved; if they will not, the people will curse them and perish.

If the Salvation Army has proved anything, it has proved the fallacy of this assertion, for some of the most effective stories with which The War Cry has resounded have been the conversion to God of men and women out of these very conditions; and one of its leading principles in its early days was that the blood of Christ and the fire of the Holy Ghost were God's sufficient weapons to destroy the works of the devil. The assertion now of the necessity of lifting men out of their submerged condition, in order to prepare them for the Gospel, is a new departure, and appears to us to be one of the most significant and least hopeful features of the scheme.

This is, in part, explained by the General's acknowledgment of "valuable literary help from a friend of the poor, who, though not in any way connected with the Salvation Army, has the deepest sympathy with its aims, and is to a large extent in harmony with its principles."

Who this friend is may be gathered from the lengthy article in the current Review of Reviews, in which we are pained and shocked to find the following passage:—"Eighteen millions may be regarded as the cash value of the endowment erected by the Salvation Army out of nothing in twenty-five years. A tolerably substantial miracle this, compared with which that of the loaves and fishes was but a small affair"!!

In "In Darkest England" the voice is the voice of General Booth, but the hands are the hands of Mr. Stead. We greatly admire the benevolence of Mr. Stead, but we fear, and feel, that his preponderating influence is leading the originator of the Salvation Army away from the principles on which that movement was based.

Nevertheless, we shall rejoice to find, in the progress of the movement, that all our fears are falsified, and to see this magnificent conception realised in the salvation of the down-trodden host, in spirit, and soul, and body.

REV. J. IRELAND JONES, the veteran C.M.S. missionary, sails next Saturday, in the s.s. Clan Macarthur, on his return to Ceylon. Our readers will, we are sure, respond to his request to be remembered in prayer during the voyage, and when he and Mrs. Ireland Jones re-enter on their work.

A FAREWELL MEETING to Miss Agnes M. Henderson, M.D., Aberdeen, daughter of Mr. William Henderson, of Devanha, ex-Lord Provost of the city, was held last week of the Ladies' Asaociation of the Free Church for Female Education in India and Africa. Miss Henderson goes to Nagpore, in the capacity of medical missionary, proceeding first to Bombay, there to learn the language, and to acquire some knowledge of Indian diseases.

LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

THE WORD MADE FLESH.—John i. 14.

"The Word became Flesh," thus the Revised Version better renders the original. But what a profound mystery these words cover!

Open the golden compasses of thought to measure, if it be possible, the distance between these two extremes, the Word, and flesh. The Word, the Eternal and Ever Blessed Son of God; the fellow of Jehovah; able to utter God because Himself God; through whom all things were made. Flesh, a frail and transitory fabric woven from the dust, and destined to return to dust; limited to time and space; comprehending, as it does so evidently, not only the human body, but the entire human nature of which the flesh is the outward and visible embodiment. What verb shall unite extremes so infinitely removed? What link is there for these two?

The Word made flesh? It is true, but not enough.

The Word was wroth with flesh! So it might have been, but this is not the knot of union.

The Word pitied flesh! That had been marvellous, but also insufficient.

The Word clothed Himself with flesh! Even that were inadequate, for in that case He would only have borrowed a temporary disguise, which He might as easily have thrown off, and there had been no entire oneness.

No! The Word became Flesh. He was the same Divine Being as before. He kept his place in the bosom of the Father during his earthly life (iii. 13). He who was confined to time and space, was identical with Him whose Being is beyond either. There was no break or cessation in the essential Oneness of his personality, before or after his holy incarnation. But, as far as we can understand it, though in the essence of his Being He underwent no change, yet He voluntarily gave up the Divine mode of existence, that He might assume the human mode of existence, and might bear it with Him through death and resurrection to invest it ultimately with the Divine glory that He had with the Father before the worlds were made (xvii. 5).

Note, for a moment longer, that word flesh.—It seems to have been carefully selected, to show that the nature of the Lord Jesus gathers into itself all the different traits and attributes of our many-sided nature, sin excepted. If we had been told that the Word became a man, it would have seemed as if men only could have perfect sympathy with Him, or that his nature contained only the elements of manhood. But, since the word flesh is used, we feel that not one sex but both, not one age but all, not one race but the entire human family, may find its characteristic properties in his lovely glorious Being. No one form of human life has an exclusive right to Him. All forms of life find their counterpart in Him. All rays of colour blend their hues in the white light of his nature. All sides of love, like the double optics of a stereoscope, do but set forth that one infinite love which fills his heart.

"Christ gathers up in Himself the ideal virtues of man and woman, of boyhood and girlhood, of age and iddle life," of European and Asiatic. All that is most noble and strong in men, all that is most graceful and tender in women, all that is most winsome and engaging in little children, all that is lovely in any one, is to be found in our dear Lord, in whom is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, but Christ is all and in all (Gal. iii. 28; Col. iii. 11).

This distinguishes Christianity from all religions beside. They are tribal, topical, limited in their range to the people among whom they have originated. Take Mohammedanism, for instance. It no doubt has some grains of precious truth, as, for instance, the unity of God; but it can never become a world-wide religion, because there are large portions of our common human nature which can find no counterpart or representation in the character or teachings of Mohammed. To use the expression of another, "the mosaic of humanity is not totalised in him."

But Christ touches man at every point, man as man, through every grade and variety of manhood. There is no note in the great organ of our humanity, with the exception of the jarring discord of sin, which does not, when it is struck, awaken a sympathetic vibration in the mighty range and scope of the Being of Christ.

This is the secret of that wonderful fascination which Jesus has for men. We feel that He can understand us. "He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities." "He is made in all things like unto his brethren." And, as we shall see in a moment, every man can find in Christ the complement of his nature, the supply of his deficiencies, the fulness for his need.

Dwelt Among Us.—Tabernacled is the better word. What is there here but an allusion to the wanderings of the desert, during which Jehovah dwelt in a tent or tabernacle, a pilgrim like the rest! Listen to his own words: "I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle" (2 Sam. vii. 6).

All that was a symbol of eternal realities. The Tabernacle was a material representation of the great truth of the Incarnation. It was made after the pattern of the nature of our Lord, which, as the sublime antitype, was eternally present to the mind and thought of God. Well then might Jesus speak in the same breath of the temple and of his body (ii. 21). And well may the Holy Ghost here use the same comparison.

We are the pilgrim host. Our bodies are but frail, shifting tabernacles, to be as easily dissolved as a tent is struck (2 Cor. v. 1), and amidst us has been reared the true Tabernacle, which God has pitched and not man; and through which the Shekinah has shone, kindling the frail curtains of mortal flesh with dazzling radiance on its passage through their folds in waves of glowing glory.

There were times when the light that shone in the most holy place could not be confined there, but issued forth, and flooded the entire structure so that the multitudes without could discern its splendour. And so in the earthly life of our blessed Lord there were moments when the glory of the Only-Begotten of the Father broke through the limitations which He had assumed, and bathed his mortal body in transcendent light and beauty. Such a season was the Transfiguration, when even his garments became white as the light. Then were the Apostles "eye-witnesses of his majesty." Then did they behold his glory, "the glory as of the Only-Begotten of the Father."

We beheld his Glory.—It is as if he said, "There can be no mistake. The Lord was no mere appearance, or phantom, or vision of the imagination. My eyes are dimming now, but once they were bright and keen, and could not have been deceived. My head is white with the snows of many winters, but it often lay on his bosom. I can easily recall the accents of his voice, often have I felt the clasp of his hand. And if there is one day I remember above others, it is that in which He challenged us to behold his hands and his feet, and assure ourselves that it was not a spirit, but Himself. 'We have not followed cunningly devised fables;' and we could not have been mistaken as to the glory, which could not be hid, and which betrayed his divine power and Godhead."

Full of Grace and Truth.—Grace is mentioned three times in this paragraph, and it is the fitting climax to the golden series of revelations. The keynote of Nature was Order; of History, was Justice: of Conscience, was Righteousness; of Jewish revelation, as summed up in the name of Moses, was Law. But the keynote of the Incarnation was Grace—the unmerited love of God—which made itself of no reputation and took up the nature of man.

God's glory is his grace. When Moses desired to behold his glory, this was the reply wafted back into his soul: "I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee; and will be gracious. . . ."

But it is grace allied with truth.—He is a just God and a Saviour. There is a bridal between his righteousness and his mercy Deep down in the solid granite of everlasting truth are laid the foundations of the Temple, of which the doors stand ever open to welcome the whosoever of mankind. Who would wish it otherwise? Who would care for a love which contravened the most elementary conceptions of justice in our hearts, and which might one day have to yield to inevitable scruple and compunction?

Of his Fulness have all we received.—The all we cannot only mean Himself and his fellow disciples who had seen the Lord, but all the believers of that early age, to whom He wrote, scattered in different places, and removed by sixty years from the death of Christ; and not them alone, but all who by faith have become one with Him by a living faith.

The Apostle sheds an exquisite light on these words when he says, "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell. In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And in Him ye are made full" (Col. i. 19, ii. 9, 10).

God longs for us to live full lives, and that we may He has put all his glorious resources into the nature of the Man Christ Jesus, so making them accessible and putting them within the reach of the weakest and sinfullest of his children. Thus does the channel of the Nile bring water which is generated in the mountains of South Africa, within reach of the Egyptian peasants, whose gardens are situated on the edge of the burning sands.

Why then are we so content with poverty and emptiness? Let us receive out of his fulness. It is throbbing like an ocean against the walls of our hearts continually, let us open to let it in, that it may cover the long unsightly reaches of ooze and sand.

Let us ask the Holy Spirit to teach us the blessed habit of taking what we need from hour to hour. The uplifted eye of faith will at any moment cause a tide of his fulness to flow in, enriching, strengthening, and blessing the soul.

Grace for Grace.—Wave on wave. It is a mistake to rest on past or present experiences, eking them out with jealous care, lest they should run short. The best means of getting more grace is to use the grace we have got. It is the law of all life, especially of spiritual life: "To him that hath shall more be given, and he shall have abundantly."

We may not always perceive the flow of the golden oil of grace from its Divine reservoir. We may not be always sensible of the Divine communications. But if we claim them by a naked faith, and if we live up to the limits of what we have got, so as to be very spendthrifts of our spiritual revenues, there will be no limit to the blessed stores with which we shall become enriched for ever.

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

At the monthly gathering of Christian workers last week at the Home of Industry, Mr. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, presided. He mentioned the desire to send out 1,000 missionaries the coming year. Even if this number were sent, there would then be only one missionary to 80,000 people.

Mr. Mitchell, of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission, gave a practical exposition of John xiv. 12.

Mr. Marcus Wood said he had been labouring in China for seven and a half years, and the Lord has blessed him and his wife in a remarkable way. For the last two years he had given his time to helping young men to learn the language. He dwelt on the deep need for more workers in China. In one province there are twelve millions of people and nine workers to preach the Gospel.

Miss Gage Brown, who has been working two years at a village three miles from Nazareth, and has come home for a time because of health, gave an interesting account of work. She told how the Lord had blessed them in healing the people's bodies, and enabled them to tell of the greater sickness of the soul and of the great Healer. There are schools for the children and meetings in different houses.

Mr. Piggott, of the China Inland Mission, told an interesting story of a blind man brought to Christ, who, in spite of persecution from relatives, witnessed for Him. Mrs. Hudson Taylor, who leaves in a fortnight for China, said it was nearly nine years since she last came home, and now the way seemed clear and plain for her to go again. She asked prayer for herself and for Mr. Taylor, who is on his way from Australia to China. Miss Turner, who is sailing again in a few weeks for China, gave an interesting account of how she was led to the Mission field, and how she had been blessed there; she, too, pleaded for more workers.

Mrs. Merry introduced a young man from Canada (one of the former boys), accepted for China by the American branch of the C.I.M. She asked prayer that many of the Christian lads might be led to offer themselves for the foreign field. Mrs. Merry asked all to join in praise for the safe arrival of Miss Macpherson on the other side.

Protestant Notes.

The Bishop of Lincoln will re-open the church of St. Saviour's, Leeds, on Monday next. This church has had a remarkable history. It is nearly fifty years since it was built, at the expense of the late Dr. Pusey, who placed the following petition over the west door: "Ye who enter this holy place, pray for the sinner who built it." The Bishop of Ripon thought this inscription objectionable, on the ground that, when the founder died, it would become a request to pray for his soul; but his lordship at length gave way to the wishes of the promoters, and consecrated the church, without requiring the removal of the petition. Since then St. Saviour's, Leeds, has become a recruiting ground for Rome, to which communion several of its clergy have, from time to time, seceded. One interesting fact, not generally known, remains to be recorded. One of the vicars of St. Saviour's was a Mr. Knott, who was trusted so much by the Tractarians that he became Father Confessor to Dr. Pusey himself. In that capacity he became familiar with the inmost plans of the leaders of his party; but eventually he resigned his living, became a truly converted man, and one of the most outspoken Protestants in the Church of England. He laboured in India until his death, and never ceased to protest with all his powers against the Romanising work carried on in the Church of England. A few months since, the late Canon Liddon applied, as biographer of Dr. Pusey, for particulars of the later career of Mr. Knott. These were fully supplied to him by a faithful Protestant lady, who knew the ex-Father Confessor in India; but there is reason to fear that the true story of Mr. Knott's conversion to Protestantism will not find a place in the forthcoming "Life of Dr. Pusey."

We observe that the Archdeacon of London is advertised to preach this week in All Souls', Clapton-park, on behalf of the Ritualistic "Church of England Working Men's Society." Can the Archdeacon be aware that the Society for which he will plead has always been notorious for its defence of the most advanced law-breakers in the Church of England; and that it has circulated a considerable amount of literature of a distinctly Romish type?

The Ritualistic "Guild of All Souls'" is preparing for its great anniversary, known in the Church of Rome as "All Souls' Day." It will then cause to be offered up in hundreds of churches both Vespers and Masses for the Dead, and is prepared to supply to purchasers "The Office of the Dead," according to "both Roman and Sarum use." The wonder is that the Bishops do not step in and inhibit all such services. They could do so if they liked. On Monday, November 10, the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament will cause to be offered up in hundreds of churches, Masses for the Dead, on behalf of its deceased members. A special Solemn Requiem Mass will, in connection with this Confraternity, be offered on that day at 11 a.m. —unless the Bishop of London forbids it, as he should—in the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, Munster-square, N.W. The English Church Union also has an annual Requiem Mass, but the date has not yet been announced. Here we have additional proof, if such were needed, of the existence of a Romanising party in the Church of England.

The great interest aroused in England by the exposure of the cruelties practised in a Naples convent affords a suitable opportunity for calling attention to certain evils already existing in ritualistic convents here in England. Miss Povey's recent book on "Nunnery Life in the Church of England" has startled and horrified many persons, who little dreamt that such evils as are there exposed could possibly exist in the present day. About thirty years since, one of Dr. Pusey's Sisters of Mercy wrote a powerful exposure of cruelties practised before her eyes in convents connected with Dr. Pusey and Miss Sellon. The book bore the title of "Sisterhoods in the Church of England," and its authoress was Miss Margaret Goodman. It was never answered by the Ritualists, and is now, unfortunately, out of print.

It is sometimes said that Ritualistic Sisters of Mercy may leave their convents at once, if they feel aggrieved with their treatment. To this plea Miss Goodman's reply is simply crushing:—"I know," she writes, "several Sisters who have spent every penny of their capital, and Dr. Pusey knows them better than I do. Without money, without friends, without clothes (Sisters who persist in leaving Miss Sellon's are sent forth in Sister's garb, and they are instructed to send everything back as soon as they can clothe themselves), without an idea which way to look for occupation, what is a Sister to do who leaves a nunnery?" (p. 113).

A Roman Catholic contemporary makes a piteous appeal for funds for the building of a chapel at High Wycombe, which little town is described by the priest who makes the appeal as being so benighted and bigoted that he has been unable, after a year's labour, to "light the torch of faith" in it. Perhaps if the matter were looked into it would be found that much of the Roman Catholic chapel building in England is as little needed as it would seem to be at High Wycombe.

A correspondence has taken place between Mr. L. F. S. Maberly, of Dublin, and Lord Plunket regarding the use of the "Postal Manual" and "The Practical Christian," well-known Ritualistic works on the Confessional, which, Mr. Maberly says, are being secretly introduced into Protestant families in Dublin. The Archbishop has replied to the effect that he has no power to interfere in the matter.

HOME LIGHT.*

I desire from my heart that the years as they glide,
All majestically on in their heaven-planned way;
May be bearing thee forward, with Christ as thy Guide
To the bright, sunny home in the regions of day!
Should thy sky be unclouded, thy heart full of praise;
And should all things around thee be brilliantly fair;
Oh, may nothing obscure from thy vision, the rays
Of God's Home Light that shines for thee brightly up there!

Or should life's busy wheel rob thee nightly of rest;
And the burdens of others lie heavy on thee;
May'st thou always remember the Father knows best,
Who ordaineth with forethought the burdens that be,
Just in order that weary ones, saddened and lone,
Overburdened with sorrow, temptation, and care;
Should behold what by faith will for trials atone,
In the Home Light that shines for the weary up there.

Or should dear ones be called from thy circle away,
And should others their places endeavour to fill;
Should the landscape, once sunny, be clouded and grey,
And the birds, which most cheerily warbled, be still;
Should the things that were fresh become faded and old,
And the faces once young become wrinkled with care;
Then I pray that thou may'st for thy comfort behold
Still the Home Light that shines for God's sad ones up there!

And when earth from thy gaze is receding from view,
When the shadows have lengthened, and night is at hand;
Then I would that thy Saviour should carry thee through
The dark valley Himself, to the heavenly land,
May his arms everlasting be under thee then,
May his heart of compassion thy weariness share!
And by faith may'st thou see the soft radiance again
Of the Home Light of welcome that waits thee up there.

THE AGED BLIND.—The Homes in Hanley-road, Crouch-hill, have for ten years sheltered some of the aged Christians, male and female, who have become blind after years of labour in business or service. The present number of inmates is sixty-eight. The men's portion is filled up, but there are vacancies for four women. Of the present inmates, fourteen are over eighty years of age, and thirty are over seventy years; and most of the remainder are over sixty. The committee are anxious to clear off a debt of rather more than £1500; and the annual sale of work, fixed for 28th and 29th inst., is to be opened by Mrs. Barnardo. For the first time in the history of the Homes for eleven years, Rev. Henry Bright, the founder, unhappily finds himself unable to meet the tradesmen's bills. The report records deepened obligation to God, and describes the triumphant deaths of some who have enjoyed the spiritual and material ministry of the Homes.

The Evangelical Alliance.

Conference at Manchester.

The forty-fourth annual British Conference of this excellent organisation was held last week at Manchester. It can scarcely be said that Cottonopolis rose to the height of the occasion. Whether the people of this city were too busy at their money-making and pleasure-seeking; whether there was some defect in the local arrangements; or whether the cause of Christian union in Manchester is in low water, we are unable to say. At any rate, the attendances were miserably meagre for such a great centre of population. The addresses were, on the whole, fresh and practical—in some cases exceptionally so—though the empty benches seemed now and then to dispirit the speakers, which was no great wonder. All the meetings were held in the Central Hall in Oldham-street, the centre of operations of the Manchester Wesleyan Forward Movement.

In the regretted absence of Lord Polwarth, the president of the Alliance, the chair at the meeting of welcome on Tuesday evening was filled by Mr. Isaac Hoyle, M.P., who spoke in very commendatory terms of the aim and operations of the Alliance. On behalf of the Manchester Committee, Prebendary Macdonald delivered the usual address of welcome to the visitors. In his remarks there was embodied an earnest protest against the intellectually speculative tendencies of the time that lead so many in the direction of unbelief; and also against the spirit of secularism that is creeping into and deteriorating the life of the Christian Churches in our land. The absorption of so many of the seniors in business affairs, and of the younger people in so-called recreation, are hindrances to the progress of spiritual life. The Alliance does good service in seeking to unite evangelical Christians of all names in conserving the truth and seeking to diffuse it among the various communities.

Some fraternal words having been spoken by way of reply by Colonel Malcolm, of Burnfoot, a very interesting retrospective address followed from Principal Cairns, of Edinburgh. The learned Professor told in brief and from personal recollection some of the circumstances relating to the origin and early work of the Alliance. He next described, also from his own knowledge, the special features of the international conferences at London (1851), Copenhagen (1854), Paris (1855), Berlin (1857), and Geneva (1861). With respect to the Berlin gathering, he gave the interesting information that it was under the direct patronage of Frederick William IV. King of Prussia. His son William (who became first Emperor of Germany) was also present, and was much interested in the proceedings. The Geneva Conference was memorable because of an evangelistic address by M. de Pressensé, whose serious affection of the throat has, for the present at least, hushed his voice in public testimony. These Continental conferences, as well as the great conference in New York, have been important object-lessons to the world of the real unity of all evangelical believers.

Mr. Lethaby, of Kerak, interested the company much by his little account of the special difficulties of Christian work in Moab. He expressed great thankfulness at being outside the rule of the Turk which is nothing but an "organised robbery."

GOD'S CALL TO HIS CHURCH

was the subject of a very rousing address on Wednesday forenoon, from Rev. Dr. D. McEwen, of Clapham. The Church in every age, he said, has had its special characteristics, and its special responsibilities towards the world; and God's call has ever been "Awake, awake, put on thy strength." It is apt to slumber, to become insensible to its dangers, and to forget its strength; and this is true of the Church in our own day, notwithstanding much outward and seeming activity. We see this in the taunt of the Church's enemies that the pulpit is losing its power, and the Bible its authority. We see it in the assaults of unbelief, in the inroads of worldliness, in the social unrest, and in the gigantic evils that afflict humanity. What need there is for the Church to hear God's call to wakefulness, and to the putting on of her full strength.

The special work of the Christian Church to-day is the immediate evangelisation of the whole world. Conversion, whether of the few or the many, is the work of God Himself; but it is committed to the Church to take the Gospel message to every creature; and the time has come, in the providence of God, when this ought to be done, not in a halting tentative way, but by sweeping measures. Through the march of discovery, the progress of international commerce, and the translation of the Scriptures, the speedy evangelisation of the human race has come within the region of practical Christian politics. Dr. McEwan declared his belief that the devotion of 50,000 workers and the expenditure of fifteen millions sterling annually, for ten years, would secure the carrying of the Gospel to every creature on the habitable globe. This outlay of men and means would not be thought a great thing in any international war; why should not the Churches of Christ combine to bring it about? If the Church will break up her encampment and go forward, God's guiding cloud will move on, and lead the way, so that no Red Sea, or Jordan, or Jericho, of difficulty can come in to prevent the victory.

THE PRACTICAL RESOLUTIONS

of the Alliance which are read and enforced at every yearly gathering were on this occasion presented by Rev. G. Stringer Rowe. These resolutions deal with the practical attitude that ought to be taken up in the mutual behaviour of Christian believers, and they exhort to the cultivation of charity, forbearance, the avoidance of sectarian jealousies, strifes, and the like. Mr. Rowe, in enforcing these points, said that a more generally aggressive spirit in all the Churches would produce greater agreement among them. It is often found in foreign mission fields that the standing face to face with a common foe makes the workers of different names quite forget their denominational distinctions, and produces a true oneness of heart. The home Churches are inclined to spend too much time and energy on themselves, instead of on the surrounding evil, and so the party-walls grow high. Indifferentism is in many cases cursing and enfeebling the Churches of the present day. Let all go forth to seek and to save the lost, and we shall not hear much of uncharity or division.

Pressure on our space prevents our giving the detailed of the Alliance for the past year, read by General Field, one of the secretaries; it was on the whole a most encouraging retrospect. Five hundred members have been added to the roll, and deputations have visited many important provincial centres. The Irish branch of the Alliance has been active, and has secured the services of Rev. Thomas Connelan. The Week of Prayer promoted by the Alliance now extends from Greenland in the north to Terra del Fuego in the south, and its last observance in many parts of the East resulted in marked revivals of true religion. Reference was made to the outbreak of Romish intolerance in Spain, which was stopped by the authorities through the intervention of the Alliance. The state of religious liberty in Russia is receiving anxious attention, and the Alliance are prepared to take action as soon as there is any prospect of successful intervention. Much interest is being felt in Italy at the projected conference in Florence next April, arranged for by Mr. Arnold during a visit to that land. The King of Italy has given expression to an interest in the movement, and it is hoped that the cause of evangelical religion and Christian unity will be much advanced through the gathering. It was also stated in the report that the King of Corea is now favourable to mission work, and the country is open to the Gospel.

On Wednesday afternoon an address upon was given by Rev. W. G. Halse, of Bridlington Quay. Avoiding dogmatic and specific statement of what the Christian is to avoid, he laid down the Biblical principle that there must be a renunciation of all that would militate against righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. The new birth brings with it new tastes and desires, and if we are inbreathed by the Spirit of God we shall be independent of our worldly environment, however unfavourable that may be. The danger in these days comes from both sides; the Church seeks conformity to the world, and the world is not averse to a certain measure of conformity to the professing Church; thus the line of demarcation is lost. If Christians were more like their Master, the world would not look so favourably on them, probably they would be despised and rejected as He was. We must renounce whatever hinders our real and constant fellowship with God. The speaker uttered a faithful word of protest against the adoption of worldly methods in connection with the support of Christian work, and in this he was earnestly seconded by Rev. E. N. Thwaites, of Salisbury, in the course of a subsequent brief discussion.

CONFORMITY AND SEPARATION

THE WILES OF THE DEVIL.

Rev. John Urquhart, of Weston-super-Mare, next claimed the attention of the meeting by a vigorous address on "The believer's equipment against the power and the wiles of Satan." Nowadays, he said, the subject of demoniac influence is practically shelved; but, if God, in his wisdom has revealed much respecting it, our wisdom is to study it. The question may be asked: "Why did not God make short work of the devil at the beginning?" Because He is permitting sin once for all to show itself, and to bear its full fruit; so that out of this very sin and evil He may create a bulwark about heaven that can never be overthrown.

From the last chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians, Mr. Urquhart proceeded to apply the Apostolic exhortation to "put on the whole armour of God that you may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." The girdle of truth is the Word of God, the proper understanding of which makes us new men. Satan once tried to steal God's Word from the Church in the name of devotion. In our day he is trying to steal it in the name of "science," which declares that it is contradicted by God's works, and therefore cannot be true. And now another attempt is being made to steal it in the name of Christian scholarship. All this is Satan's subtlety, but it will not ultimately succeed, though it seems to succeed with some. The other clauses of the exhortation relating to the breastplate, the sandals, the shield, the helmet, and the sword, were earnestly expounded and applied.

was vigorously attacked in an earnest address from Rev. Talbot Greaves, of Clifton, in the evening. When Israel was delivered from Egypt they were all made a kingdom of priests unto God. That did not do away with the need of a separate order of priestly servants, appointed from the Levites. In the New Testament dispensation the fact that all believers are priests unto God, offering spiritual sacrifice, does not preclude the appointing of a special order of ministers within the Church; coming not by natural descent or Apostolic succession, but by a spiritual descent, and according to the will of God. With this reservation Mr. Greaves proceeded to contend for the priesthood of all believers, who are designed to be the reflection and reduplication of Christ Himself in his priestly intercession on high. Christ finished his sacrificial priesthood at Calvary, and in that He has no successor. The claims of modern sacerdotalism are utterly opposed to the teaching of the New Testament. Romish and Anglican "priests" claim to be the sole channels through which the grace of God can flow to men. They offer sacrifice at the altar for the sins of the living and the dead, and give absolution in the confessional. The priest claims to hold the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and the Bible is to be a sealed book unless he chooses to unlock it. Liberty and the right of private judgment are abolished, till modern priestly domination is worse even than Egyptian bondage. The Church is reduced to a sort of spiritual clockwork, to be wound up from time to time by the hands of the priest. We must jealously guard the privilege of all believers as a royal priesthood, and must strenuously resist the inroads of sacerdotalism, whether Roman or Anglican. In this matter our civil as well as our religious freedom is involved. If the reformed faith were to lose its hold, how soon would our civil liberties be at an end.

One of the most fervid and rousing utterances of the whole Conference was Rev. Newman Hall's eloquent and telling defence of the evangelical faith in its relation to

THE ATONING SACRIFICE OF CHRIST.

He insisted on it that a man's attitude towards the atonement is of far greater moment than any outward form of Church government. He felt much more closely allied with those of other denominations who hold this vital doctrine than with any in his own denomination who deny it. It is no real gain to any Church for a man to join it if he does not hold and teach its foundation truths. Is it not time that those who believe in the evangelical Gospel that centres around the sacrifice of Christ, should forget their sectarian and secondary differences and unite to exalt those great truths on which they are agreed? We do not want a new denomination, but we might have a great confederation of those who will maintain and vindicate the central doctrines of our evangelical faith. It may be said that the existing Churches are doing this. Are they? We have sacerdotalism in the Anglican Church. We hear laments that in other Churches these truths are ignored or attacked. Much of the so-called religious literature of the day regards the evangelical faith as antiquated and not in accordance with the culture of the time.

Turning briefly to consider what are the fundamental truths of the evangelical faith, Mr. Hall contended that the inculcation of a high morality and philanthropy will not of itself avail. Many religious systems have taught as much as that, but Christianity alone says that God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself. Paul did not accommodate himself to the claims of Jewish cerimonial or Greek philosophy. He declared even in Corinth that he would know nothing among them except Christ crucified. The offence of the cross has not ceased. Salvation by the blood of Christ is either argued against or explained away. Theology, it is true, is only human knowledge of Divine truth, and its terms may have to be remodelled, but God's facts remain. It is an unalterable fact that "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." How prominent is the cross in the Gospels and the Epistles? How sad that any Christian should be ashamed of the cross. Would the Athenian be ashamed of Marathon, or the Englishman of Waterloo? Some strongly emphatic statements bearing on the supreme importance of the atonement of Christ were quoted by the speaker from the late Dr. Wardlaw, of Glasgow, and the late Dr. Mellor, of Halifax, as representing Congregationalists, and from the Communion Service of the Church of England. It was sometimes said that the Congregational body was unsound on this point; a few of its members might be, but not the denomination. The Book of the Union was clear in its statements on the atonement. The transubstantiation doctrine was held up to ridicule; the powerlessness of the moral influence theory was graphically illustrated, and the power of the cross of Christ exalted as the only thing that will bring peace to the sin-stained conscience, and give a motive power for the living of a holy life. Scepticism, ceremonialism, sectarianism, and worldliness are the great hindrances of our time to the spread of the Gospel. In the cross of Christ and the new life that He imparts, we have a defence against all these.

THE HIGHER CRITICISM.

By far the ablest paper read at the meetings, from an intellectual point of view, was that given on Thursday morning by Principal Cave, of Hackney College, on "The Old Testament and the Higher Criticism." The great intellectual struggles of to-day, he premised, are battles over standpoints, and are caused by differences of view as to the origin of the divine, and the source of revelation. Some rest on the dictum of an infallible man; others on that of an infallible Church, or an infallible book; others exalt reason, or insight, while others believe in a compound of these elementary infallibilities. How then can there be anything but conflict? As an index of the literary activity of the last twelve months on these questions, the speaker instanced "Lux Mundi," Dr. Martineau's latest book, Dr. Dale's review of Dr. Martineau, and The Spectator's review of Dr. Dale. In some quarters all these discussions are regarded as purely theoretical and scholastic—a storm in a professor's teacup; but that which is really at stake is where floats the standard of the Divine inspiration and the sufficiency of Holy Scripture. The title-deeds to our spiritual hearth and home are challenged, and so we must challege the critics in return.

The "higher criticism" is not a new thing, though the name may be new. It is only the old Biblical criticism with a new face. Neither can we admit that it is the superior and better criticism because it is called "higher," and we cannot implicitly accept its conclusions. The earlier criticism of the Bible was directed mainly to an examination of the text, while the so-called "higher" deals with the form and contents of the books of Scripture. Whether the criticism be literary or historical it is, in reality, a close scientific study of the Bible, with the object of arriving at the best and truest understanding of it. Therefore, per se, it is necessarily legitimate. It has already effected important results, and others are certain to follow.

BAUR'S THEORY DEAD AND BURIED.

Dr. Cave, referring to the critical views on the New Testament of Ferdinand Baur, the founder of the Tübingen School, said that some thirty years ago his destructive theories were commonly accepted in German literary and theological circles, and some prominent English writers of that time also held his views. Where are those views to-day? Few scholars, even in Germany, avow them. They are as good as dead and buried, and the skeleton only remains to point a moral or to adorn a tale. Now we have the Wellhausen school attacking portions of the Old Testament in a similar way—rejecting the miraculous, regarding some parts of the Pentateuch as unhistorical, and others as compilations of a later date. This is to-day a common belief in the pulpit and press of Germany, while English writers are also found advocating it. The Principal did not scruple to express the conviction that thirty years hence this theory of the Pentateuch would be as much dead and buried as are the critical views of Baur and his contemporaries with regard to the New Testament.

Coming to a more detailed examination of the criticisms of the Pentateuch, Dr. Cave described the two rival theories with regard to its origin—(1) the journal theory, which regards Moses as substantially the narrator, and (2) the development theory, which attributes the five books as the work of three authors—a prophetical, a Deuteronomist, and a priestly writer—being the separate productions harmonised by a subsequent editor. It will be seen, therefore, that the veracity of the Pentateuch and the nature and method of Old Testament revelation are at stake in this controversy. The issue between the two theories is well and ably put in the current number of The Jewish Quarterly. In advancing some general reasons for rejecting the development theory of the Mosaic records, Dr. Cave intimated that two main pillars of support are found in the Divine inspiration of the Scripture and the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ. But, even meeting the critics on their own ground of criticism, he contended that there is

NO GROUND FOR APPREHENSION.

Admitting that the Mosaic record shows a threefold stratum, he nevertheless, refused to accept the suggested tripartite authorship. He would describe the three as, (1) a rough draft, (2) a completed draft, and (3) a popular statement, all of them consistent with a single authorship. The "development" theory advocates talk of contradictions, anachronisms, and repetitions in the Pentateuch. These he flatly denied, and adduced strong reason for believing that there is no great divergency of literary style throughout the books, and also that such of the asserted contradictions and anachronisms as exist at all are capable of easy explanation on a true theory of the origin of the books. Dr. Cave created much lively interest by his account of the numerous "adjustments" and amended theories that have been wrung out of the anti-Mosaic writers when met with weighty counter-arguments. That phase of the controversy, he said, would be very amusing, if it were not so scandalous. He wound up this part of his address by saying that he did not despair of seeing those aggressive critics complete the circle of their "adjustments," and admit the Mosaic authorship after all. Meantime the "development" theory is only a hypothesis. And believers in the inspiration of the Bible are not bound to refute every negative or distinctive theory that is advanced. It will be time enough to accept them

WHEN THEY HAVE BEEN PROVED.

Facts must not be interpreted in the light of theories; rather let theories be framed in the light of the facts. The Principal concluded by repeating his as yet unanswered challenge of April last, in The Contemporary Review, that the adherents of this "development" theory of the Pentateuch should appeal to facts that are capable of verification. If there are any such new facts on which these theories can be based, let them produce them. As the speaker sat down he was greeted with the most hearty applause.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, who was the next speaker, expressed the general feeling when he said that Principal Cave had put the "higher critics" into such a tight place as they would find it difficult to get out of. Mr. Gregson then gave an impressive and practical address on "The new life in Christ, and Christ in the believer." It was a presentation of the truth on the well known "Keswick lines"—cleansing, anointing, and possession by the spirit of God; while the speaker's positions were backed up by verified facts as to the power of the Christ-life to reproduce itself in the life and walk of the believer.

[Some notes of the remaining meetings will appear in our next issue.]

BIARRITZ.—A minister of the Free Church of Scotland is to winter in this choice and increasingly popular place, and conduct regular services in the French Protestant Church.

THE CHURCH ON THE SANDS.

The seaside services having now concluded for the season, two meetings were recently held at Princes Hall, to receive reports from various places, and to render praise to God for blessing vouchsafed. Both afternoon and evening the hall was well filled.

Rev. E. A. Stuart, who presided in the afternoon, said that this year he had been over the Border, and had taken some parts in children's services at Hunter's Quay, a watering-place on the Clyde. Addressing himself specially to workers, he said he had been much interested in studying the Book of Numbers as typical of the Christian life. The two opening chapters bring before us the subject of Christian warfare. The two following chapters relate to another great department of experience—viz., Christian work, under the type of the Levitical service. Between warfare and work there is introduced a short parenthesis of four verses (iv. 1-4), dealing with worship. The lesson is important, although frequently overlooked, for however stern the warfare, and however hard the work, we cannot afford to neglect reverent worship in the presence of God. There it is we find strength and comfort. Mr. Stuart proceeded to bring out many useful lessons from the injunctions given concerning the priesthood. A few happy words on missionary matters were then addressed to the children.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith told of work at Llandudno. They had much to praise God for; among other things, a little good, healthy opposition — always a sure sign that real work is being done. Reference being made to some intellectual difficulties, he paused to recommend warmly "Many Infallible Proofs" (Morgan & Scott), a valuable book, by Dr. Pierson, on the evidences of Christianity.

Mr. Reginald Callender had good things to tell of experience at Weymouth. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer spoke gratefully of work at Rhyl. Rev. J. Macdonald introduced a pleasing variety by telling something of Scripture Union work amongst children in Bombay and Poona.

In the evening a similar meeting was held. Mr. Eugene Stock (C.M.S.) presided, and referred happily to the close bond between the Children's Special Service Mission and foreign missions. He believed all the societies had been helped, but he could state that the Church Missionary Society had now serving in the foreign field those who caught the enthusiasm of soul-winning in these seaside services. Some were now labouring abroad who were won to the Saviour as children when attending the children's church on the sands.

Addresses followed by Mr. H. Hutchinson on work at Bridlington and Filey; Mr. R. Naylor on Bournemouth. This speaker uttered a brave and manful note on the subject of theatre-going, dancing, and such worldly amusements. Mr. Corry de Candole on Southsea, Mr. E. T. M. Dennes on Whitby, Rev. W. Peters and Mr. A. G. Dodderidge on Eastbourne, Rev. J. Golding Bird on Worthing, and Mr. John McInnes on services at Scarborough.

"A VISIT TO BOHEMIA."—Any readers of Miss Alcock's letter in our last issue who may desire further information concerning the work described, should address the writer at "Byfleet Hall, Byfleet, Surrey," and not to the London address appended to the letter.

DR. BARNARDO'S TRAVELS.

At the "Edinburgh Castle" on Monday week, as briefly mentioned in our last number, Dr. Barnardo told how, between July 3 and October 8, he travelled 16,816 miles through Ontario, Manitoba, and Vancouver, to San Francisco. His words were, therefore, of magnificent distances, of limitless acres, and, coming to practical results, of emigration as a remedy for many ills of overcrowded England, and as an opportunity for those starting in life. Of 17,000 boys and girls passed through the Homes during the 24½ years of their existence, about 4450 had emigrated, mostly to Canada. He had personally seen over 400 of these, and had a firmer faith than ever in emigration conducted on proper lines. The opposition to it in Canada, which arose in the cities alone, was in the supposed interests of labour organisation, and collapsed when confronted with facts. It was alleged that, through the children, criminality and hereditary tendencies to disease had been imported into Canada. A Government commission sat in Toronto during his visit, and he was summoned to give evidence. The books of the Homes were produced, and for six hours he had expounded their system and exploded fallacies. He had shown that the flower of their flock were sent to Canada, that they kept in touch with nearly every emigrant, that out of thousands placed out in Canada only 10 had been convicted, and that the total failures amounted to under 2 per cent. Moreover, during the present year 949 applications for boys had been received at the Toronto office, of which he was able to supply only 258.

"Can you not find work in England for all your children?" he had been asked. "Yes, the demand even in England is always greater than the supply," he replied. "Then why send them out to us?" "Because," said the Doctor, "nearly every boy placed out in England increases the ranks of the unemployed, and most of them would have the disadvantage, in England, of unfavourable surroundings." Canada, with its thousands of waste acres, has no greater population than London (five millions), and immigration of those who are full of youth and vigour cannot but be beneficial to the country. The dangers to be feared from the influence of the children's relatives was shown in the statistics of Feltham. Of the boys claimed by their friends from that Institution, 23 per cent. found their way back to gaol; while of the boys whom the authorities themselves placed out in life, only 5 per cent. relapsed into crime. During his travels, Dr. Barnardo again and again met with boys whose physical and social improvement made recognition difficult. The success of the Manitoba farm seems to justify the Doctor's anticipation that in a few years it will prove profitable to the finances of this growing work.

We give this week an engraving from an original photograph, showing a party of lads with ploughs breaking up the prairie to make a road through part of the property. The building in the background is the creamery of the Institution.

As another result of the journey, a scheme of colonisation has been drawn up, which may have an important bearing on the future emigration work of the Homes. This scheme, which after long deliberation has received the approval of the authorities, will, we understand, be fully described in the forthcoming number of Night and Day.

ROAD-MAKING ON DR. BARNARDO'S FARM, MANITOBA.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE BIBLE-CLASS UNION.—The third annual demonstration was held on Sunday afternoon, the 12th inst. Members were present from twenty-six classes. An open-air service was held in the Haymarket by Mr. Thomas Moffett, hon. secretary of the Union. The young men were then marshalled into marching order, and, proceeding to the foot of Northumberland-street, where they divided, part going to Trinity Presbyterian Church, and part to Blackett-street Presbyterian Church. Both churches were well filled. At the Y.M.C.A. Sunday afternoon Bible-class, the average attendance for the nine months ending June has been 263, and the membership is about 390.

THE IRISH SOCIETY, formally sanctioned by the Church of Ireland, has for seventy years placed the Irish Bible in the hands of the Irish people, and has a unique system of teaching the people to read the Scriptures in Irish and English. Usually about 3000 persons pass the annual inspections in the course of Scriptural instruction. About 700 children attend the daily schools; and the one in Limerick is a great south centre for mission work, as well as a vast educational establishment and a refuge for poor children, who are maintained, educated, and placed out in situations. Since 1881 the Society has extended its work to England, and has laboured successfully among the Irish population in Lancashire. The offices are at 32, Sackville-street, London, W., and 17, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

A Chinaman on the Opium Trade

At the annual meeting of the "Victorian Alliance" for the supression of the liquor traffic, held at Melbourne, on August 25, the following address was delivered by Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong, of the Church Missionary Society, the able and popular leader of the anti-opium movement in the colony. He said:—

"About the year 2200 B.C., when intoxicating liquor was invented in China, and the great Yü had tasted of it, he, with a clear foresight, exclaimed, "Ah! how many evils, I foresee, this drink will cause China"; and then proposed, not as some politicians would do, to levy a tax upon it. No; his motives were of a purer kind, his measures more effective. He nipped the evil in its bud by the banishment both of the inventor and his invention. "Let the man who invented it," he said, "be exiled from beyond our frontier, and let him never be permitted to return." So spoke and so acted the sage emperor who swayed the destinies of China 4000 years ago. To his wholesome warning and example is largely due the comparatively small number of drunkards amongst the Chinese people.

But while we rejoice at this fact we are much concerned and alarmed at the appearance and spread of another, and far more terrible, evil—an evil which works its destruction more surely, because more insidiously, and holds its victims in a firmer and more relentless grasp. When the narcotic poison began to spread in China, another emperor occupied the throne, and, though not towering so high in intellectual power and personal virtue as his illustrious predecessor of ancient time, he yet made an earnest effort to arrest the deadly course of opium, enacted laws for its entire prohibition throughout his dominions, and warned the British East India Company not to introduce it. Notwithstanding this, however, the same Company,

IN THEIR EAGERNESS FOR GAIN,

continued to smuggle it in, by means of cleverly constructed boats called "fast crabs" and "scrambling dragons," until the Emperor himself was compelled to witness the melancholy spectacle of three of his sons dying from the opium habit. He then braced himself to one supreme effort to rid his country of the terrible curse; invested his Excellency High Commissioner Lin with absolute powers to deal with the illegal traffic, and charged him, with tears in his eyes, to stamp out the evil, root and branch. The Commissioner was a man faithful to his trust. He set to work with a decision and vigour which disarmed all opposition and wrought wonders in a brief space of time. The principal merchant of Canton, who was largely implicated in the illicit traffic, then conceived the idea that he could secure a relaxation of the laws by getting round the darling object of the Commissioner's heart. With that object in view he sent his emissaries to inveigle the Commissioner's son to try the seductive drug. The foolish youth consented. He was caught in the act, and

ORDERED TO INSTANT EXECUTION.

The tears of both his wife and aged mother availed not to save the young man's life, who had dared so grievously to offend the majesty of the law. The carrying out of his stern duty struck terror into the people. The opium curse had well-nigh become a thing of the past, when in an evil moment Great Britain intervened to protect the smugglers and their opium, and succeeded, at the point of the bayonet and the mouth of the cannon, in forcing China to pay a heavy indemnity to the smugglers, and the cost of the war, and then tried very hard to persuade the Chinese Government to legalise the traffic.

But what was the Emperor's noble reply? "It is true I cannot prevent the introduction of the flowing poison. Gain-seeking and corrupt men will for profit and sensuality defeat my wishes, but nothing will induce me to derive a revenue from the vice and misery of my people." (Loud applause.)

However, what the British plenipotentiary then failed to effect by word of mouth, he afterwards succeeded in doing by the more persuasive eloquence of cannons. In 1859 China signed a treaty which she knew was against her conscience, or, as one Prime Minister has put it, "China submitted, not from choice, but because of an adverse decision of arms. The war is against the legalisation of the traffic." For the last thirty years protest upon protest has been sent to the British Government against the iniquitous traffic, but the invariable reply, put into brief form, has been, "We can't afford it." That is, Great Britain, which occupies a pre-eminent position in the commercial and financial world cannot afford to do right! The true question I think is, Can she afford to do wrong? Is it not written that righteousness exalteth a nation; but that sin is the reproach of any people?

But someone may ask, "Why then do the Chinese take to opium? They should abstain from it, when they know it is ruinous." Ah! it is easier to ask the question than to suggest a remedy. But if thousands of the sons and daughters of respectable parents in this and other professed Christian countries fall annually into the condition of habitual drunkards, can it be wondered at that hundreds of thousands in a heathen land like China should yearly fall victims to the much more fascinating vice? And be it remembered also that victims in the latter case do not condone but hate the vice which holds them in its terrible grasp. Intense as they know the agony to be in giving up the habit, yet, as medical missionaries testify, thousands of them flee to the opium refuges every year, and willingly submit themselves to be placed under lock and key in their determination to get rid of the curse. But the melancholy fact remains that, except the small percentage who become Christians while under treatment, the vast majority of them who leave as cured ultimately relapse. I speak from experience. The experience of others engaged in the work tells precisely the same sad tale. There are thousands of opium-smokers in this colony alone, all of whom would gladly submit themselves to the painful ordeal if they dare trust their own strength of will to carry them through. The only hope, to my mind, and in this the victims join their most ardent prayers, is that the Government in their humane consideration will rise to the necessity of the case, and by prohibiting the importation of all the opium not absolutely required for medicinal purposes, and hedging round the rest with the same difficulties and penalties as the law now very wisely does in regard to other virulent poisons. This curse of opium, let me add, is not confined to the Chinese residents alone, large numbers of Europeans are likewise addicted to it, either in the form as the Chinese smoke it or in that of morphia. In this latter form, the Hon. Dr. Cockburn, the Premier of South Australia, has testified from his professional experience that it is largely taken as a stimulant by many moving in fashionable circles of society, and I know what sad havoc it has wrought amongst some of my European friends and aquaintances. But, not to harrow your feelings with any further particulars, I will conclude by expressing the earnest hope that the Alliance will take up this matter prayerfully, and with prayerful efforts remove this terrible evil which afflicts both races alike.

AMONG EAST-END JEWS.

The new Hebrew Conference Hall in Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, was opened by Mrs. F. A. Bevan on October 14. The hon. secretary, Rev. J. B. Barraclough, gave some interesting details of the work which, since 1873, has been carried on with the purpose of removing Jewish prejudices against their true Messiah, and commends to these poor, benighted strangers the riches of God's grace through the Lord Jesus Christ, the only true Hope of Israel. Referring to the necessity for re-building, he said that the cost of the new hall was about £600, including furniture, &c., of which £500 had been subscribed, and the balance, it was hoped, would be soon forthcoming.

The hall having been declared open, Mr. J. H. Buxton remarked upon the fact that just at the time when the Jews were suffering so much persecution abroad, friends in the East of London were celebrating the reopening of the hall to make them acquainted with the Gospel of peace, and to present to them the best gift—a Saviour. Mr. J. Rennie (London City Mission, and general superintendent of missionaries in South London) remarked that during recent years there had been a remarkable increase in the population of the Jews in London, and he was glad to add that the missionaries were not merely touching the fringe of these people, but were getting right into their midst, and a good work was being done. There were other halls in various parts of the East of London, and six missionaries were at work, but these were far from being sufficient for it left about 5000 persons to each missionary.

Mr. Ehrlich, who had laboured for over twenty-five years in the neighbourhood, gave an interesting account of his work in the old building. In referring to the opposition he had met with, he said that some of the wounds he had received from stones, &c., he would carry to his grave. Happily, this condition of things had changed, and men and women now treated him with respect. He had a school for Hebrew children on Fridays, which had been well attended, and many women came to meetings in the hall on week nights.

HINTS TO RESCUE WORKERS.—Professor T. Witton Davies, of Haverfordwest, writes that while staying recently in North London he witnessed the disappearance, after two days' service, of a young girl who had been seven months in a Rescue Home. He strongly advises that such persons should be placed only in thoroughly Christian households and carefully watched over. Neighbouring Christian workers should be asked to visit such girls, and invite them to religious meetings. No one from the Home called at the house to inquire about the girl; indeed, it is not even known by her rescuers she is missing. Country situations are, moreover, preferable to London ones for this class of servant.

TOLLINGTON HALL GOSPEL MISSION.—The lease of the building in which this Mission was started expired in March. Hoping to subsequently raise a new hall, a house and shop has been rented as a temporary centre for the varied branches of work, the upper part being re-let. Many old attendants have gone away for want of room. As the winter approaches, discontinuance of the open-air meetings will further tax resources. One woman said that her husband, instead of going to the public-house, now stays at home on Saturday night, with his hat in readiness for the first sound of our singing, and will not leave the open-air meeting until it ends. Friends are treating for a suitable building site in Hornsey-road. Many letters have come from those who have been eternally benefited at the meeting, and testify to the Lord's keeping power. Two ladies, one of whom entered into rest in November, have been engaged in Samaritan work among the poor of the neighbourhood. About 1390 visits have been made, resulting in not a few conversions. The hon. secretary is Mr. William H. Bird, 15, Lowman-road, Holloway, N.

By Annie R. Butler.

IV.—Medical Missions.

"Wherever I have seen the print of my Lord's shoe in the earth, there I have coveted to set my foot too."
—Pilgrim's Progress.

It must have been a year or more before Mr. Arrowsmith's visit that Kathie's attention was first attracted to Medical Missions. Mrs. Morgan, a well-known worker in Rome, sent her four of the little books of the "Children's Medical Mission" series; and the seed sown by that dear friend in the child's heart was to spring up and bear fruit quickly.

She read the books eagerly, over and over again, and at once became anxious to make things to send off to the Children's Secretary of the Medical Missionary Association. When, somewhat later, Mrs. Morgan visited Lausanne, she found that Kathleen had already made several frocks and other things to send to London; and, to encourage her, she added a knitted crib cover.

Kathie loved reading, but she was not at all fond of sewing: so her gifts showed true, self-denying love for the cause of Medical Missions.

Having heard that the little daughter of a Swiss pastor at Neuchâtel had made translations of one or two of the "Children's Medical Mission" Leaflets, Kathie asked Mrs. Morgan to write to her for the loan of them. This was done, and they were kindly lent. Kathie's little fingers now set themselves to the task of copying them out, that she might be able, through them, to tell her schoolfellows "in their own tongue the wonderful works of God," inspiring them so with her own enthusiasm.

It is no easy matter to arouse interest on the Continent in any work that is carried on out of the country, as anyone has found who has tried to do it; and yet Kathie's efforts in one way and another were not fruitless. Some of her young friends made additions to her parcel for the Medical Mission house in London; and one, whose very first friend Kathie was, became a subscriber to the magazine.

From the autumn of 1887 Kathleen was a regular reader of Medical Missions at Home and Abroad.† Mrs. Morgan took it in for her at first, but very shortly the subscription was taken up on her own account; and this magazine, or anything else relating to the work which was so dear to her, was always seized upon with delight. Medical Missions were a perfect joy to her heart; and her great desire—her one ambition in life—was to be a medical missionary when see grew up.

Kathie did not neglect Home Medical Mission work, the loving little ministries which lay near her own door. During the last year that she was in Lausanne, there was a little girl there whom she knew, called Verena, who was dying of consumption. On her way to school she used to visit this child, and leave with her bouquets of flowers. The last thing she took her before leaving Lausanne was a sprig of ivy made up with flowers into a wreath. From this gift of the little friend whose visits had brightened her last days Verena would not part. She died with it in her hand, and it was placed with her in the coffin. And Kathleen when dying remembered Verena—pleased, evidently, to think that she should have one companion of her own age to welcome her in heaven, as well as the grown-up relations and friends who were there.

The last year of Kathleen's life was spent in Cannes. She greatly missed the freedom of her Lausanne home, which had been just a little way out of town; the walks with her father and to school, flower-gathering by the way; and her school life and companions, for Kathie dearly loved to be with other little girls—and, sighing one day after these past joys, she said—

"I would give up all (gifts from friends, &c.), just to be a little peasant girl."

But she began now—a natural result, perhaps, in part, of the loss of other interests—to think much about the evangelistic work of which her home was a centre.

"I shall be so glad," she said to a dear friend, "when I can go with you to visit the people."

One day, having heard of a family of little children which had been found in great distress, Kathie came to her mother and asked what pudding there would be for dinner that day. Her mother told her, and inquired why she wanted to know.

"Because, dear mother, I want you to let me go without mine and send it to the little children." And this she did.

She went to a Bible-class in Cannes, and whenever her teacher wanted a heart-answer, it was to Kathie she turned. "That child knows more than we do," the big girls would say.

In the winter Kathleen was again busy with lessons; and, as she was not very strong, her parents kept her also busy with play, and gave her plenty of out-of-door exercise. But the Medical Mission was never forgotten. Little articles of clothing for the poor London children were always in hand, ready to be sent off as opportunity might arise. In the summer holidays she meant to make many more. She began, too, to work out the "Sunday Exercises" in the Medical Mission Magazine. In the April number a list was given of five girl-members from whom answers had been received; and this note was added:

"These papers have been a pleasure to receive and look over; for they have been thoughtfully (and one or two of them extremely neatly) written."

The youngest of the five whose names were given was Kathleen Webber, Cannes, France, age 10½; and her answer was neatness itself.

When the family left Cannes for the summer months, which they were to spend at Angrogna in the Vaudois valleys, Kathleen, now developing from the happy joyous child into the charming thoughtful girl, took with her all her Medical Mission booklets, and nearly all the reports. When her mother asked her why she took so many, as she had already read them all, she said:

"Oh, let me take them, mother dear. I shall be sure to want to read them over."

She had been very tired and pale for about a fortnight before this, had had little appetite, and complained often of headache. Her friends thought that the heat tried her, and stopped all lessons, hoping that the change to the mountains would soon restore her. For two or three days before leaving, she was much better, and during the journey was very bright: but the day after her arrival she was taken ill, and her mother put her to bed and sent for the doctor, who pronounced the case to be one of typhoid fever.

Near the house which Mrs. Webber had taken was another belonging to Monsieur Pons, the good Vaudois pastor of Naples; and this summer his family, in God's kind providence, was there. When Madame Pons heard of the little stranger, ill in a strange land, and of the mother in her lonely watch (for once more Mr. Webber had been called away to England), she at once came and offered her services, regardless of an intimation that the disease might prove infectious to her own children.

"I am a pastor's wife," said she, "and as such I am bound to give what sympathy and aid I can to all who are in trouble."

By day this kind friend kept all Kathie's young brothers at her house, from early morning till late at night, in order to secure quiet for the little invalid. And by night, till a nurse was found, she shared Mrs. Webber's watch. She felt hardly able, indeed, to keep away from our little Kathleen, so greatly was she attracted by her.

Thirty-one days passed by: days of anguish they were to the mother, but days of joy too, for Kathie was always bright and happy. At first, too, the case seemed very favourable, but soon after the end of the second week, a change set in, and on the thirty-first day (Saturday, July 20), God took back into his own keeping—into his own immediate presence—the beautiful gift lent to earth for just ten years and ten months.

But the story of that time we must leave to the mother.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING IN GERMANY.

Rev. Frank W. Dodd, late vicar of All Saints', Islington, writes to the Open-Air Mission:—"You will be glad to hear that I have been able, with the help of some other Christians, to hold open-air meetings outside Wiesbaden every Sunday afternoon during the summer.

"Open-air preaching in Germany, in the public streets at any rate, is, as you know, forbidden; but I found that the police were willing to accord us permission to preach in the forest which adjoins the town; and we have every reason to believe that God has blessed his word in several cases. We preached in the same spot, close to a well-frequented road, every Sunday, and had sometimes as many as three hundred or more listening. There was absolutely no disturbance, and for quiet solemnity they were model open-air meetings. My German is not very good; but I heard no comments or jokes such as one would probably hear from many an English audience if a foreigner spoke to them in 'broken English.' We used the 'Frohe Botschaft' hymn-book, which is mostly composed of hymns from Sankey's collection, translated into German; and we were able to give away a large number of tracts, which were nearly always well received.

"There is a hunger and thirst for God's truth in the hearts of the people here. I wish something could be done to set the door open for out-door preaching in Germany; but it may come in time. God grant it!"

ROBERTSON-STREET CHAPEL, HASTINGS.—The pastor of the large congregation assembling in this chapel—Rev. Charles New—invited his people to a week of united prayer, in response to a resolution passed by the Congregational Union. The week beginning with the 13th instant was thus observed. After the first meeting, the crowded attendance compelled an adjournment for the morning meetings to a larger hall. Day by day the people, including business men, met twice. Mr. New presided throughout, except on the Saturday morning, when Rev. William Guest took his place. Very blessed were all the gatherings.

MRS. HILTON'S CRÊCHE.

The nineteenth year of this work has afforded the full share of pecuniary cares and hourly contact with sorrow and misery; but courage and trust in God has lessened the pain and anguish of those who come here in their desolation. Trade disputes have brought suffering on many not directly connected with the strikes. Cases of 217 ailing children have been treated in the infirmary, and there has been an attendance of 23,000. It is depressing to contemplate the shadowed lives of these little ones with an inheritance of disease and suffering, many of them victims of cruelty, and all wrapped in poverty so extreme, that slight accident to mother, loss of employment, or failure of strength, wrecks the home. The necessity which obliges a mother to give up the care of her child is a terrible one.

Household expenses of the Institution were largely increased by the prevalent sickness of last December and January. One mother wrote, "I saw the last of my dear little girl on Monday, so far as this world is concerned, but hope to go to her as soon as it should please the Lord to call me. My heartfelt thanks for what you did for my little one."

From the erection of large buildings on all sides of the present Orphan Home, a separate home is most necessary for the younger children. If possible the house should be purchased and furnished before the cold weather sets in.

Details of work in the Infirmary, Nursing Room, and Country Home are very touching, but gladdens in view of timely help afforded.

A lady wrote that her little girl would like to celebrate her birthday by a tea-party to the children. She was an only child, and her mother was anxious that she should begin thus early to find pleasure in giving to others.

Many ladies have formed themselves into working societies, and send the results of weeks and months of labour. Mention of these modes of help may be suggestive and stimulating to other persons.

The work has suffered greatly from lack of funds. The Crêche and Infirmary accommodate from eighty to a hundred children daily, varying in age from three weeks to five years. These are washed, fed, and tended for twelve hours each day for the nominal charge of two pence. In the Home are forty residents from one to ten years old. At Feltham there is accommodation for twenty-four children—sixteen residents, and eight requiring change of air. The admission is not by vote, but each case is judged on its merits.

The report contains many glimpses of real London life upon which Christian men and women would do well to ponder. It is cause for thankfulness that sorrow-stricken ones have a friend and helper in the head of this institution. It must be to them the very incarnation of Christian life and kindly aid. Mrs. Hilton's address is 16, Stepney-causeway, E.

MR. GLADSTONE AND SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—We are asked by Mr. Charles Hill, secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, to give publicity to the following, in the interest of many thousands of railway servants, cab, omnibus, tramway, and steamboat men who would be able to enjoy Sunday as a day of rest, if Mr. Gladstone's example on this subject were generally followed:—"Mr. Gladstone's rule against Sunday travelling placed him in a rather inconvenient position, when at one time the Queen used to invite him to dine and sleep at Windsor on Saturday night, and did not extend her invitation over Sunday. When this occurred, Mr. Gladstone used to go from the Castle to the Deanery, and remain till Monday as the guest of Dean Wellesley. Her Majesty was ever most considerate and kind in regard to any visit from Mr. Gladstone which she was pleased to command."

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

Two interesting meetings were held in Exeter (Lower) Hall on the afternoon and evening of Tuesday, October 14, to commend to God in prayer eighteen workers about leaving for North Africa. Ten are returning to their various fields of labour and eight go out for the first time; the latter include two qualified medical men and their wives. The chair was taken in the afternoon by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and in the evening by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness.

Mr. E. H. Glenny referred to the wonderful way in which God had been leading in the past in destroying the political power of the Mohammedans in Algeria and Tunis, and in stirring up the hearts of his servants to take an interest in these lands that have been for twelve hundred years under the power of the followers of the false prophet.

Several of the missionaries gave interesting accounts of their experiences amongst the down-trodden women of these lands, and seemed eager to get back to their work. Mr. Michell and Mr. Harding, fresh from the work in Tripoli, told how they had been able to live and labour for fifteen months in that dark city where no other missionary had previously been able to stay. They gave much valuable information concerning the terrible nature of Mohammedanism. At the close of the afternoon meeting Pastor James Stephens, of Highgate, in a parting word to the workers, gave a clear exposition of what the Gospel is and what it is not, and the need of Christian forbearance between those working for God in the foreign field.

Cambridge Notes.

By a Graduate.

The speakers at the evangelistic services, held in the Alexandra Hall on Sunday evenings for University men, include the following:—Major Owen Hay, Major Seton Churchill, Rev. H. Leigh Malony, Mr. R. C. Hart Dyke, Sir Arthur Blackwood (subject: "Success, and How to Attain it"), and Major Liebenrood.

The daily prayer-meeting, held every afternoon at two, is continued this year; it has now been in existence over twenty-five years.

During the past week a most influential body of speakers have been giving addresses at a temperance mission held in the Guildhall for six nights.

Last week the Roman Catholic Church was formally opened with a gorgeous service. There were present several Roman Catholic Bishops and numbers of priests from all around Cambridge. That this church, placed at the heart of the young life of England, means something, we may be sure, and energetic proselytising will no doubt follow. But, with the prayers of the earnest with us, we do not fear that these efforts will be permitted to draw many over. That this fresh zeal on the part of the Romanists will be the ruin of some seems only too likely.

Among the most interesting of Christian efforts here is the Choir School, which was begun to give the advantages of a Sunday-school to choir boys. These boys are unable to get to ordinary Sunday-school, owing to their duties, and only by a Sunday-school at about noon on each Sunday can they be reached. Three classes of older boys, who have left choirs, are held at Ridley Hall in connection with this school. To bind these boys together, that, as they get older, they may not be lost sight of, an Old Choristers Union has been started, and re-unions are occasionally held. The rules of this Union are that members shall daily use private prayer, reading of God's Holy Word, and on Sundays, Divine Service; that as far as possible they should be regular and devout communicants, and engage in some definite work for Christ.

THE BALTIC PROVINCES.—It is reported from St. Petersburg that the Holy Synod of the Orthodox Church has decreed the sequestration until further notice of the salaries of Lutheran pastors in the Baltic Provinces.

GETHSEMANE.

Lines suggested by Dr. Culross's articles in recent numbers of The Christian.

Behold the Saviour calmly go
Before his chosen band,
As if unconscious of the woe
That now was near at hand.

Gethsemane appears in sight,
They tread the well-known way;
And, shrouded by the shades of night,
He seeks a place to pray.

For swiftly in his tender frame
There thrilled a sudden fear,
That sin's appalling doom and shame
Were more than He could bear.

All human sorrows, bred in sin,
Swept o'er his sinless soul,
Whose floodgates opened wide within,
As wave on wave they roll.

The cup of suffering to the brim
Was filled to overflow;
And this must needs be drained by Him,
Or Saviour none could know.

No tongue can tell, no words reveal
The bitter agony
That wrung the sorrowful appeal:
"This cup remove from Me."

Yet still up through the silent air
The voice which victory won
Rose, welcome, to the Father's ear;
"Thy will, not mine, be done."

O King of love, thy love Divine
Achieved this victory:
Our love, though poor, yet take as thine
For all eternity.

PROTESTANTS IN DAUPHINY.

A fund, of which the Dean of Canterbury is treasurer and co-trustee with Rev. C. A. Malony, of that city, has been started to endow a scholarship for educating French pastors to labour specially in the lonely, remote, and spiritually destitute valleys inhabited by the descendants of the old Huguenots. Miss S. Malony, who resided among the people for some months, writes that they are entirely dependent on the uncertain visits, at rare intervals, of evangelists on tour. The fund now needs only £100 to make it sufficient for the object in view.

For the last three years the interest of the money already contributed has been supplemented and used for the preparatory schooling of a devoted pastor's son, who desires to follow in his father's steps, and who will probably become the first candidate and nominee for the new scholarship. Miss Malony will gladly furnish further details to any who may be interested in this effort, and who will write her at The Shrubbery, Canterbury. She makes appreciative reference to one whom she values as a personal friend—Miss Geldard, who has successfully worked for many years among these remote mountains, making her house a centre of love and mercy, doing the work of a true-hearted missionary among the women and children in their lonely homes.

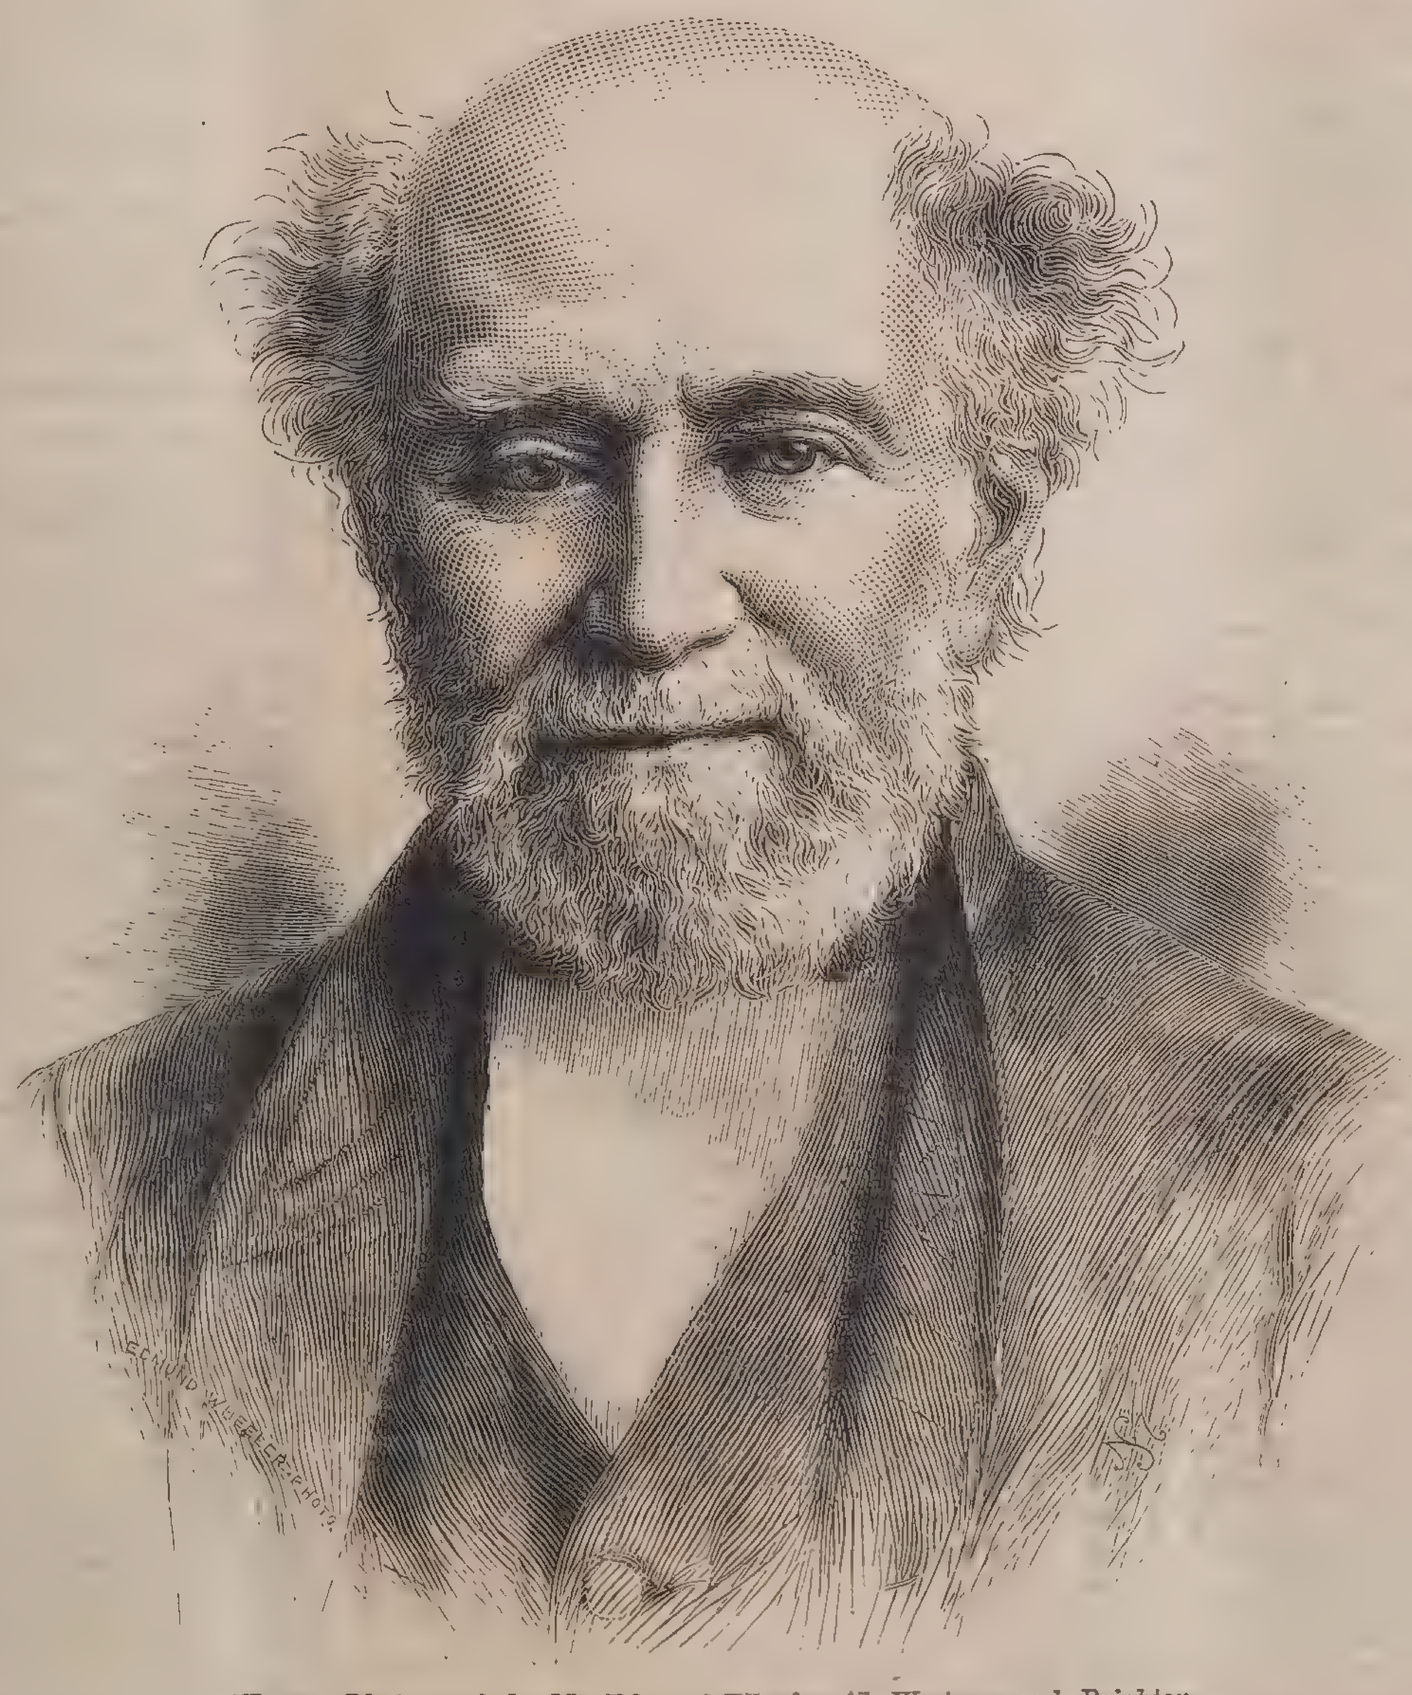
SICK MISSION BAND, CAMBERWELL.—The first annual meeting of this Band, was held recently in the Collyer Hall, Peckham, Mr. Horace B. Marshall, jun., presiding. Encouraging reports were given of the work, which consists in visiting the sick and weak in the workhouses and infirmaries of Camberwell. The effort is entirely unsectarian. Religious literature is distributed week by week throughout the buildings. The treasurer is Mr. G. Pedley, 9, The Terrace, Peckham-road, S.E. Magazines and religious papers of an evangelical character will be gratefully acknowledged by the hon secretary, Mr. W. H. Cooper, 49, Church-street, Camberwell, S.E.

ISAAC SHARP,

Friend, Evangelist, and Traveller.

THE subject of our sketch this week is a well-known veteran minister of the Society of Friends. Born on July 4, 1806, he is now in his eighty-fifth year. Yet he looks younger than many men of sixty, and is remarkably gifted with physical energy and liveliness. Although many years of his life have been devoted to missionary journeys in the northern and southern, eastern and western hemispheres, he has just received the sanction of his Church to undertake, even at his advanced age, a further missionary journey, which, if he lives to complete it, will again take him round the world, by way of Syria, India, California, and the eastern United States.

Isaac Sharp belongs to a family whose members have been active in education and other good works. His brother John was the superintendent of one of the largest public schools of the Society of Friends; two of his nephews have been similarly engaged; whilst a third, his namesake, is the present "Recording Clerk," or General Secretary, of the Society of Friends, at their central office in Bishopsgate-street, London. Much of the earlier and middle portion of Mr. Sharp's life was spent at Middlesborough, that remarkable town in north-east Yorkshire, which, within his recollection, has grown rapidly from a small hamlet into a very large and populous centre of industry and commerce. Mr. Sharp, together with his relative the late Mr. J. Dunning, and others, was able to render important services to the chief local landowners and proprietors of coal mines, ironworks and railways, in their various undertakings which have had so much to do with the development of that place.



(From a Photograph by Mr. Edmund Wheeler, 43, Western-road, Brighton

But whilst "not slothful in business," Mr. Sharp has always been "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." And he has repeatedly and especially felt his religious sympathies drawn out towards scattered Christians in the northern regions of Europe and America. On various occasions he has travelled extensively in Norway, preaching to the little communities of "Friends" in the west of that country, and visiting Christian families and individuals over a long extent of coast-line, from the Naze to the North Cape. By the Norwegian Friends generally he is regarded with loving esteem, as a fatherly sympathiser and counsellor of long standing.

He has also visited the Shetland and Orkney islands and the more remote Faroe islands, as a herald of the Gospel. His preaching is simple and characteristically evangelical, dwelling habitually on "the old, old story." Hence, too, it is no wonder that he has felt special interest in the simple Gospel tenets and communities of the Moravians. As a passenger on board their mission ship The Harmony, and in company with his friend the late Mr. Harrison Penney, of Darlington, he spent months in Labrador, visiting the lonely missionaries and "strangers scattered abroad" in that vast region of almost perpetual winter. The two Friends were warmly welcomed there, and were found to be indeed messengers of encouragement and comfort. Their hearts were touched by the privations cheerfully undergone by the missionaries for the love of Christ, not the least of which consists in their having to send away their beloved children to Europe for education and for their subsequent means of livelihood. In many or most instances, these very painful separations are permanent and lifelong, and the yearning hearts of the poor parents often have little expectation of ever again meeting their dear ones upon earth. To such persons, and in such cases, Mr. Sharp's sympathising consolations were especially valuable. In another direction also he and his companion felt that the Labrador and Greenland missionaries were labouring under some peculiar difficulties. The extreme cold of the climate, not only tends to exert a somewhat dwarfing effect upon the minds as well as the bodies of the native population, but it also prevents the existence of most of those features of landscape scenery and of animal and vegetable life which, in most other regions of the earth's surface, are so helpful to the understanding and teaching of the common illustrations and types used in the Holy Scriptures. Stony, snowy, icy Labrador affords very little that can give, either to the younger or the elder listener to Christian teaching, any correct or approximate ideas of the Biblical references to the beauties of Nature in more generous climates. Take, for example, allusions to "green pastures" and "still waters," "cedars of Lebanon," "the Rose of Sharon," "the Lily of the Valley," "the vine and fig tree," "the stork, the turtle, the crane, and the swallow."

Similar examples are the lion, the camel, the serpent, the ape, the peacock, and other creatures which, both through menageries and zoological gardens, are such familiar objects to Scripture students in other countries.

Whilst these difficulties do not, happily, prevent the preaching or the understanding of the great and simple truth as it is in Jesus, and the revelation of God's infinite love to men, through Him, yet they do unquestionably tend to narrow the comprehension of the Esquimaux and impose certain obstacles in the way of their religious instruction. Mr. Sharp has, on various occasions, remembered the wants and privations of his Labrador and Greenland acquaintances by promoting amongst his English friends a willingness to send them presents of pictures, books, models, tools, toys, and other objects which may help to cheer their long dark winters, when the sun does not rise above the horizon for weeks, or even months. Any of our readers who incline now to help in this good work may send their gifts to Rev. B. La Trobe, Moravian Office, 29, Ely-place, Holborn, E.C., or (if packets of considerable size) to the Moravian Mission Depôt, Fetter-lane, London, E.C.

Mr. Sharp has also traversed the rugged, treeless mountains and valleys of Iceland, in the service of the Gospel. In later years, a similar zeal for his beloved Master and for distant portions of "the Church which He hath purchased with his own blood" have led him to very different climates, to regions under equatorial and tropical skies, to the burning deserts of Africa, and through the dense forests of Madagascar. But the limits of our time and space preclude us from more than a mere allusion to these engagements of the veteran missioner.

Some of his friends have occasionally ventured to question whether his necessarily transitory and brief as well, also, as necessarily very costly journeys, were the best modes in which so much energy and money could be utilised. And if his visits were exclusively for preaching to station after station, just delivering a message and immediately passing on, if only "here to-day and gone to-morrow," then there would be some ground for hesitation. But Isaac Sharp's chief mission is a higher one than preaching—in its ordinary sense. It is personal sympathy. Like Barnabas, he is "a son of consolation." The Apostle Paul told the Corinthian Church: "Though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers." Hence, the presence, in any locality, if even for a short time, of a man of fatherly loving sympathy is a boon worth more than many sermons. And Mr. Sharp's labours in looking up and searching out the scattered ones of the flock is the performance, on an extensive scale, of one of the chief and most important duties of the regular pastorate, whether home or missionary, namely, individual dealing with souls and gathering them in one by one. This great service is too often overlooked, or underestimated. Its necessity, however, is emphatically enforced by the most practical observers, as for instance, by the successful Wesleyan home-missioner, Edward Smith, in his prize essay on "Popular Evangelisation" (London: Morgan & Scott), and by Richard Baxter in that wonderful and impressive book, "The Reformed Pastor," the work which the late John Angell James, of Birmingham, declared, almost with his last breath, to have been his ministerial guide "next to the Bible."

Individualisation is an earnest concern of Isaac Sharp. But both in this and his more public services he trusts much to the impressions and leadings of the Holy Spirit. His favourite motto is—"Attende ad Me, et videbis"—"Look unto Me, and thou shalt see."

During the past month Mr. Sharp has been laid up with an attack of illness. But the latest accounts of his condition are encouraging, and he hopes that he may be able shortly to enter upon that extensive journey in his Master's service upon which his heart is set. Yet, in view of his advanced age, and of the uncertainties and contingencies to which all are liable, he is able to feel that he can leave the future, with filial resignation, to the sovereign disposal of the Most High.

THE Y.M.C.A. AT PARIS.—The Association is flourishing, so far as the French branch is concerned. There are 400 members at the Central Branch, 4, Faubourg Montmartre, and 400 more at other branches. The English branch, 160, Rue Montmartre, has a new secretary, a young Englishman, Mr. Basil Hewer. Throughout the summer their Bible-classes and other meetings have been well sustained. It will be a great encouragement to the workers amongst the thousands of sorely tempted English-speaking young men, if Christian friends passing through Paris would occasionally call at the Association buildings.

MRS. GINEVER'S ORPHAN HOMES.

Lady Thompson writes concerning this work:—Mrs. Ginever commenced her efforts on behalf of orphans in the year 1874 in faith and with prayer. In 1877 a second Home was opened at Broadstairs, for crippled, paralysed, and afflicted orphans, some of whom are left homeless and unclaimed in London hospitals. In 1881 an infant branch was started; and in 1888 two more Homes were opened.

A few incidents of the interesting work may be mentioned:—

One who had been a patient sufferer for many years from spinal and chest deformity, was suddenly called to rest on Christmas Eve, 1887, the poor contracted frame causing a failure of the heart's action. Taken thus away, so unexpectedly from our midst, it was a comfort to know that, having learned the blessedness of resting on the Rock of Ages, as the one only hope of salvation, death had been robbed of its sting. Brief as were the last moments, they were not without the expressed assurance of her being one of God's children. Among her little treasures was a morocco bound edition of "Songs and Solos," which Mr. Moody had passed to her from the platform at the Priory. When offering it to him at the close of the service, he replied, "No, no, keep it; I shan't ask you if you are a Christian, your face shows it."

A widow, who had supported her two children—a boy and a girl—nine years by dressmaking, was compelled to give up her business through the development of cancer. After some time her boy was placed with a hairdresser. She had a letter of admission into a hospital, which she could not use, having

NO ONE TO TAKE CARE OF THE CHILD.

Mrs. Ginever received the child, but the poor widow only survived her removal to the hospital a fortnight. A few days previous to her death her little girl was taken to see her. On the child's return, she said, "I did fret about mother very much, but one of your little girls told me not to cry, for it couldn't do mother any good. She told me her mother often went into the hospital, but instead of crying, she told Jesus all about it. So I began to do the same, and it makes me so happy."

One morning a school Board Officer called to tell of an orphan girl whose father had poisoned himself. He had been ill for some time, and recently his eyesight had failed him, so that the constant dread of poverty preyed upon his mind. The child's absence from school being reported to the officer, he called to ascertain the cause, and then heard the sad tale from the man's daughter by his first wife, who had kept house for her father and his motherless little girl since the death of his second wife. She could return to service, but there seemed nothing but the union for the little sister; so one may well imagine how rejoiced they were when the kind officer paid them a second visit with the good news that a home was provided for her.

A very similar case was received from Hampstead. A widow, dying, left a bright, intelligent little girl and a baby boy, quite unprovided for. This poor woman's home had been broken up by the failure of her husband's business, just before her last child was born. Whilst she was thus laid aside, no communication was received from him, so, as soon as strength permitted, she came to town to make inquiries for him. At Scotland Yard she found a photograph and description of his apparel, with a notice attached—"Found drowned near Bermondsey."

There are now 163 orphans under care. Two of the houses have been partially purchased, thus lessening rental expenses; but the rent of two large houses, with interest and mortgages, and the cost of feeding, clothing, and educating such a large number, frequently involves monetary trial.

Monetary aid and clothing, especially boys' suits and boots, also articles for the annual spring sale of work, will be thankfully received by Lady Thompson at 35, Wimpole-street; or by Mrs. Ginever, 19, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway, London, N.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Last Friday evening there was an interesting gathering of voluntary helpers at Milton House, Maude-grove, Fulham-road, S.W., representing workers who conduct Gospel services, Bible-classes, temperance meetings, &c., at the three West-end Homes of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution. Rev. F. W. A. Wilkinson gave a suggestive address on Christian work and the spirit in which it should be conducted.

Mr. E. W. Thomas presented a report, from which it appeared that the work continues to increase. Since the establishment of the Institution in 1857, 13,320 have been received into the various Homes. The majority had been provided for satisfactorily by being placed in service, restored to friends, or otherwise provided for. The work is aided by a large staff of voluntary helpers, who conducted, during the past year, some 3,390 Gospel services, Bible-classes, temperance meetings, &c. Reward books are given to young women who conduct themselves well in service. Over 300 books will be given this year.

Several friends of the work gave brief addresses.

"FULBECK HOUSE," Lime-hill-road, Tunbridge Wells, is a private convalescent Home, opened for the reception of ladies recovering from non-infectious illness, or those needing rest and change. A kind Christian matron resides in the house, and every comfort is provided. The house is pleasantly situated close to the common, and is bright and airy. Ten inmates can be received, and their spiritual refreshment and welfare are desired, as well as their physical need provided for. The terms vary according to requirements. Miss Marion Bogue, 9, Mount Ephraim-road, Tunbridge Wells, will gladly forward further particulars.

Y.W.C.A. WORK IN DUBLIN.—A crowded public meeting of all the branches of the Associations in Dublin and districts was recently held in the Metropolitan Hall, Union-buildings, Lower Abbey-street. All the branches have Bible-classes and working missionary parties. The institute in Harcourt-street and Rutland-square have educational classes, employment agencies, and other offices. They provide accommodation for assistants in mercantile houses, also for members' friends, secretaries, and others from the country. The demand for accommodation has been so great at 75, Harcourt-street, that the committee have been compelled to take the premises at No. 76. The two houses will be connected by archways on two landings. The chairman, Surgeon-General Gunn, testified that the spiritual interests of members are well cared for, and that the work was worthy of prayerful sympathy.

THE DORKING CONFERENCE.

From a Correspondent.

The second Conference at Dorking has been, in some respects, better than the first. In spite of the gloom and rain, the attendance was larger than before. The room being full daily, and even packed in the evenings. But what we rejoice in most of all is the manifestation of the Divine presence which knit us all in one in Christ Jesus by the Spirit. When Rev. S. Dixon referred to the Biblical illustrations of the unity of the Spirit, the chairman pointed to the platform on which sat ministers of various denominations, saying, "We do not give up our distinctive views on certain minor points of doctrine and discipline by sitting here, but we testify to the essential oneness of the body of Christ."

A minister remarked: "I have seen ministers of different denominations gathered together, but there has been a certain amount of diversity of opinion, and sometimes friction; here, however, we are not only all in one place, but of one soul. This is quite a new experience to me. I cannot yet quite understand it." The manifested power of the Spirit grew in intensity towards the close of the Conference, and the following extract from the letter of one who was present will express the feelings of very many:—"One just felt that every speaker was taught of God, and was given the right message, and just the message we each needed. We have all come back so gladdened, refreshed, and strengthened. Never, I trust, shall I forget some of Mr. Luce's heaven-sent words, especially about never living alone, but letting our motto be, 'Jesus and I.' We have, indeed, met God face to face; we have been like Elijah, upon the mount with God. Now we are going forth in the strength of that meat, not only for forty days and forty nights, but, we trust, continually, and ever drawing fresh supplies from Himself."

The first day was a deeply searching time; the subject was "conviction of sin in believers." The second day we saw how these heart-sins could be cleansed by the blood of Jesus. The Vicar, who was chairman, said: "Cleansing is more than justification, and less than sanctification. The latter is, strictly speaking, the possession of the soul by the Holy Ghost. Cleansing, as Andrew Murray says, is the negative side of sanctification. Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify it, having cleansed it. The filthy vessel must be made clean inside and out before it can be filled and used. This brought us to the third day's subject, "The fulness and baptism of the Holy Ghost, or the Pentecostal gift." Great stress was laid on the fact that cleansing was an act to be followed by a life.

Dr. Barnardo's work was described by Rev. W. J. Mayers to a most enthusiastic gathering. We heard a nurse exclaim, "Those dear babies! I would not have missed being at that meeting for anything." Our missionary meeting was addressed by Rev. J. Hoare, C.M.S., and Mr. Pearse, C.I.M, and had a special interest from the fact that Rev. A. G. Lockett, curate of St. Paul's, Dorking, said a few closing words prior to his sailing for India in the Khedive, on Thursday, 16th inst. Rev. B. Russell, who only arrived on Friday evening, was singularly guided in the closing address to press the same subject as that which had been brought before us, without his knowledge, in the praise-meeting in the morning.

From Ps. xvi. 8, 9, Mr. Pearse spoke of setting the Lord always before us. Mr. Russell spoke of the secret of an abiding blessing after the Conference, from the words of Elijah and his successor, which occur four times in his history and in that of Elisha only, "The Lord liveth, before whom I stand." We take this as the message of God to the Conference. May we henceforth stand before Him, our Master, in the attitude of ready service, with nothing between!

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

The preliminary meeting of a season of solemn waiting upon God was held on Saturday evening in the Clapham-road Congregational Hall. It was deeply impressive, for the awful nature of the events to precede and to accompany the grand consummation of this dispensation was felt intensely, and made silence the character of the gathering. Is there not a need that we should hold more silent meetings? Waiting, watching, meditating, and not speaking until there is an urgent sense of the will of the Holy Spirit to use our lips to utter his mind, would give our prayer-meetings a more Scriptural character than those we now sometimes hold. We know not "what we should pray for," nor how to "pray as we ought," but the Spirit is ready to help our infirmities, if we will let Him. It is to be feared that we know too little about this.

In such a case as this present week of prayer it is all important not to speak unless moved by the Holy Ghost. The tremendous issue that is supplicated, the inexpressible immensity of the desire to be expressed, and the certainty of the response, make it a momentous sign of the times that such a gathering is taking place. The fact is significant. We are not surprised, but rejoice to hear that it is in process, and trust it may be a means of untold blessing to the people of God.

There was such a sense of the presence of the Lord at the first meeting, we look with faith for its increasing and encouraging the Church to re-echo the cry of the Spirit, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." A.

GERMAN SAILORS' HOME.—The Seamen's Christian Friend Society having made arrangements to engage the mission-room at this Home, in the East India Dock-road, for services for British seamen, the inaugural meeting was held a few days ago, when, in the unavoidable absence of Admiral Grant, the chair was taken by Colonel Macgregor, C.B. Mrs. Lichtenberg, hon. superintendent, gave a hearty welcome to the men, and invited them to make free use of the reading-room. Rev. J. G. Hill explained that he and Mrs. Hill had long wanted to do something for the spritual good of the many British seamen to be met with in the neighbourhood of the East and West India Dock-roads, and they thanked God for opening the way by which this could now be done. For the present they intend to conduct Gospel meetings every Tuesday and Friday evenings. The only expenses will be the rent of the hall, a few sailors' tea-meetings, and the necessary printing. Mrs. Hill and Captain Dalrymple followed with short Gospel addresses, and hearty singing and earnest testimonies from some of the men followed.

BETTING AND GAMBLING.—A public meeting was held in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Monday, last week, to consider the evils of gambling. The Bishop of Newcastle presided, and told his hearers that honesty, like charity, must begin at home; and so long as they countenanced raffles and lotteries at Church bazaars they could not decently throw stones at shilling sweepstakes for the St. Leger or whist at penny points. The Bishop of Durham said that the spirit of gambling had already occupied a vast region of trade and commerce, and was demoralising popular games. He called upon those who exercised large influence by their rank and by their splendid traditions to discountenance this evil. Reform could be brought about by personal example, by rigid enforcement of the law, and by a wise amendment of the law. He asked the public journals to withhold the facilities, he had almost said the temptations, for gambling. Representatives of other denominations spoke, and resolutions were adopted deploring the spread of gambling habits, and inviting the co-operation of the Press and other agencies to check the growing evil.

Obituary.

MISS ALEXANDER.

This lady, of Agra, India, N.W.P., passed peacefully into rest on the evening of September 4. She went to India as an independent worker in 1866, and was for some time working in Rajputana. For years she resided in Agra, and carried on work for the Lord as she was able. She was long an invalid, but she magnified her Lord in much patient suffering.

DR. GUSTAVE MONOD.

Dr. Gustave Monod, one of the seven brothers of the late Pastor Adolphe Monod, died on Thursday last, at the age of 86. He was formerly Professor of the Faculty of Medicine, and was much respected. His elder brother, Pastor Guillaume Monod, is a hale nonagenerian, and another brother is living at Havre. Their father was a Swiss and their grandfather a Huguenot refugee in Holland. The deceased has a son, Dr. Charles Monod, who practises medicine in Paris.

REV. D. SHAW.

Rev. Dugald Shaw, Free Church minister of Laggan, Kingussie, died a few days ago at the age of over eighty. By his death a figure of some note has been removed from the ranks of the "Highland host." Born in Kintyre, the deceased received his education in his native parish, and, giving early evidence of the possession of considerable mental powers, he was sent to Glasgow University, and, having there passed through the Arts course, he studied theology under Dr. Stevenson M'Gill. Having laboured in Mull, Mr. Shaw, at the Disruption, threw in his lot with the party now forming the Free Church. Inducted to Laggan in 1848, he has remained there ever since. Few ministers have worked with more zeal. As a preacher Mr. Shaw was earnestly evangelical.

MISS ELIZABETH BURNETT.

It is with regret that we record the death of Miss Elizabeth Burnett, sister of Mr. Matthew Burnett, the temperance reformer, which took place a few days ago at her residence in Queen's Parade, Scarborough. She was well known for her work in the Wesleyan Church, and was closely identified with efforts aimed at the relief of the poor. Miss Burnett was fifty-seven years of age. As a district visitor and temperance worker she won many for Christ, and in her closing years, amid intensest suffering, she endeared herself to all by her Christian patience and unabated interest in the work of God. For many years she lived with Rev. Frederick Griffiths, and in the work of his circuits she rendered much help. Miss Griffiths writes:—"If ever any woman deserved love and esteem, she did. She was one of God's precious ones." She was buried by Revs. Samuel Walker and John Elsworth in the Scarborough Cemetery on Tuesday, last week, many friends gathering to pay their last mark of respect to one of God's most unobstrusive workers.

MR. WILLIAM OLNEY.

We regret to announce the death of this gentleman, well known as senior deacon of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He was seventy years of age, and, with the exception of Mr. Spurgeon, was the oldest member of the Tabernacle church. During fifty-four years he was a zealous worker, and a liberal supporter of the many agencies of which the Tabernacle is the home and centre.

Connected with the wool trade, he for many years carried on business in Bermondsey; and his great concern for the people led him, with the co-operation of his family, to found the Haddon Hall, the services of which have until recently been conducted by his eldest son. Until Wednesday last week Mr. Olney was an active participator in the varied work of the Tabernacle, and in the many interests of the Baptist cause at large. On that day, however, he was seized with an epileptic stroke, and died on the Friday. His relations with Mr. Spurgeon were characterised by close confidence and deep affection.

The name of the minister of whose death a notice appeared in our last week's "Obituary" should have been given as Rev. James Chalmers, not Chambers.

MR. C. INGLIS AT REIGATE.

The united mission concluded last week by Mr. Charles Inglis formed a time of great refreshing to many of the people of the town. The interest in the meetings was very great, the Public Hall being filled nightly; while on Sundays the place was crowded with all classes, anxious to hear God's message of love.

Better still, the Spirit of God brought numbers under conviction of sin, and many who were dealt with in the inquiry-room have professed their joy in the knowledge of their salvation.

The afternoon Bible-readings were largely attended by Christians of all denominations in the town and neighbourhood, and proved to be a time of spiritual profit. During the mission many a weary worker has been refreshed, and others have seen fresh beauties in the Word of God.

Mr. Inglis was obliged to give up the last meeting as arranged, in order to leave for America for two month's work. It was, therefore, conducted more especially for the benefit of those who had received blessing during the mission, short addresses being given by Lady Hope, Mrs. Hatt-Noble, and others.

The interest of those attending the meetings was specially shown in the freewill offerings, about half the total expenses being defrayed by contributions in copper and small silver. Altogether the nine days have been a very happy time for the workers in Reigate and the surrounding villages. The Lord's blessing had long been sought by his people, and to Him alone the praise and honour must be given.

ROYAL BLIND PENSION SOCIETY.

"The adult blind should, as far as possible, share the joys and countless pleasures of home life. Don't confine them within the walls of institutions, but let them share the hopes and joys of those who can see." So said the late Henry Fawcett, Postmaster-General. The Marquis of Lorne, too, in referring to this Society, has expressed the opinion that in everything which we do in health, strength, and activity, we should always remember those who cannot avail themselves of the privileges that we enjoy. The Society has to raise £4000 a year for distribution amongst 600 pensioners, through the aid of about 400 honorary almoners, men and women who individually examine each case.

If it is well to care for the blind who can be taken young and who can be trained, how much more for those on whom the blight, the affliction, the terrible disaster of blindness has fallen in after life, more or less paralysing the efforts which they were making to obtain an honest livelihood. None have been assisted who could be supported by relatives, or who have been trained to do work for support. The pensioners are those who without the very small sum allowed by this Society, would probably come to complete destitution. A large area has been covered, and every rank and condition of life has been represented. It is always a terrible thing for a blind person to be torn away from the familiar and loved home. An offer was repeatedly made (of course not by this Society) to place an old, feeble, and blind woman in a better house, where others were cared for, but her answer always was "Oh! do leave me here till you take me to the churchyard." Mr. Bumstead, the treasurer, points out that the income only enables the Society to touch the fringe of the 30,000 blind in this country. If the subscription list were ten times larger, there would be no difficulty in distributing the money among deserving blind persons. The office is at 235, Southwark Bridge-road, S.E.

MISS WESTON'S WORK.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH VISITS THE BLUE JACKETS.

Saturday, October 11, was a "red-letter day" at the Sailors' Rest on account of a visit paid by Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, in response to an invitation from Miss Weston that he would come to inspect the place and see something of the work.

Arriving with his Flag Lieutenant, with royal punctuality, at the hour named, H.R.H. cordially shook hands with Miss Weston and Miss Winter, and, after a little conversation, started to go over the building. His admiration of the Sailor Boys' Room, bright with colour and sunshine, and full of boys reading, talking, and playing draughts, was very great. The boys saluted, and stood at "attention," till the Duke good-naturedly told them "to sit down and make themselves at home." Proceeding through the spacious kitchen and store-rooms, the next point was the coffee-bar, busy with seamen and sailor boys; then the reading and recreation rooms, baths, and lavatories. Talking brightly and pleasantly to Miss Weston, they then made for the dormitories, and, as tier upon tier of the noble apartments opened out, His Royal Highness expressed surprise and pleasure. Miss Weston told him that they made up 300 beds, and that had rested beneath the roof during the year. Passing through the hall to the office, H.R.H. busied himself in looking over the balance sheets and books, and then, most kindly placing his autograph in the "Visitors' Book," added to it his warm commendation, graciously promising to be President of the work, and telling Miss Weston that the Duchess of Edinburgh, on her arrival, would certainly honour the Sailors' Rest with a visit.

The readers of The Christian have a large stake in the Sailors' Rest, having contributed kindly and liberally, and it is well they should know that the place is not only appreciated by the bluejackets and officers in general, but also by the Royal Admiral who stands so high on the list. At present £3000 is needed to pay off all liabilities on this splendid building. We should be glad to learn that Miss Weston's mind was free from the burden of this debt, so that she may be enabled to grapple with the needful enlargements at Portsmouth. A lady, on reading an article in The Christian some time ago, gave Miss Weston £1500 for the enlargement at Portsmouth, as a memorial.

A seaman was sitting, smiling and happy, in one of the rooms, and, on the writer speaking to him, he said, "Yes, thank God, I am happy; in this very place I was made mad drunk when the publics were here, and now I'm happy as a king."

We thank God for the honest bluejacket's testimony; we know it is true of numbers more. Miss Weston, the Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth, is a sufficient address.

FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.—There was an interesting gathering at Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms at Lillie Bridge-road on Sunday evening, October 12. From fifty to sixty Arabs, Greeks, Armenians, and blacks were brought together, and, after light refreshments, had the Gospel preached to them. With one solitary exception the addresses were received with close attention. Two young men, who, I ascertained, had previously been interested inquirers of the City missionary, Mr. Beaney, stayed behind for further conversation. Each man and woman on leaving was presented with a copy of the Scriptures, which they received with apparent thankfulness. The readers of The Christian will, I am sure, not fail to follow these in prayer, that through the Word the Holy Spirit may find his way to the heart of many of these interesting people. George D. Freeman.

The Temperance Cause.

A number of gentlemen at Madras, ministerial and lay, are establishing a temperance depot in Blacktown, in that city.

It is stated that in a Roman Catholic Chapel in Dublin, on Sunday week, 1400 persons took the pledge after a temperance sermon.

The Wesleyans at various important centres are arranging for public meetings and other efforts in connection with Temperance Sunday.

Rev. Joseph H. Bateson, Wesleyan Missionary in India, has accepted the secretaryship of the Indian Army Temperance Association.

The Bradford Observer has published a drink map, showing every licensed house in the town. There are now 958, and the population is 240,515.

The centenary celebrations in memory of the birth of the great Irish apostle of temperance (Father Mathew) were recently held in Cork and Dublin with much enthusiasm.

At the Berlin Medical Congress, Dr. Kahlbaum said dipsomaniacs did not remain long enough under treatment to be really cured. He thought an island should be set apart for the purpose.

The Governor of Kansas writes:—"The population of Topeka, including the suburbs, is about forty thousand, with not a single saloon within its entire limits." This is one achievement of prohibition.

The Aberdeen Temperance Society recently celebrated its forty-fifth anniversary. The cheering announcement was made that there were eleven fewer licensed houses in the city than last year.

The Holyhead School Board has given Mr. Owen Roberts permission to prepare the boys for the National Competitive School Examination to be held under the auspices of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union.

The Executive of the Scottish Temperance League, on learning that it is proposed to apply for a licence for the sale of intoxicating drinks in the Glasgow East-end Industrial Exhibition, are to give the proposal every possible opposition.

Mr. Samuel Sims, of the National Temperance League, has been making a tour of the garrisons in Ireland, and addressing meetings of the soldiers. The commanding officers and chaplains have given him valuable aid, and many pledges were taken.

General Sir Frederick Roberts, Commander-in-Chief, in India, at Simla, recently made a very earnest pronouncement in favour of the Army Temperance Association. The Association, he stated, now numbers about 14,000 members, with 300 honorary members, or "temperance men."

Lord Wolseley on Sunday week visited the Soldiers' Home which is in course of erection at Belfast, almost opposite the entrance to Victoria Barracks. He spoke of the value of such places of resort, and said they kept soldiers away from drink, which was the cause of nearly all the crime that took place in the Army.

The Congregational Total Abstinence Association reports encouragingly. Of the total of 2700 Congregational ministers, 1600 are known to be abstainers. Last year 88 young men entered the ministry, and 74 of them are abstainers. In Great Britain there are 382 students, of whom 341 are abstainers. The theological students in Scotland and in Wales are all abstainers.

The drink bill for 1889 amounted to £132,213,276, showing an increase over the immediately preceding years. This sum represented no less than £3 9s. 11d. per head of the entire population, or an average of £17 9s. 7d. for each family in the United Kingdom. When it is borne in mind that myriads of the British people now are abstainers, the terrible lesson of these figures becomes more strikingly manifest, and we cease to wonder at the fact that so many families are miserable, and so many more are criminal.

A Government inspector of schools is reported in the Press as having recently said at Truro that the great bane of Cornwall is not drunkenness on the part of the men, but on the part of the women; and he believed the painful fact to be due to the grocers' licences throughout the county. The same remark applies to a great extent to Dublin, where, on the occasion of the recent Father Mathew Demonstration, the public-houses and licensed grocers were, according to the local Press, crowded during the day, a large proportion of the customers being females.

BARMAIDS AND WAITRESSES.

Since November, 1885, earnest work has been carried on among London barmaids and waitresses by the superintendent of the Restaurant Department of the Y.W.C.A., Miss C. M. Gough, at Morley Rooms, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C. Much has been done for this class of hard-worked women, but the need of a Home where those out of situation could find temporary accommodation, was much felt. Many who obtain their living in bars, &c., are under "short notice" agreement, and are, therefore, sometimes suddenly cast adrift without a friend. It is impossible to form a just idea of what the rest and protection of a quiet home must be to these poor weary and tried toilers. The same advantages are reaped from the organisation by those who are in regular employ, but want safe and cheap lodging.

Of the rest after toil, with sympathy and counsel in difficulties, the girls have shown spontaneous appreciation. Lodging and food is provided at nominal charge, and a small annual subscription secures the additional privileges of membership.

The visitation of restaurants and public-houses is a special feature of the work; and, although their is little opportunity for conversation, good seed is sown in faith and hope. Correspondence is a branch of work requiring considerable tact. Various lady friends write to the girls every two months, and deal with varying dispositions, needs, and temptations. The letters which thus convey help are much prized by the recipients.

Hundreds of young persons have no knowledge of any trade but "the bar"; and it is, therefore, extremely difficult to remove them from scenes of temptation and trial. Many would be from it if they could. One, persuaded to leave more than doubtful employment in a house of questionable repute, is now a bright Christian, exerting good influence in a respectable situation; others have left the bar, of whom two are in small businesses of their own; two have become abstainers, and are engaged in cocoa rooms; others are in domestic service; and several have married, but continue their membership.

There is in this employment not only the drink temptation, but danger from corrupt conversation by men in respectable garb; moreover, innuendoes, violent oaths, and ribald jests abound. Verily, one saved from this is a brand plucked from the burning, over whom angels rejoice. The underpaid slavery of railway bars is aggravated by the discomforts and dangers of bad sleeping and living surroundings in the scanty intervals of labour.

At some hotels, where there is no Sunday work, the employés are shut out from 10 a.m. until midnight. The general conditions of restaurants are no better; are employed, and expected to dress well on a wage of 8s. or 10s. a week, with deductions for breakages, and to have a smiling face for all comers. Is it any wonder that sometimes a willing ear is turned to insidious flattery? The temptations to which waitresses are exposed in temperance restaurants are not so many and varied; but they exist, and the same kindly help is needed. Generally speaking, the girls are sadly overworked, and the need for early closing is very apparent.

Just before the opening of the Paris Exhibition, Miss Gough secured accommodation in the French capital for twenty-four young women to lodge, and, if necessary, board. The comfort and blessing of this to strangers in a strange land may be readily conceived. An "Exhibition Home" was also opened to secure like benefits to the young women employed in the Italian and Irish Exhibitions.

The first week of mission services has been held this year, and there was cheer and encouragement from the impression evidently made. The girls have had the desire to meet for spiritual instruction. Confidence is felt that in some cases the seed has been cast on good ground.

The "Prayer Union," from which much is hoped for, is increasing in membership. It is proposed to form, for barmaids of all descriptions, a Thrift or Self-help Society.

As the work becomes better known among those for whom it is carried on, the need for extension becomes very pressing. It is hoped to raise an additional £100, for the purpose of adding to the Home seven more bed-rooms. This sum will cover furnishing and rental for three years.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. W. R. Lane has held a week's Gospel mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in Cork; next week we shall give a detailed report.

West Hartlepool.—A fourteen days' mission has been held in the Whitby-street mission-hall, conducted by Mrs. Woolley, of Sedgley. The attendance was good throughout, and many professed to receive blessing.

Mr. William Forbes, who has for several weeks past been labouring in Scotland, began a ten days' mission on Saturday last at the Presbyterian Church in Chatham. On Sunday he addressed the children and preached in the evening. Bible-readings were held each afternoon.

Belfast.—Messrs. Foote Brothers, of America, have just concluded a three weeks' mission in Agnes-street Independent Church, of which Rev. D. McKee is minister. Several hundreds of persons professed to decide for Christ. The good work has spread all round the neighbourhood.

Budleigh Salterton.—In connection with the Y.M.C.A., a united mission has been held in this town by Mr. Henry Thorne, of Exeter Hall. Much blessing has followed the earnest Gospel addresses, while the afternoon Bible-readings have been deeply valued by a daily increasing audience.

Mr. G. H. Lord has just returned from his first tour, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., of 200 miles through the North of Ireland. The Clones Corn Exchange was filled. His lectures upon the Holy Land set forth the truth, and helped to disperse the darkness that still hangs over many parts of the land.

Elgin.—Evangelistic services have been conducted here by Mr. Anderson, of the Forfarshire Christian Union. The meetings were well attended and many have professed to find salvation. The children of God have derived a rich blessing from Mr. Anderson's Bible-readings, which, like his preaching, have been spiritual and Scriptural, plain and pointed.

Watford.—An eight days' mission has been held by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, in Beechen Grove Chapel. The mission was preceded by a week of special prayer. Mr. Hallowes conducted in all eighteen services, including three for children, one for mothers, one for men only, and two on the higher Christian life. The congregations were large. At a meeting for testimony and prayer, many spoke gratefully of the blessing they had received. The pastor of the church (Rev. James Stuart) expressed his thankfulness that the meetings had been held, and his conviction that large and permanent good would result from them.

Blackford Bridge, Bury.—A very successful mission has been concluded, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie. The churches in the district have been longing for times of refreshing. It has become evident from the results of this mission that such a season was the thing needed to bring to fruition the seed of the word that had been sown in the hearts of the people. Every night the attendance was large, and, at a social meeting held at the close of the mission, it was stated that eighty-five had entered the inquiry-room. The pastor, Rev. W. Nichalls and his flock have been greatly cheered and encouraged in their work, and are looking forward with hope.

Rev. J. Worthington-Atkin, missioner of the "Daily Prayer Union," has returned home from Canada, where he preached in the chief churches of the principal cities. He held missions which lasted from two to five days at many places of interest, including Niagara, and he also addressed large gatherings of young men. Much blessing has resulted from the tour.

Ballymoney.—A mission full of interest has just been held here in connection with the Irish Evangelisation Society. Messrs. James Thompson and Ralph Robinson were the evangelists engaged, and the meetings, which were held in a tent, were so largely attended that latterly the Presbyterian churches were kindly placed at disposal. Among the converts was a young Jew, who was publicly baptized in the First Presbyterian Church. He is now rejoicing in the Lord his Saviour.

Chichester.—Under the auspices of the Chichester branches of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. a ten days' mission has been held. The hall lately acquired by the Y.M.C.A. was packed each night with a seriously attentive audience. The word was faithfully preached and with great power, by Mr. Rowland Sturt of the Evangelisation Society. The afternoon meetings for Christians were also well attended and much appreciated. The influence of the Holy Spirit was felt with great power throughout, and it is believed that a rich blessing will follow.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. A. F. Forrest gave in Hutchinson-town U.P. Church, Glasgow, on Sunday week, the first of a series of monthly sermons to young men. The church, one of the largest in the city, was crowded to overflowing.

Dr. Kerr Cross, of Nyassaland, recently gave an address on mission work in the home and foreign fields at the annual Home Mission evening, in Pollokshields Church, where he served his apprenticeship under Mr. Wells.

The excessive infant mortality in Leith has caused some stir in that community. One of the local town councillors attributes it to the culpable and criminal neglect of the parents of the poorer classes. A hospital for sick children is said to be much needed in the borough.

The Glasgow University Christian Association does good work in the city in various ways. The committee are desirous of making its claims known to students entering on their first session; Mr. Andrew B. Neilson, Bank of Scotland House, Glasgow, the secretary, will be happy to give information.

Professor Lindsay, speaking recently in Paisley on foreign missions, said that in India there were two kinds of work, educational and evangelical, both very important; but if the Church had got to the end of their tether, his earnest conviction was they should have more evangelical and less educational work.

A new departure in the work of the Primitive Methodist Connexion is reported from Edinburgh. The Connexion has not thriven in the northern capital, and so it is proposed to sell its present chapel (which is not only in an out-of-the-way place, but far from places suitable for open-air gatherings), and to secure the erection of a fairly-sized mission-hall, and to undertake evangelistic work, the ordinary routine services being abandoned.

The recent Sabbath School Convention in Glasgow was largely attended, and the proceedings were full of vital interest. Valuable papers were read, and speeches delivered, bearing on the varied aspects of this invaluable work among the young. At a public meeting in St. Andrew's Hall Professor Calderwood laid stress on the importance of Sunday-school work in its bearing on the future of the Church; and Lord Kinnaird spoke earnestly of the teachers' influence and power.

The Sabbath Alliance of Scotland has been publicly censuring the Postmaster-General for encouraging Sabbath-breaking by visiting the new post-office at Inverness on the Day of Rest. Their intervention is more needed in connection with the Sabbath evening orchestral concerts in Cooke's Circus, Edinburgh, that were recently commenced on the Lord's Day; it is stated that the legality of the step will be tested. At a Saturday evening meeting at Carrubber's Close, a strong protest was lodged against this fresh secularisation of the Sacred Day. There is also a movement in Edinburgh in favour of running the tramcars on the Sabbath. The friends of the Rest Day in Scotland's capital have plenty of work on hand.

AMONG LONDON FLOWER GIRLS.

Although he has suffered considerably from illness, as a result of long-continued overwork, Mr. John A. Groom, hon. superintendent of the comprehensive Mission in Clerkenwell, has not allowed any department of his service to suffer. Some increase in the supplies has encouraged enterprise in new openings.

The flower girls are now a somewhat numerous class, and well they may be, seeing the traffic they represent has so wonderfully developed in the course of a generation that a sum of about £5000 is now daily spent in London for cut flowers alone. But as regards the flower-girl herself—"What a dismal contrast to the beauty of her wares is the one room she calls her home! To what vicious temptations by night and by day, at home and abroad, is she subjected!" The helping hand of this Mission has not been held out in vain; for through the brigade for teaching the making of artificial flowers, no less than seven hundred girls have passed from the streets into desirable situations, while fifty-two are still in course of training. This department cannot be self-supporting, because the girls have to be paid such wages as they can live upon from the time of being taken on. The club-room at Covent Garden has not only proved an immense boon, it has taken the place of the public-house during the hours of early morning in the case of the women and girls who come to purchase their day's stock. The loans made by the Emily Fund in the course of the year, free of interest, amounted to £87 10s., while £192 6s. was deposited in the Penny Bank. The feeding of famishing Board School children; partly through the aid of the Destitute Children's Dinner Society, has been continued, for 4,000 free breakfasts, and 800 half-penny dinners were served out weekly during the winter months.

The Committee were enabled to inaugurate three new branches in 1889—the Orphans' Home at Clacton, the Night Shelters in London, and the Homes of the Flower Girls' Sisterhood. The Home at Clacton is the beginning of what it is hoped will be a village for the reclamation of utterly neglected and often cruelly used waifs of the flower-selling class. This is, therefore, one of the largest undertakings which the Committee have embarked upon. The want of a cottage hospital is already much felt; but since the report was written, a lady has offered to pay the cost of this, provided that others will guarantee £250 a year for maintenance. The Night Shelters are situated in various parts of London, each being "a safe and comfortable haven, to which the missionaries, when out at night, can take any homeless girl they may meet belated on the streets." The new Flower Girls' Sisterhood also has its centres in various parts of London; and while the main object is helpful union, "each district centre will have what may be called an inner circle of earnest Christian members, whose special aim it will be to spread the truth as it is in Jesus among the main body."

The more spiritual work has still its encouraging features. The attendance at the Gospel service on Sunday evenings at Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell-road, has never fallen below 900. The Sunday-school, which numbered 300 a few years ago, has grown to 800, and the standing difficulty is to find room for those who come. The attendance at the children's services ranges from 150 to 600. The weekly Band of Hope meetings average an attendance of 200. Open-air preaching is constantly carried on at Clerkenwell-green and elsewhere. Several minor agencies still continue in active operation.

The death of Sir George Burns, Mr. Daniel Proctor, and others deprives the Mission of the aid of some of its most generous supporters, while the continued ailing of Mr. Groom, the hon. superintendent, calls for sympathy. It is hoped that new friends will make good the loss of the old, so that lack of supplies may not prevent the work from being carried on with efficiency. Mr. John A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell-green, will give further information.

MR. AITKEN AT ARMAGH.

There has been and is great joy in this city. Mr. Aitken, accompanied by Mr. Peters, curate of St. Nathaniel's, Liverpool, and Mrs. Crouch, have been holding a fortnight's mission here, and God has been greatly blessing their labours. Night by night we have had most solemn gatherings at St. Mark's Church, and with eager attention the earnest words of the preacher have been listened to, and we hope, in many instances, received in the love of the truth.

Mr. Aitken adopted the plan of inviting all who were anxious about their soul's salvation to meet him and his helpers in the gallery of St. Mark's Church, and night by night numbers have flocked thither for help and direction. A goodly number of young men and young women have, it is believed, given their hearts to God, and not a few of riper years; while the older people have derived great assistance from Mr. Aitken's many addresses on the spiritual life.

The children's services have also been very well attended, and Mr. Peters has, we fully believe, won many a young heart for his Master, while the women's gatherings have also been greatly blessed.

Altogether it has been a time much to be remembered, and Mr. Aitken himself, who has had so much experience in the work, has stated that he has been greatly encouraged by a movement that has reminded him of the old days, when such work was much more novel than it is now. The Dean of Armagh and the local workers have been most assiduous in their efforts to forward the work, and a very large and efficient choir has made the singing a great success. All Protestant denominations have heartily joined in the work, and there has been manifested a general feeling of goodwill and Christian fellowship that has in itself been very impressive.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services to be held in connection with the Westbury Gospel Mission during November.——A month's mission, being held at the Speedwell Coffee Palace and Mission Hall, Landport, Portsmouth, by Mr. Oscar Owers.——A nine days' mission at Palmer-place Mission Hall, Holloway, N., commencing Oct. 26.——A mission from Oct. 25 to Nov. 1, at Ripley Court, Surrey, by Herbert R. Francis.——A mission to be held in Pewsey, Wilts, Oct. 26 to Nov. 9, by a member of the Evangelisation Society.——PRAISE: for blessing at Colchester.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.—On Sunday week the twenty-second anniversary was celebrated of the evangelistic services at the Agricultural Hall, Islington; and Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, the originator and director of the movement, made his annual statement at the afternoon service. He said the past year had been no exception to those that had gone before in repeated evidences of spiritual blessing. From time to time, to his infinite delight, some soul had found spiritual and eternal rest. The services were entirely unsectarian and undenominational. Baptist ministers had given thirteen addresses during the year, Presbyterians had given ten, Episcopalians nine, Congregationalists eight, and Wesleyans three. There had also been addresses by laymen on six occasions, but he could not tell to what branch of the Church they belonged. All the services rendered in connection with these meetings were voluntary, and he thanked the ministers of the several churches who had come forward and cordially given a helping hand. They had also to thank Mr. Spurgeon and his evangelists for taking the evening services. They wanted larger co-operation and more unity of purpose in making these services a still greater success.

NATAL EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The marriage is announced of Mrs. Osborn, of Cape Town, with Mr. George B. Howe, who for some years directed the work in Cape Town, now known as the Cape General Mission. Having made over this Mission to Mr. Spencer Walton, and a Council in London, Mr. and Mrs. Howe feel called to devote themselves to Eastern South Africa, especially in itinerant work. A visit from an evangelist is an event in the lives of the scattered Europeans in Natal, farmers, planters, railway men, and traders, and is welcomed at most of the mission stations.

The heathen having the first claim, Mr. and Mrs. Howe hope to promote itinerant work in Zululand. In the training of native evangelists, they will have the able assistance of Rev. Otto Witt, a missionary belonging to the Swedish Free Mission in Natal.

REV. W. E. COUSINS has returned to work at Madagascar.

MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER is writing for next month's Contemporary an article on Mrs. Booth. The two ladies have for nearly twenty years been in intimate sympathy, and each privately advised, cheered, and assisted the other's public work.

LADY DOCTORS FOR INDIA.—Miss C. H. Graham, M.D., and Miss Anna Baumler, M.D., former students of the London School of Medicine for Women, have been appointed Lady Doctors under "The Countess of Dufferin's Fund" in India. The former will serve at Rangoon and the latter at Lahore.

LORD AND LADY ABERDEEN, says a London correspondent, continue to find themselves in great request in Canada. Lord Aberdeen has had a busy time with one function and another. One of his latest engagements was to appear in the pulpit of one of the Presbyterian Churches in Hamilton on a Sunday evening for the purpose of delivering an address. Lady Aberdeen has been visiting a number of charitable institutions in the neighbourhood.

UNION HALL MISSION.—Writing with regard to the recent destruction of Gospel tents, Mr. R. Bilke says:—"In order to replace the tents and furniture we need about £80. We are anxious to secure two new tents, and to have a small tent made from the old canvas. Good work is being done in all the halls and localities of the Mission. The work in the open air has also been greatly prospered this summer. Mr. Bilke's address is Abergeldie, Greenhill Park, Harlesden, N.W.

MR. F. S. ARNOT, writing from Benguella, tells of disturbing experiences through the action of Portuguese political agents. On August 5 he wrote:—"Over 1500 troops are being marched upon Bihé. I shall be up, I hope, before anything is done. I am taking in a large lot of stuff, and will, I trust, get goods off at once to the interior. I have had a few feverish days, and have more to see to than I well can. Periodical fits of severe vomiting distress me. Dr. Walter Fisher thinks it is owing to a slight ulceration of the stomach."

COMMITMENTS TO REFORMATORIES.—The Home Secretary has sent a circular to the magistrates, in which he says he regrets to find that nearly half the total of the commitments to reformatories are on first convictions, and he impresses on justices the necessity of satisfying themselves in all cases that the training and discipline of a reformatory are really requisite, and that there is no danger of sending comparatively innocent children to associate with hardened offenders.

CHRISTIAN POLICE ASSOCIATION.—A "welcome" meeting, in connection with the autumn conference, in Edinburgh, was presided over by Sir Thomas Clark, who remarked upon the importance of the police constables, to whom the safety of life and property is entrusted, being men of good Christian experience as well as good sense. During the past five years a large number of the police had joined the Association, and their example has been of great benefit to the community. The delegates present, from all parts of Great Britain and Ireland, were welcomed by Sir A. Campbell, on behalf of the policemen of Edinburgh. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. D. Lewis and W. D. Dunn, as well as Colonel Oldham.

The Book World.

Dr. Dale's New Book.

The Living Christ and the Four Gospels. By R. W. Dale, LL.D. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. An unanswerable argument for the verity of the Christian religion. The book meets a definite need as a popular statement of the warrant of faith, with special reference to critical methods which would depreciate the Gospel story. The work is in the form of lectures, fourteen in number, delivered to the author's congregation in Carrs-lane Chapel, Birmingham. Christian experience is, with admirable cogency, shown to establish the truth of the Gospel. The divinity of Christ is maintained, and the evidence for the authenticity of the Fourth Gospel presented with convincing force. Other positions which rationalistic writers have challenged are also defended. We cordially commend the volume as calculated to deepen faith in the living Christ and strengthen confidence in the historical trustworthiness of the story of his earthly ministry as set forth in the four Gospels.

Counsel for Young Men.

A Good Start; A Book for Young Men. By J. Thain Davidson, D.D. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Another series of addresses, by one who is facile princeps as counsellor and guide to young men. The author well says, in the preface: "The history of many young men is a sad record of misplaced confidence and of foolish tampering with temptation. Our cities have great moral vortices, in which it is no exaggeration to say that hundreds of the choicest of our youth are constantly disappearing. It was the aim of these discourses to lay hold of young men before they were caught in the fatal whirlpool, and many a delightful testimony has reached the preacher that, under the Divine blessing, his aim has been realised." The discourses are twenty in number, and among them are "Something Better than Riches," "Betting and Gambling," and "A Perfect Man." We trust that these pages, at once winning and stimulating, will be perused by thousands of our young men.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Harvest and Thanksgiving Services. 5s. Nisbet. Here are thirteen sermons, eleven sketches and outlines, and three addresses—quite a body of suggestion in an important department of pulpit effort. Among the numerous preachers laid under contribution are Revs. Hugh Macmillan, D.D., J. Monro Gibson, D.D., Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, M.A., Henry Allon, D.D., and W. J. Dawson. The volume should prove very useful to such as lead the public devotions of God's people.

Saul and David. By Mrs. M. Baxter. "Christian Herald" Office. Beginning with the birth of Samuel, this book deals with the prominent incidents from that event down to the death of Solomon. The chapters are brief, and though not remarkable for depth, are marked by a devout spirit. They are intensely practical, and deduce from the Bible narratives lessons calculated to help in the cultivation of the spiritual life. They will be found interesting, instructive, and profitable.

Grace and Sin. By Pastor Stockmayer. Snow & Co. 1s. We heartily rejoice in the reissue of this very valuable little book. Its aim is practical holiness, and its teaching is, in our judgment, eminently safe and Scriptural. Many, in enforcing this subject, have gone to dangerous extremes, which have already produced sad results. Pastor Stockmayer aims at an equally high standard of Christian living, but seeks to secure it by clear and connected expositions of Scripture. To all inquirers upon this subject we recommend this excellent treatise.

Steps of Faith; or, From Mesopotamia to Moriah. By Pastor Stockmayer. Snow & Co. 6d. It is impossible, within the limits of so small a pamphlet, to deal exhaustively with so large a subject. But if Pastor Stockmayer's chapters are brief, they contain much. The more prominent events of Abraham's history are dealt with as representing the "steps" in his life "of faith." To those who are seeking to "walk by faith" we commend this little book for its clear exposition, its helpful instruction, and its forceful application of the lessons of the narrative to practical Christian life.

Zionward: Hymns of the Pilgrim Life. By Rev. John Brownlie. 1s. Nisbet. Another small volume of verses by the minister of the Free Church, Portpatrick. Essentially spiritual in tone, they express sentiments of loving adoration. The love of God is beautifully celebrated, and the glories of Christ form the theme of a number of choice songs.

The Dream of Pilate's Wife. A poem, suggested by Doré's famous picture. By Rev. John Hudson, M.A. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. A remarkable incident in the trial of Christ is the theme of this stately verse. Round the few statements of Scripture the author has woven an attractive story, which testifies to a Christian imagination as well as a cultured mind.

Books for Boys. Messrs. Cassell & Co. have published new editions of the following books (2s. 6d. each), which are well suited for presentation to boys:—Modern Explorers, by Thomas Frost, seven chapters of adventure, admirably illustrated; and Pictures of School Life and Boyhood, selected from the best authors, by Percy Fitzgerald, M.A. The latter already enjoys a widespread popularity.

Memorials of R. T. Cunningham, M.A. By Rev. David Miller, Stranraer. Edinburgh: Andrew Elliott. By this very short biographical sketch and specimen sermons of Mr. Cunningham, his friends will be interested and all readers edified. The sermon on the Rent Veil is striking and faithful. In "Forgiveness from the Cross" repentance is almost left out of sight. The grave defects in Emerson are truly pointed out, but not ascribed to their true cause, the pride of intellect which spurns the doctrines of grace. A good likeness of Mr. Cunningham is given as a frontispiece.

The Threefold Cords of the Holy Scriptures: An Arrangement of upwards of twelve hundred Precepts, Prayers, and Promises, as four hundred Sacred Triads. By Rev. William Lee. 2s. Nisbet. A work of unique interest, and evidently the result of close and thorough study of God's Word. Many will be glad of the book as a help to meditation. Evangelists and Bible-class teachers will welcome it as a valuable aid to the application of spiritual truth, for every triad may be made the ground-work of Gospel addresses. The complete indexes make the book specially serviceable.

Sheaves of Ministry: Sermons and Expositions, by James Morison, D.D. 10s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The author's ministerial jubilee was celebrated last year, and in this volume he gives such mementoes of his completed ministry as, to use his own words, "afford fit opportunity of repeating the 'Old, old Gospel-story,' and other portions of Divine truth, on fresh lines of practical exegesis." Thirty-four in number, the discourses are marked with singular vigour and freshness. That the themes are great will be inferred from some of the titles: "Is there a larger hope?" "Does God fix everything?" "Blasphemy against the Holy Spirit." As is well known, Dr. Morison regards Divine foreknowledge from what is known as the Arminian point of view. He is no latitudinarian, however, as may easily be learned from his discourses on "The Bible the Word of God," "The Life of Faith," and "If Indifferentism increase and mature, what then?" These pages are stimulating in a high degree, and fully sustain the reputation of their distinguished author.

Light in Africa. By Rev. James Macdonald. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. The author of this interesting contribution to the missionary literature of the once shrouded Continent was for twelve years connected with the Free Church of Scotland missions at Lovedale, Blythewood, and elsewhere. In this volume we have an account of his experience in South Africa. He seems to be quite an all-round man; he superintended mission work; in times of tribal war (of which he had considerable experience) he defended his friends, or acted as mediator between combatants; he prospected and founded new stations, and managed, during his long and frequent journeys to do some scientific work of observation. Mr. Macdonald has pronounced views, and expresses them in a very candid way, even to bluntness. He does not believe in the innate laziness of the negro; like the West-end "masher," the African is only lazy because he has got nothing to do. The "cheap missionary" theory finds no quarter at the author's hands, and he gives cogent reasons for the faith that is him. The closing chapters on native customs and habits are full of curious and interesting details; so, also, is the chapter entitled "Stray Studies of animal life."

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Child's Own Magazine. The volume of this old favourite will delight many a little one. The pictures are numerous and good, while the letterpress is a rich entertainment. (1s. Sunday School Union.)

Young England, the Sunday School Union's monthly, is a capital magazine for intelligent youth. The annual volume (5s.) is a storehouse of entertainment and instruction, judiciously combined. The reading is always bright and attractive, and well illustrated throughout.

The National Temperance Mirror. Vol. X. 2s. 6d. National Temperance Publication Depôt. As an illustrated magazine for the home circle this deserves warm commendation. The contents are in harmony with the definite object of the publication, and the pages should prove very acceptable to those in search of matter for temperance readings and recitations. There are in this volume many stories and sketches, and several dialogues.

Our Darlings, Dr. Barnardo's magazine, is an admirable treasury of pictures and stories. The monthly parts are always cheery, but the annual volume is specially charming. There are few pages without an illustration, and quite a number of pictures in colours and tints are included. Both externally and internally this year's volume surpasses any previous issue, and the entire book is fragrant with the spirit and teaching of the Gospel. (Boards, 3s.; cloth, 5s. J. E. Shaw & Co.)

The Herald of Mercy. This monthly "messenger for humble homes" seeks to perform the ministry which its title describes. The pages are bright with illustrations; their burden is Gospel counsels and appeals presented in various ways. The matter is so arranged that the half-penny monthly parts may be cut into leaves and distributed in the form of tracts. The annual volume (1s.) would be a welcome addition to many a Sunday-school and village library. There is not a purposeless page in the entire book, the one concern of the editor being to gain attention to the word of reconciliation. (Morgan & Scott.)

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

The Tract Magazine Annual (1s. 6d.) contains a complete story by Emma Leslie, and short papers on many subjects of widespread interest.

The Child's Companion (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.) is a delightful book. Engravings and letterpress are alike select, and suited for the pages of a juvenile instructor.

Our Little Dots' Annual (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d.), for younger children, is bright from beginning to end. Any little one will vote the volume a thing of beauty, and on reading find it a minister of great joy.

Friendly Greetings. The half yearly volume (2s. 6d.) should make a useful addition to village libraries. Good engravings, and short, bright articles, leading up to Gospel conclusions, are the warp and woof of the book.

The Cottager and Artisan (1s. 6d.), what with its noble pictures and large type, is sure to be a favourite with the old and such as are not expert readers. It deserves a large circulation in serial form, and increased popularity as a volume.

The Boy's Own Annual for 1890 (8s.) is a handsome volume, providing a great variety of matter such as youth delights to read. Instruction and recreation are blended with wonderful success, and it is not at all surprising that the magazine is increasingly popular. What with its several stories and many special articles, all well illustrated, the volume is a small library in itself, and would be an eminently acceptable present to thousands of thinking lads.

The Girl's Own Annual for 1890 (8s.) is a companion volume, containing contributions from many well-known pens. Sarah Tytler's articles on Tudor Queens and Princesses are exceptionally attractive; but, from running stories to answers to correspondents, the contents are just such as should compose a high-class and useful magazine for young women. The illustrations are good and numerous, and many a mother of family will be interested in and profited by pages at once so attractive and sensible.

The Sunday School Union has published New Year's addresses as follows:—To boys and girls, Show Me the Penny, by Alfred Sindall; to senior scholars, Looking Both Ways, by Rev. J. M. Gibbon; to Sunday-school teachers, Sowing and Reaping, by Rev. Henry Simon; and to parents, Bows and Arrows, by W. T. Paton.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Sir,—Rev. F. B. Meyer tells us, in his instructive exposition of John i. 2, 3, published in The Christian of October 10, that it is "especially in the Lord's Supper that the inner life becomes replenished and fulfilled with his grace and heavenly benediction." Such a statement, if made by a Ritualist or High Church clergyman, would not have surprised me; but in Mr. Meyer's lips it fills me with amazement.

What is his authority for doctrine of this kind? If it be true, it is passing strange that in only one out of the twenty-one Epistles of the New Testament, is there any reference to the Lord's Supper. Would inspired Apostles have omitted to insist upon the "special" excellence of the Communion as a means of grace and heavenly benediction, if it really had this character?

It has been by the use of such language as that to which I call attention, that the Lord's Supper has been exalted by Romanising clergy to a position of undue and unscriptural prominence, and is now so widely regarded with superstition by multitudes.

Has Mr. Meyer's pen slipped, or is he turning High Churchward? Inquirer.

THE "LARGER HOPE."

Dear Sir,—I have just read, in your issue of Sept. 26, the letter of "A Constant Reader" on the above subject. He asks, "Is it true?" And that is just the question to have decided, not by subtle and specious argument, but by the inspired Word.

Your correspondent appears to have searched up the matter in the original tongue, and therefore should have had no difficulty in coming to a conclusion that constrains him to reply: No! it is false—it is an emanation of the deceiver, of him who 6000 years ago said to the woman, "Ye shall not surely die."

We read in Scripture of past ages, the present age, and future ages, but in that last communication from God, entitled "The Revelation of Jesus Christ," it has pleased our God to use some thirteen times a peculiar phrase touching that illimitable time termed in our tongue eternity; respecting the existence of God and his Christ, see Rev. iv. 9, 10, xv. 7, "who liveth for the ages of ages"; in the doxologies of i. 6, v. 13, vii. 12, "to Him be glory for the ages of ages"; respecting the reign of Christ, xi. 15, "He shall reign for the ages of ages"; respecting "the servants of the Lamb," xx. 5, "they shall reign for the ages of ages"; announcing the doom of the devil (the deceiver here), the antichrist and the false prophet—the trinity of hell—"tormented for the ages of ages"; respecting the doom of the worshippers of the false Christ, Rev. xiv. 11, and of apostate Christendom, xix. 2, "for the ages of ages."

We may, we must dogmatise here, unless we are prepared to let go the dogma of the eternal existence of our God. Thousands who believe not "the Gospel of God" are accepting this gospel of Satan. Is it the lie that those who receive not the love of the truth shall believe (2 Thess. ii.)? Will your correspondent join hands with those who fritter away the solemn pronouncements of God, and do the deceiver's work, leading men on to the slippery incline that leads downwards to the pit, instead of pressing them to flee from the coming wrath, and plant their feet on the eternal Rock of Ages?

The King (Jer. xxxvi.) might take his penknife, and cut out the words of judgment and burn them, but that did not change the purposes of God.

So your correspondent may cut out this phrase "the ages of ages," and insert "age-long," or any, other phrase, but will that shorten the doom of the poor deluded ones? Is there not rather the danger of his coming under the judgment of Rev. xxii. 19? We can only measure the term of the punishment of the wicked by that of the existence of God. At the same time as we rejoice in our deliverance from eternal wrath by the atonement worked out by the eternal Son, let us think of and speak of the awful doom of those who trample under foot his blood with weeping hearts, and in that spirit beseech men to be reconciled to God.

E. Heard.

"THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD."

Dear Sir—You will, I trust, not think it an intrusion if I call your attention to some very important points, with reference to the book bearing the above title, which do not appear to have been touched on in the article on the same in your publication of October 17.

On page 14 of the book referred to, the author states that "Paul begins by contrasting love with other things"; and on page 15, that "He (Paul) contrasts it with faith."

If we turn to the Scripture (1 Cor xiii. 13) the words are: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." Thus the Apostle compares charity (love, in the Revised Version) with faith and hope; but surely we all know that comparison and contrast are widely different. When we compare things, and say "great, greater, greatest," we do not put them in opposition to one another; but when we contrast them, we must of necessity put one against the other.

In no place in Scripture do we find love contrasted with faith. On the contrary, we find such words as the following:—

"Faith, which worketh by love" (Gal. v. 6).

"Love with faith" (Ephes. vi. 23).

"Whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (Rom. xiv. 23).

"Your work of faith and labour of love" (1 Thess. i. 3).

"Without faith it is impossible to please God" (Heb. xi., passim).

And in 1 Tim. i. 5 we read:—"The end of the commandment is charity (love), out of a pure heart and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."

To contrast, therefore, love with faith, as the above book most certainly does, is only to weaken faith, and be in opposition to God's Word, which always strengthens it.

Another unscriptural statement in the book under notice, and not referred to in your article, is found on page 49, where the author says of the Bible: "This book is full of prophecies. One by one they have failed, that is, having been fulfilled their work is finished; they have nothing more to do now in the world, except to feed a devout man's faith." Thus Professor Drummond disposes of prophecies, by saying, "They have failed!" But Scripture does not say so. Scripture says, "They shall fail"—an immense difference! To say "they have failed" would be to blot out the solemn words of admonition in 2 Peter i. 19, 21, where we are reminded that "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed...until the day dawn," &c. Also 2 Peter iii., passim.

And, of course, "the Book of the Revelation" would now be included in the sweeping words "have failed," if we accepted so erroneous a statement.

There are many other things in this book you have been reviewing, and which you have justly termed "unscriptural," that might be dwelt upon; but, as you say Sir Robert Phayre has written a "drastic treatment of the subject," I will not trouble you any further.—Yours very faithfully, Observer.

RUSSIAN JEWS IN PALESTINE.

Sir,—I hail with the greatest pleasure and thankfulness the interesting letter which appeared in your issue of Oct. 10 on the above subject. Few people are aware of the remarkable changes that are going on in Palestine to-day. It is my firmest conviction that the return of the Jews to the land of their fathers has actually begun to take place! I also as firmly believe that many of your readers who read this to-day will live to see the restoration completed. Events are moving very rapidly in these our days. We are living in very earnest, solemn times. Jews are returning in thousands, and every fresh outbreak of persecution in Russia or elsewhere only gives a greater impetus to this wholesale emigration.

The scenes at the port of Jaffa, so graphically described by your correspondent, I have often witnessed myself. The opportunities for mission work are indeed great. Your correspondent may not perhaps have been aware of the fact that the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews is represented there by my brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Weinberg, who are doing a very good work. Mr. Weinberg often meets the steamers, and, as he can speak several languages, is able to converse with nearly all the emigrants from whatever part of the world they may hail. He helps these poor refugees to land, gives them the necessary council and advice that they need, and sees them safely on their way to Jerusalem. And the great blessing attending this work is manifest from the fact that many of those who first heard the Gospel on embarking at Jaffa have ultimately been led to the Saviour in Jerusalem or other parts of the country. Mr. Weinberg, I know, would like to visit every steamer. But he has other work to do in the town itself, with its eight or ten thousand Jews, and several important Jewish colonies in the neighbourhood, besides important work in our Bible Depôt in the heart of the town, where Bibles and Testaments, in Hebrew and other languages, are sold or given away. To visit these steamers would certainly occupy a man's whole time, for the trade and commerce have so greatly increased that steamers call now from almost every nation of importance.

Jerusalem is shaking herself from the dust! I remember the time when one steamer called at Jaffa about once a fortnight, in winter less frequently, while now steamers call almost daily. I have seen as many as six large steamers anchored at once, besides a host of sailing vessels and fishing craft. There is enough work to occupy a man's whole time. I know several young converts who are already in the Holy Land, zealous, faithful, and earnest Christians, with a good knowledge of six or seven languages. They are the converts of the Jerusalem Mission. Anyone of these would do for this work. We do want more workers in the Holy Land. Every station is undermanned. Jerusalem has 33,000 Jews to-day; ten years ago about 12,000! Large colonies have sprung up in every part of the country that had no existence ten years ago. I am thankful to say that the London Jews' Society are extending their work. New and larger schools are to be built, also a new hospital. A lady leaves this autumn for the Holy City, who has volunteered her services to work amongst women. May God stir up others to offer themselves. There should be a large increase of labourers everywhere.

There are many of God's children in this country who are making the needs of the Palestine Mission a subject of special prayer. Probably many of your readers are among them. May I ask all to pray that God may send forth more labourers, and give the Committee of the London Jews' Society the means of sending those who shall be ready to go.—Yours faithfully, Samuel Schor.

"A VILLAGE EFFORT."

Dear Sir,—In your last week's issue under this heading is described the work of two ladies (whose names are there given) who, whilst happy in doing the work described, are far from happy in seeing it brought forward in this way. The writer of the account in question no doubt meant well and was animated by the best intentions, but it is distressing to the ladies mentioned, first of all to see prominence given to their names and work (without any knowledge or authorisation on their part), and secondly, to have anything said or written which should seem (though only by inference) to undervalue or ignore the Christian work and effort of those in the parish who have been doing their best for years before these ladies went there. They have accordingly asked me to write and let their feelings be known; as, however anxious your correspondent may have been to set forth an example to others, they feel it should scarcely have been done at the prejudice of their own position and the work generally, as the account in question is calculated to raise feelings in the hearts of other workers in the place which may not conduce to a continuance of that harmony and happy co-operation in the parish which, above all things, is so desirable.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, William Sharp.

South Nutfield, Surrey.

REV. J. D. KILBURN, late of St. Petersburg, has undertaken for a time the pastorate of the Reformed English Church in Hamburg.

SPAIN.—Madame Rodriguez writes from Calle Pedro 3, Figueras:—"The new hall and schools are to be opened (D.V.) on Thursday, 30th. Converts will be present from Castillon, Bisbal, San Pedro Pescador, Vilabertran, Rosas, and elsewhere. We expect large numbers at the service, and hope to give away 1000 New Testaments to the people on leaving. Thus, through the Word preached and written, much precious seed will be scattered to be surely found after many days. Thankful as we are for what the Lord has sent, and what we hope, in a few months, to receive, we would not have lost the many sweet lessons of faith and tokens of God's loving care which, in other circumstances, we could never have learned and experienced. You will, I know, rejoice with us in all God's goodness to us and the Mission."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 26.—Proverbs XX.

1. SCRIPTURE examples of this degrading evil abound. Not only the ungodly (1 Kings xvi. 9, xx. 16), but the professed people of God have been overcome (Gen. ix. 21; Isa. xxviii. 1, 7, 8). There is still need for the warning (Luke xxi. 34; Eph. v. 18).

2. True of the Great King (Ps. xc. 11). Beware of provoking Him by unbelief (1 John v. 10).

4. Note his neglect; his excuse for it (cold); the real reason (sluggard); and the inevitable result (shall beg, &c.). Compare i. 24-28; Luke xiii. 24-29).

6. Warning against ostentatious righteousness (Matt. vi. 1; Luke xviii. 11, 12), and against unfaithfulness. In avoiding one evil we may fall into the other. The grace of God makes fidelity possible (Ps. xli. 11, 12).

8. Yield your heart to be the throne of this King; let Him judge and scatter the evil which is too strong for you (26). To enthrone Jesus is the way to overcome sin (Micah vii. 19).

9. Not the perfect man (Job i. 1; ix. 30, 31); nor the man who walks in the light in the enjoyment of unbroken fellowship (1 John i. 7, 8). Claim deliverance from the power of sin (1 John ii. 1), but not from its presence.

14. "Business is business" is often pleaded as excuse for dishonesty in order to make a good bargain. For the man of God buying as well as selling (10) must be regulated by Christian principle.

17. Either sin, which, giving pleasure for a season, leaves only remorse at the end; or anything acquired by deceitful means. Illgotten gains ultimately prove a curse. Contrast the bread of life (John vi. 35).

25. Believe this declaration (Jer. x. 23; Ps. ciii. 19; Eph. i. 21, 22); then consent to present mystery. How can it be otherwise if our lives are his work? See Eccles. iii. 11; John xiii. 7. Not in understanding our way, but in trusting our Guide we find rest.

27. Conscience is God's representative in man. Through this He gives light by his Word and his Spirit, searching the secrets of the life (John iii. 21).

30. Welcome the severest chastisement that produces such a result (Heb. xii. 10; 1 Cor. xi. 32).

MONDAY, OCTOBER 27.—Proverbs XXI.

1. "The allusion is to channels made for the distribution of waters according to the will, for irrigation of gardens and fields." Without destroying their freedom of action, God thus overrules the hearts of kings (Neh. i. 11, ii. 4, 5).

3. Ceremonialism is easier than practical godliness (Matt. xxiii. 23). Yet do not undervalue sacrifice. God does not; for by its means (Heb. ix. 26) He puts away sin, and makes a life of obedience possible to us.

5. Haste is here opposed to diligence. "Patient perseverance in well-doing" (Rom. ii. 7) is better than impulsive rashness. Run the Christian race, not with speed, but "with patience" (Heb. xii. 1).

8. The natural, in contrast with the spiritual man. The evidence of a pure heart is an upright life. A man need not advertise the fact that he has "a clean heart." His "works" must prove it.

11. The scorner is beyond receiving correction himself, but his punishment warns, and therefore makes wise the simple (Luke xiii. 3, 5). For the wise there is, not punishment, but instruction—perhaps by the rod (Ps. xciv. 12, cxix. 71).

13. That which a man is to the poor, God is to him (Luke vi. 38). See 1 John iii. 17 and Luke xvi. 21, 24, 25.

15. All the joy of the righteous is not future. To do right is present bliss; while iniquity is "labour" now, and destruction in the end.

16. A man chooses his own way, his own company, and his own eternal abode (Matt. vii. 13, 14).

18. As Egypt was a ransom for Israel (Is. xliii. 3; compare Exod. xii. 29-36, xiv. 30).

21. Holiness must always be the pursuit of the saint (Heb. xii. 14; Phil. iii. 12-14). The finding is sure, and how infinitely valuable (John xii. 26; Rom. ii. 7).

29. There is a hardening of the face in a right way (Is. l. 7; Ezek. iii. 8, 9). Woe to the man who does this against God (Job ix. 4)!

30, 31. There has been much counsel against the Lord; but how vain it has ever been! See 1 Cor. iii. 19. Even the apparent successes of evil counsellors only fulfil the purpose of God (Acts iv. 25-28).

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28.—Proverbs XXII.

1. The godly man cannot afford to despise reputation. Augustine advises every man to be careful first for his conscience and next for his credit. Some Christians suffer reproach, not for their righteousness but for their imprudence (Col. iv. 5; Phil. ii. 15).

3. This is repeated (xxvii. 12). The Gospel message tells of a coming evil and provides a sure Hiding-place (Isa. xxxii. 2). In relation to that Gospel all men are "prudent" or "simple." Which are you?

5. The path of the upright escapes the painfulness (thorns) and the dangers (snares) that attend the froward (1 John v. 18; Pro. iv. 26).

6. Evidently the future of the child depends upon its training. Begin as Hannah did with Samuel (1 Sam. i. 28) by dedication. Recognise the child's natural tendency to evil (15; Ps. li. 5). Regard yourselves as entrusted with the work of training it for God (Exod. ii. 9), and let not the Sunday-school be trusted to do your work (Gen. xviii. 19; Deut. vi. 4-7). Believe in the possibility of the conversion of children, and expect it (Matt. xviii. 6). If your faith is tried, do not lose hope (Eccles. xi. 1). Timothy, though instructed in infancy, was converted as an adult (2 Tim. iii. 15; 1 Tim. i. 2).

8. Every seedtime leads to a harvest, and the nature and quantity of the seed sown determines what the harvest shall be (Gal. vi. 7, 8). "Calamity" (R.V.) is the harvest of which "iniquity" is the seed.

11. Note again the connection between purity of heart and gracious speech (Matt. xii. 33, 34). The King becomes the Friend, familiar and intimate, of the man who loves this.

13. Another reproof for the slothful man (xxvi. 13), who is diligent in nothing but in the invention of difficulties. Most of our difficulties in the Christian life are subjective. A vigorous faith would remove them all (Mark xi. 23).

17-21. This is one connected exhortation. (1) It describes the Gospel message.—"Wise" (17); containing "excellent counsel and knowledge" (20); dealing with unquestionable verities (21); and spoken personally to each one (19). Such is the Gospel. It is "the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. ii. 7); comes from the Counsellor (Isa. ix. 6); and speaks only the truth (John xiv. 6). (2) It prescribes our duty.—Attend (17); know (21); retain (18); trust (19). This is the Gospel way of salvation. (3) It declares rich blessing.—"Pleasant" (18; Jer. xv. 16); fearless testimony (21; 1 Peter iii. 15); and gracious speech (18; Ps. xlv. 1).

28. This means more than recognise the rights of others (Deut. xix. 14). Truth has its landmarks which we may not remove. Distinguish, however, between those which the Word of God has set up, and others which men have made. Neither tradition, nor the teaching of the Fathers, nor "the Church," has any authority to formulate doctrines or teach ceremonies not contained in the Word of God.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29.—Proverbs XXIII.

1-3. The laws of heaven are intended to regulate all our conduct on earth. Who would have expected to find such a piece of counsel as this? Yet even as the ruler's guest you are God's witness. Let not self-indulgence destroy the effectiveness of your testimony (Rom. xiv. 21). But the injury may be to ourselves, for the indulgence of the body does not conduce to the life of the spirit. "If I see any dish to tempt my palate, I fear a serpent in that apple, and would please myself in a wilful denial."—Bishop Hall. See 1 Cor. ix. 27; 2 Peter i. 5, 6.

6-8. There is danger in the dainty meats of those whose heart is evil toward us (Ps. cxli. 4). Hospitality without love ministers no real pleasure (xv. 17). There is another feast of which you may partake abundantly (ix. 2, 3). Have you accepted that invitation?

15, 16. Godly children are their parents' joy (3 John 4). A good man prayed: "Lord, let thy blessing so accompany my endeavour that all my sons may be Benaiahs (the Lord's building), then will they be all Abners (their father's delight); and that all my daughters may be Bethiahs (the Lord's daughters), then will they be all Abigails (their father's joy)." See 24, 25.

19, 22. Note how affectionately earnest the parental counsel becomes. Dangers are in view (20, 27, 28), of such a character that to fall into them is ruin for time and eternity. Young men, be as earnest in seeking deliverance.

29-35. One vice is associated with another. There could not be a more graphic picture of drunkenness than this. Note what causes all these evils (30). What then is the remedy? Tarrying not so long? Taking moderately? Not so; but "Look not" (31). No total abstinence pledge could be stronger than this.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30.—Proverbs XXIV.

1, 2. See also 19, 20. The prosperity of the wicked has often provoked envy. Yet there is no just reason for it. Their character (2) and their end (20; Ps. lxxiii. 17-20) should warn us. Besides which, the spirit of envy does incalculable injury to ourselves. It "curses our blessing, withers our graces, cankers our peace, clouds our confidence, and stains our Christian profession."

5. Or, as Bacon expresses it, "Knowledge is power." Proof of this is found in the manifold inventions by which one man can now do the work of a hundred. In the spiritual realm this is also true. To increase in the knowledge of God is the way to increased strength (Dan. xi. 32).

8, 9. Not only in the act, but in "the thought," the device of foolishness, there is sin. Every act, good or bad, is but the expression of a previous thought. Trust Him who can make every thought to be subject to Himself (2 Cor. x. 5).

10. Be prepared for "the day of adversity." In some form every life meets it. To "faint" is not only our calamity and grief, but our sin (Heb. xii. 3). Strength all-sufficient is provided, and needs only to be appropriated by us (Isa. xl. 28, 29).

11, 12. See (1) Our present opportunities.—Men are around us to-day in just this terrible condition (John iii. 36). Our duty is to "deliver" them (James v. 19, 20; Jude 23). (2) Our excuse for neglect.—"Our lack of charity appears in our backwardness to do our duty, and our abundance of self-love in our readiness to frame excuses." Ignorance is no justifiable excuse where knowledge was possible to us (Job xxix. 11-16). (3) Our judgment (12; Matt. xxv. 42-44).—Remember that the Lord is not unrighteous to forget any service rendered (Heb. vi. 10). Be watchful to discover and prompt to use present opportunities (Heb. xiii. 17).

13, 14. Honey was esteemed not only for its flavour, but as a valuable food, and thus became a type of the wisdom of God communicated through his Word (xvi. 24; Ps. xix. 10).

15, 16. The righteous as well as the wicked may fall; but the one shall rise again (Micah vii. 8; Ps. xxxvii. 24), the other falls into irreparable mischief. Yet let the righteous remember the power and the promise of their Great Deliverer (Jude 24, 25).

21, 22. Note the connection between godliness and loyalty (Rom. xiii. 1-7).

23-26. Yet note that, if loyalty is expected from the people, righteousness must be shown by the rulers.

30-34.—Let the slothful man see in this neglected field a picture of his neglected soul. Contrast Jer. xxxi. 12. See vi. 6-11.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31.—Proverbs XXV.

With this chapter another division of this book commences. Note how God remembers both the author and the copyists of these proverbs. The one work required greater gift than the other; yet both forms of service are honoured with equal mention. No true work for God is overlooked.

2, 3. That which men need to know is clearly revealed; but there is much concerning the purposes, and works, and ways of God which is concealed from us yet. And as the concealment is for his glory, so is it for our benefit (Job xi. 7; xxvi. 16; Ps. lxxvii. 19). "As there is a foolish wisdom, so there is a wise ignorance....It is happy for me that God makes me of his court, though not of his council. O Lord! let me be blessed with the knowledge of what Thou hast revealed. Let me content myself to adore thy Divine wisdom in what Thou hast not revealed."—Bishop Hall. See Deut. xxix. 29.

11, 12. Referring to the baskets of silver network in which the delicious fruits were served. A word of reproof has to be wisely chosen; but how excellent it is when spoken to an obedient ear. See Ps. cxli. 5.

13. In the time of harvest it was customary to cool wines with snow. Faithful messengers are thus refreshing to their masters (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16).

14. Such are false prophets (Jude 12; 2 Cor. xi. 13-18). "Profess not the knowledge that thou hast not."

16, 27. This seems to contradict xxiv. 13. But honey here represents the praise of men. "He who loves praise loves temptation" (Phil. ii. 3).

19. If, therefore, you would not add to your trouble the pain of toothache, and of a disjointed foot, trust only the Friend that loveth at all times (Ps. xlvi. 1; Heb. xiii. 5). Of mistaken confidence there are many illustrations (Ps. lv. 12-14; Isa. xxx. 1-5; xxxvi. 6).

23. Repulse the backbiter with an angry countenance. He can only do his mischievous work while there is an ear to listen to him. The R.V. gives a different rendering.

25. What the streams are to the panting hart (Ps. xlii. 1), what the well of water was to Hagar and Ishmael (Gen. xxi. 16-19), such is the "good news" of the Gospel to those afar off (Rom. x. 14, 15).

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1.—Proverbs XXVI.

2. Men have no more power to determine where the birds shall alight than to tell on whom the curse shall fall. Balaam could not curse whom God had blessed (Neh. xiii. 2). Shimei's causeless curse never fell on David (2 Sam. xvi. 5). Fear not men's curses (Ps. cix. 28); but there is a curse to be feared. Are you secure from that (Gal. iii. 10, 13)?

4, 5. There is only seeming contradiction here. A wise man will distinguish between answering a fool so as to become a fool himself, and answering so as to expose to the fool his own folly. Study the example of Jesus, who knew when to speak and when to be silent (Eccles. iii. 7; Matt. xxi. 23-27; xxii. 46).

13-16. Here are many characteristics of the sluggard. (1) He is ever imagining difficulties (13). He sees lions where there are none (xxii. 13). "He who has no mind to labour, never wants pretences for idleness." (2) His only real difficulty is his own indolence (14). If he would but overcome this, the lions would cease to exist. He would rather starve than put forth any exertion (15). And yet (3) he is full of self-conceit (16). "Seven men"=perfection. He is wiser than them all! See 12.

18, 19. "A lie in jest does mischief in earnest." See 2 Pet. ii. 13.

20-22. "The tongue is a fire" (James iii. 6), and provides the fuel for the fire it kindles. But for the whisperer and the contentious man the fire of strife would cease. This is a sin which God severely condemns (Ps. l. 20-22; lii. 1-5).

23-27. Lips may speak fervent words of affection while the heart cherishes only hatred. Remember Absalom (2 Sam. xv. 1-9), and Judas (Luke xxii. 47, 48). Yet the flatterer—the dissembler proves in the end to be his own enemy (27). Absalom and Judas are both terrible examples of this.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.—The "International Round Table Second Advent Conference," to consider the Signs of the Times in relation to the Speedy Coming of Christ, will commence the last week of this month, at the Town Hall, Westminster. The conveners desire to gather together Biblical students able to consider Daniel and Revelation, and then retire, having successfully organised the Conferences, to warn the world. At an early period a large meeting for the public will be announced, and list of speakers given, when the conclusions of the Conferences will be printed.

THE BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION, which now has 400 branches and numbers 30,000 members, held its Congress in Sunderland last week. A large public meeting in the Victoria Hall was presided over by Archdeacon Watson. Lady Somerset, referring to the wide awakening to the question, said that, in all great moral movements, it is not majorities which will prevail, but men with convictions as distinguished from men who have only theories. Speaking of "tied" houses, she observed that there are in one Welsh valley 365 houses owned by one brewer. At a morning conference, Miss Emily Pearce (Maidenhead) suggested the formation of a Temperance Board for the United Kingdom, and the question was referred to the consideration of the National Executive. Doubtless this organisation is doing much good in its corporate capacity; but we hope the value of individual effort will be increasingly recognised in all temperance work. Nothing is more likely to stem the ravages of drink than the reclamation of tippling mothers, whose little ones are being prepared not only to become drunkards, but, perhaps, the parents of children predisposed to intemperance.

Sunday Afternoon, November 2.

JESUS ACCUSED.—LUKE xxii. 54-71.

GOLDEN TEXT: ISA. liii. 5.

JESUS appears to have been subject to three examinations before the Jewish rulers. The first was before Annas, the father-in-law of Caiaphas, the high priest (John xviii. 12-24). This was probably very brief, and was followed by a more formal trial before the Sanhedrim, related particularly by Matthew (xxvi.), and Mark (xiv.), and presided over by Caiaphas. This was held before daybreak, and was therefore illegal. Hence the necessity of a third Council meeting "as soon as it was day" (Luke xxii. 66), to confirm the sentence already passed. To this Matthew (xxvii. 1, 2) and Mark (xv. 1) refer. We may measure the bitterness of the rulers' hatred to Jesus by their vigilance and activity in seeking his death.

It was probably during the first and second of these examinations that Peter's threefold denial took place. The differences in the four Gospels are easily explained if we remember that each denial was not merely one sentence addressed to one accuser. Combine all the narratives in order to see how many charges were made each time, and how variously and repeatedly Peter uttered his denial. The first occurred by the fire, and was called forth by the maid—probably the portress who had admitted Peter and John (see John xviii. 15-17). The second was in the porch, whither, perhaps, Peter had gone to hide his confusion after the first denial (Matthew and Mark). The third took place later (59), and was called forth by his Galilean dialect, and by the fact of his being recognised by a kinsman of Malchus (John xviii. 26). Mark only relates the two cock crowings, while only Luke tells of the Saviour's look (61).

The scene of the denial was the court of the High Priest's palace (55). A covered gateway led from without into the court, which was the centre of an oriental house, out of which the other apartments opened. Both Annas and Caiaphas seem to have had apartments in the same building, so that being sent from the one to the other (John xviii. 24) meant only crossing this court. These inner apartments were raised a few feet above the court, so that the trial of Jesus would be in full view of Peter. This makes his denial appear all the sadder. The denial and oaths of Peter were more painful to Jesus than the mockery and buffeting of his enemies.

How came Peter to sin thus grievously? There must have been steps leading down to this. We can easily trace some of them. (1) Self-confidence (33; comp. Matt. xxvi. 31-35; 1 Cor. x. 12). His own fancied security led to (2) neglect (40, 46). Jesus was so mindful of the danger that He both watched and prayed. Peter was so confident that he neglected both (Matt. xxvi. 40). (3) Following afar off (54).—So far interested in Jesus as to want to see the end, but not so loyal as to be willing to share his reproach. Contrast Caleb (Num. xiv. 24) and the Psalmist (Ps. lxiii. 8). Half-hearted following is the result of shame, and is therefore the beginning of denial. (4) Going needlessly into bad company (55).—Peter endeavoured to appear among the enemies of Christ as one of themselves. His act denies Him before he utters a word. Whenever we try to hide the fact that we are his in order to escape suffering with Him, we are repeating Peter's sin. Beware of the steps that lead down to gross sin. Each one makes the next not only possible but likely.

The repentance of Peter should encourage us as his fall warns us. The third denial was hardly uttered when the cock crew (60). What an insignificant incident to be connected with such a result! The fact that our Lord foretold it suggests that God overrules all those apparent trifles which are often the means of awakening the memory to truths long forgotten. "The look" (61) met Peter as he turned toward the Saviour again. It not only recalled the neglected warnings, and administered gentle reproof, it also told of love grieved but not quenched, and of readiness to forgive. It was this which broke Peter's heart, and made him weep bitterly (62). Satan has sifted, but the Lord's prayer has prevailed (31, 32). Learn the value of an Intercessor that does not fail us even when we fall.

The mockery of Jesus (63-65) took place in the interval before his final condemnation by the Sanhedrim. It is an awful revelation, on the one hand, of the awful wickedness of man, and, on the other, of the condescending love and meekness of Jesus.

At his last appearance before the Council (6-671) Jesus Himself seems to precipitate matters. He knows that He is to have no proper trial, that the verdict is already decided upon, so refuses to answer Caiaphas as a judge (67, 68). Why should He? The aim is not to hear evidence, but to convict with or without it. So Jesus repeats his solemn witness (69; compare Matt. xxvi. 64). It is a claim to equality with God (Heb. i. 3). His seeming defeat has not shut out from his view the triumph awaiting Him. The question (70) is necessary, in order to secure a charge of blasphemy; and our Lord fearlessly avows Himself Divine. "Ye say that I am"=it is true. He goes to death with this bold avowal. Was it false? Then his enemies were right in condemning Him. Was it a mistaken though honest judgment of Himself? Then He is unworthy of confidence. Was it true? Then his enemies, and all who still deny his Divinity, are guilty of the blasphemy for which they condemned Him.

LESSONS.

Warning from Peter's fall. We may not be saying Peter's words, but are we on any of those steps leading down to his sin? We do not back-leap, we back-slide—slowly, almost imperceptibly.

Encouragement from Peter's repentance. Among elder scholars there are some who need to be reminded that Jesus loves them even though they have fallen. Get them to meet his loving look.

Example from Christ's meek submission to insult. Such victories over our own spirit are the noblest we can win.

Hatred to the sin which rendered such suffering necessary. For our sin He endured this; is it nothing to us?

Hope (or dread?) in meeting Him again. His word (69) will be fulfilled. How will you meet Him then?

MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL.

AN OPEN DOOR.

REV. R. GRIMSTON, chaplain on the Manchester Ship Canal, writes:—"We have a new Hut Settlement, which has been suddenly built to meet the requirements of the extraordinary push of work now in progress. As this place was not contemplated in the original plan, there are no mission arrangements, and a thousand people will be lodging there for the next three months.

"I have in vain tried to secure the services of a really able missionary. I therefore venture to appeal to your readers. Would some gentleman, whose recommendation would be a guarantee of the man's fitness, kindly mention to me a cheerful, earnest, Christlike man, used to speaking at mission services, and if possible musical? It is a grand opening for work for God, and one which will quickly be past. The men gladly listen to the Gospel, but Satan is strong. A gentleman who could give his services as a volunteer, and who is familiar with mission work, would find this a a splendid sphere of usefulness."

Mr. Grimston's address is Holly Bank, Latchford, Warrington.

WALTON-ON-THE-NAZE.—Miss Agnes Moore, of the Christian Police Association, has opened a Temperance Institute here for young men, fishers, and lads. The two reading-rooms are filled during the evening hours. It has been found, however, that more books are required. A clock is also needed. The increasing attendance has necessitated the opening of the lecture-room. Many have given in their names for a night-school Fifty adults and lads have signed the pledge.

A GREAT NEED IN THE EAST.—Miss M. G. Esser writes to us from Rockfield, Lansdowne-road, East Croydon:—"It has come to my knowledge that there is not a single Protestant young ladies' school, either in Hong Kong or Singapore. Hundreds of English girls are sent to the convent schools, which are supposed to be good; but the girls are kept in the grossest ignorance with regard to the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. It seems unreasonable that there should be so many schools for the natives, and some for the Eurasian girls, and that the souls of English girls should be left to perish. Surely some ladies could be found willing to supply the need, especially as in England there are already too many such schools."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Randall Davidson, dean of Windsor, has been appointed to succeed Dr. Thorold in the bishopric of Rochester.

Archdeacon Farrar has been appointed to the chaplaincy of the House of Commons, rendered vacant by the death of Rev. Henry White.

Rev. W. Allan, vicar of St. James's, Bermondsey, is anxious to erect a new mission building for the use of the riverside population, the present room proving inadequate for the requirements of the work. He has been offered a site, and the owners have also contributed £150 towards the erection of mission premises.

A new mission-hall was opened in the parish of St. Jude's (Moorfields), Sheffield, on Monday, last week, by Archdeacon Blakeney. The Archdeacon said that without such a building he could not understand how a parish could be successful. The Church's great work to-day was to be done in the homes of the people, in class-rooms, and in mission-halls. It was all very well to collect people to hear a grand service or a good sermon, but he thought the best work was done in preparing the people for that service.

Rev. Dr. Whittemore preached the annual Lion sermon on Thursday evening, last week, at the church of St. Katherine Cree, Leadenhall-street E.C., selecting as his text: "He went down also and slew a lion in the midst of a pit in the time of snow." Dr. Whittemore said that was the 243rd annual Lion sermon which had been preached within the walls of that old church, having been founded by Sir John Gare to commemorate his deliverance from an approaching lion when in a desert of Arabia. Sir John Gare was afterwards Lord Mayor of London.

Rev. L. Wathen Wigg, rector of Anstey, has published an account of the "School of Religion in the parish of Anstey, Leicester, its Work, and How it Does it." Mr. Wigg explains that his School of Religion seeks to combine the order, discipline, and method of the day-school, and the earnestness and religious purpose of the Sunday-school. He offers a warm and well-lighted room, with the walls made bright by good coloured pictures, absolute regularity, and strict discipline. The school is held once a week in the evening. There are 145 pupils out of a population of 1600.

A new and useful work has been opened in Islington. The first of a series of Sunday evening evangelistic services, intended for those who are not habitual attendants at public worship, was held in the Parkhurst Hall, Upper Holloway, on Sunday week. This effort is in connection with the evangelistic committee of the Bishop of Bedford's Fund, and is under the direction of the Incumbents of the Deanery of Islington, whose parishes border on the great thoroughfare running from the "Angel" to the foot of Highgate-hill. A number of voluntary lay-workers have been enlisted. The opening service was conducted by Rev. W. H. Barlow, vicar of Islington. Rev. E. A. Stuart preached on Sunday last.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A site has been secured and plans prepared for the erection of a Presbyterian church at Tooting, S.W.

At the People's Hall, Deptford—where a mission is carried on in connection with Rev. Hugh M'Intosh's congregation at Brockley—the winter's work has been entered upon with spirit. Two bands have been formed from among the workers—a string band for the inside, and a drum and fife band for the streets.

A sub-committee of the London Presbytery, appointed to consider an application from Rev. Theodore Meyer, superintendent of the Jewish Mission in East London, will report to the committee that, owing to advancing years, Mr. Meyer should be furnished with an additional assistant, thus relieving the venerable superintendent of a portion of his duties. Mr. Meyer has been connected with the Jewish Mission for many years. He was Hebrew tutor for eight years in New College, Edinburgh, and while in that city founded the German congregation.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A day of prayer for missions has been fixed for November 6, at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate.

After four years of devoted labour, as leader in the evangelistic work of Iowa Yearly Meeting, John Henry Douglas has just retired, and Isom R. Wooton has become superintendent in his place.

The most marked and blessed feature of Western Yearly Meeting, just over, was the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. From the very first He was present in power. Some of those Pentecostal seasons will never be forgotten by many.

The Conference of First-day School Teachers, held in Birmingham on the 13th, 14th, and 15th inst., was a remarkable success. The papers read and the discussions that followed were of a high order, and the tone of the Conference was most hopeful and encouraging. Among those who took a prominent part were William White and Richard Barrow, ex-Mayors of the city, Joseph Rowntree, M.P., Joseph Storrs Fry, Henry B. Priestman, Watson Grace, Joseph B. Braithwaite, jun., and Joseph Allen Baker. The average attendance was perhaps 500 to 600, and the Conference closed with a conversazione given by the Mayor. It is sixteen years since a similar gathering was held in Darlington, but it is much to be desired that the next may be much sooner. John T. Dorland, jun., of Canada, was also present, and took an active and interesting part. He is likely to settle in England for some years, in order to carry out his concern for the Young of London Yearly Meeting.

BAPTIST.

A mission-room has been opened at Biggin-hill in connection with the church at Thornton-heath (Rev. J. W. Harrald, pastor).

The Baptist missionaries of Japan have joined in an appeal to the churches in the United States for an immediate re-inforcement of twenty-three men.

A new Baptist chapel has been opened at Kirkby Stephen. Mr. Spurgeon subscribed a substantial sum for the building, which will form the centre of a group of Baptist churches in Westmoreland.

At the anuual meeting of the Young Men's Mission, Canning-street, Sheffield, it was stated that the church membership is now 31, with 14 teachers and 720 scholars in the schools. A Christian Endeavour Society and a Band of Hope have recently been formed.

The report read at the eighteenth anniversary of Mr. Benson's honorary pastorate of Belle Isle Mission Chapel, Brewery-road, N., showed that there are now 387 church members. In the schools there are 1260 scholars, with seventy officers and teachers.

The "Baptist" and "Free" Churches at Princes Risborough have been united under the pastorate of Rev. W. Coombs, who has completed nine years' ministry. The church membership, which stood at 70 at the commencement of his pastorate, now numbers 150.

The quarterly meeting of the London Baptist Association was held at Ladbroke-grove Chapel, Notting-hill, on Tuesday last week. At the morning session a paper was read by Rev. D. Llewellyn on "Christ's Estimate and Use of Old Testament Scripture." In the afternoon Dr. Clifford spoke on the "Spiritual Leadership of Our Churches." At seven o'clock a conference took place, the subject being, "How to Guide Young Christians in Relation to Amusements."

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, in addition to £120,000 for a new Baptist University at Chicago, has now given £200,000 of which £20,000 is an endowment for the divinity school, £20,000 for buildings suitable for this school, and the remainder for an endowment for post-graduate courses. One condition is that the theological seminary leave Morgan Park, turning its property there to the University for a preparatory school. The Board of Trustees have accepted the conditions, and offered the presidency of the college to Professor W. R. Harper, D.D., of Yale University, who has been granted six months in which to consider the matter.

Resignation.—Rev. W. Stokes, the church at Pinner, Middlesex.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. T. Perry, of Lordship-lane Church, Dulwich, to King's Lynn.—Rev. David Bruce, late of Forres, to Great Shelford, Cambs.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. R. F. Horton is devoting his Sunday evenings at Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead, to a series of discourses on the Epistle to the Galatians, which furnish the basis of a vigorous exposition and defence of Free Church principles.

Rev. William F. Clarkson, of Birmingham, has accepted the office of secretary of the Congregational Church Aid and Home Missionary Society, in succession to Rev. Andrew Mearns, resigned. Mr. Clarkson's removal from the Midlands is much regretted. He enters on his new duties with the New Year.

Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, has always laid great emphasis on the duties and privileges of the church meeting. He is not satisfied with the one night a week usually set apart to them. He is this winter devoting his week evening service, week after week, to gatherings of church members for the cultivation of church life. A similar series was held last winter.

At the close of the ordinary evening service on Sunday week, at Markham-square Church, Chelsea (Rev. J. Lawson Forster, pastor), a meeting was held in the large schoolroom for the poor and non-church-going people of the neighbourhood. The singing was led by a large choir and a number of stringed and wind instruments, and short Gospel addresses were given. The meeting, which it is proposed to continue every Sunday evening through the winter, was largely attended by the class for whom it was instituted.

During the seven years' pastorate of Rev. Edwin Simon at Percy Chapel, Bath, a large number of persons, many of whom are young men and women, have been received into the church. These were invited, together with the older members, to a "service of reconsecration" on Sunday week. At this Communion Service the whole of the lower part of the chapel was crowded. Brief addresses were given by deacons of the church on "Self-examination as a Condition of Self-consecration," "What Difference has Christ Made to Me?" and "The Meaning and Uses of the Lord's Supper."

Rev. H. Storer Toms has completed twenty years of ministerial work at Enfield. At a recent meeting Mr. Toms referred to the unity of spirit which prevailed in the church. He had never witnessed an unhappy church meeting; and he believed it was owing to their peace and unity that the Holy Spirit had blessed them. The membership had increased from 100 to over 300; while the attendance at the Sunday-school had risen to nearly 700. The surrounding population had also greatly increased. He thanked God he had been enabled to preach the faith once delivered to the saints. He had not lost his faith in the Gospel. Jesus Christ and Him crucified had always been his message; the scope of the glorious Gospel was larger than he once thought it was, but the core remained the same.

At three of the recent County Association meetings—Durham and Northumberland, Staffordshire, and East Devon—there were discussions on the promotion of the spiritual life.

Resignations.—Rev. W. T. Poole, the pastorate at Harleston.—Rev. J. P. Kingsland, the English Church, Upper Bangor.—Rev. Wallace Duthie, Castle-street Congregational Church, Swansea.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. G. C. Postans, of Handsworth, to Preston-park Church, Brighton.—Mr. G. Currie Martin, B.D., of New College, London, to the Church at Nairn, N.B.

SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth conducted three services in memory of his wife at Sheffield on Sunday last. There were crowded congregations at each. He took his late wife as a bride there thirty-four years ago.

The handsome new barracks situated in a prominent position at Wood Green, N., were opened on Sunday last. The building seats about 1,000.

The "Cavalry Fort," or van department of the Salvation Army, appears to be doing good work. The returns for four months show 604 "prisoners," about 16,000 visits, 919 open-air meetings, and a large aggregate attendance. Some inroads have been made upon the lethargy and ignorance of villagers.

METHODIST.

The appointment of a Connexional Temperance Secretary, which next year takes effect, is likely very greatly to organise and extend this branch of work in the Wesleyan Church. The last Sunday in next month is to be specially observed in all Wesleyan Methodist places of worship as a day when references will be made to the appalling extent and dire results of intemperance in Great Britain. The adult temperance societies of the Connexion show steady increase, while the continuous growth of the Bands of Hope is evidenced by the latest returns, which show upwards of 3600 bands, with nearly 400,000 enrolled members.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A very encouraging report was presented to the second annual meeting of the Congregational Orphan Society, held last week in Belfast.

The Council of the Evangelical Alliance has published a resolution in support of the ministers who hold the open-air Protestant services in Arklow.

The Salvation Army have permanently engaged a large hall in Kingstown, and are working vigorously in the face of considerable opposition in certain districts.

A young Jew was publicly baptized on Sunday week in the First Presbyterian Church, Ballymoney, co. Antrim. Such an event is very unusual in Ireland, and it created considerable attention.

The income for the past year of the Wesleyan Methodist Home Missions in Ireland was £12,314. This is a very valuable Fund, as without its aid many of the smaller stations could not be maintained.

A interesting meeting was held on Thursday week, in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Belfast, to bid farewell to Rev. J. C. Blair, who is going to India as a missionary in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church.

The Belfast Town Mission is carrying on its work diligently. Although drunkenness and prevailing ungodliness are great obstacles to success, yet the missionaries have met during the past months much to cheer and encourage them.

A forward step was taken last February by the Presbyterian Church in employing Mr. Samuel Montgomery as an evangelist, and now a further development is likely to take place in the same direction, as a friend has offered a sum of £500 if a minister be wholly set apart to do evangelistic work through the various congregations of the Assembly.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. W. C. Russel, minister of Wolflee Free Church, near Hawick.—Rev. Robert Bone, a young Wesleyan missionary in China.—Rev. Dr. Peter Mackenzie, parish minister of Ferintosh (Urquhart), Ross-shire.—Rev. David Wilby, Congregational pastor, for eleven years at New Shildon.—Rev. Charles Haller, Wesleyan minister, of Burley-in-Wharfedale.—Mr. David Sinclair, late Principal of the Church of Scotland College, Madras, India.

MR. AND MRS. H. M. STANLEY are to open the new premises of the Boys' and Girls' Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester, on Tuesday next. On the following day they sail for America.

NOTTINGHAM.—The "Pleasant Sunday afternoon class" at the Albert Hall, Nottingham, is an earnest evangelistic effort associated with the United Gospel Mission. The men's class has a membership of 2500, the women's class 800, and another young men's class 100. In connection with the movement are many branches of benevolent effort, carried out by about thirty committees. There are about thirty meetings a week held in Circus-street Hall, including meetings every Sunday at the Albert Hall. The third anniversary was celebrated a few days ago. Mr. Flanagan stated that he had during the year been at the death-beds of about thirty members, nearly all of whom professed their faith in Christ.

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

The Church Army will send evangelists (working-men) to any clergymen on due notice, for short or long missions. Hon. Sec., 128 & 130, Edgware-road, W.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association will send evangelists to any evangelical denomination in London. Hon. Sec., 121, Camberwell New-road, S.E.

The Country Towns Mission supplies qualified missionaries for work in the country. Apply to Secretary, 18, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. CHRONIC CONSTIPATION AND NERVOUS EXHAUSTION of Thirty Years' Standing.

Church Farm, Renhold, near Bedford, Sept. 23, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I feel it my duty to acknowledge what great and unexpected benefit I have derived from your treatment. My case was one of chronic constipation and nervous debility of thirty years' standing, and after trying various remedies without any good whatever, I was advised to purchase your Combined Band. I am pleased to tell you that I now get good nights, and my rheumatism has left me, which used to lay me up for months together, but my testimonial is specially for constipation and indigestion, from which I have been such a sufferer for years.—Yours gratefully,

(Miss) M. E. Long.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher & Co., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. RHEUMATISM.

Gordon House, Cumberland-street, Woodbridge, September 18, 1890.

Dear Sir,—This afternoon my patient called to to say he had received great benefit and relief from the use of your Galvanic Band. He is not wearing it now, as he is quite free from pain.—Yours truly, A. Andrews.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. EXTREME NERVOUS DEBILITY AND INDIGESTION.

Military-road, Cork, Ireland, Sept. 17, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I feel it is quite time that I should inform you what benefit I have derived from your treatment. Before consulting you I was suffering from extreme debility, and could not walk any distance without great fatigue; but since wearing your Galvanic Belt I can say with truth that your treatment, under Providence, has done me the greatest good, not only for nervous debility, but for indigestion, from which I suffered much. I can eat many things now that I could not do before I commenced wearing your Belt. If you publish this please use initials only, and you may refer inquiries direct to me, with many thanks.—Yours sincerely, M. F. C.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. LOSS OF VOICE AND NERVOUSNESS.

The Hermitage, Clonmel, Sept. 16, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in stating that your appliance has been of much benefit to me. I believe it has cured me permanently of loss of voice and nervousness. It has really done wonders. I should hardly have believed it if I did not see the results.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully, R. M. Miller.

J. L. Pulvermacher, Esq., 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

ADVICE PERSONALLY, or by LETTER, free of charge.

"A marvellous record of earnest labours and successful work, one, too, that may be purchased for a shilling. Messrs. Morgan & Scott have laid the Church under obligation, by this cheap edition of the Life of Whitefield, by Mr. Andrews. The larger edition is well known and much admired, but this issue places the book within the reach of every Christian worker in the kingdom. We can commend it to all who want to know the history of this truly apostolic man of God. . . . No one should be without a copy of this really valuable life of the great evangelist of the 18th century."

JOHN WESLEY:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D.

WITH PORTRAIT.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 6d.
Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth covers, 1s. 6d.

"A marvel of cheapness! It contains within its fully a hundred and twenty closely-printed pages, a remarkably well-compacted, well-arranged, and most interesting Life of the great Methodist. It is written in a very lively style, such as will attract young readers; whilst it will render it more acceptable to all, and it sets before us a life-like portraiture of its subject. We welcome it heartily. John Wesley's grand life can afford to be told often, and we are glad to see it here in such form as to reach the homes of the poor."—British Messenger.

"It is a thoroughly sympathetic, as it is a graphic and comprehensive sketch."—The Baptist.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

CONSUMPTION following PNEUMONIA—CASE of a LITTLE GIRL in WESTMORELAND.

Mr. John Moss, of Burton, having sent for medicine and found (he says) a very beneficial effect, wrote me, Nov. 20th last, concerning his child.

One month before writing me she had pneumonia, or inflammation of the lungs, accompanied by pleurisy. "Her case is similar to No. 37 of your book. She is eight years old in January. She cannot take Cod Liver Oil. Kindly give your earliest attention as the case is urgent."

[The case that Mr. Moss mentions above is that of the child of a Mr. Fox, of Newport, Mon. It was "marked by cough, continual short breathing, soreness in the lungs, disordered secretions, hectic fever, night perspirations, thirst, loss of flesh and strength, &c., &c." See page 39 of my work on "Consumption," not the Appendix, which contains cases of more recent date.]

The little patient soon got well, and the father, writing me March 12th says:—"I have great pleasure in thanking you for my daughter, who has been saved by use of your medicines. I may also mention that a relative of mine gave my aged father some of it, and it eased his cough, and relieved his breathing very soon."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

WELLINGTON SERGES.

RICHARDSON'S NOTED HOUSEHOLD LINENS.

LADIES who find it utter weariness to spend a whole day in shops have reason to be grateful for the system of "Fireside Shopping," which has been brought to such perfection by Mr. Ellwood Brockbank, of the Warehouse, Settle, Yorkshire. His patterns are very cleverly arranged, and his prices among the most reasonable of the day, while his taste is admirable. By sending for and examining them at leisure in their own homes, ladies are able to compare qualities and study colourings at their ease, as well as to make the calculations as to price that go so far towards solving the problem how to make both ends meet. It is in every way the most sensible and economical mode of shopping that Materfamilias can adopt.

ECROYD'S ALL WOOL FABRICS.

Warm Estamènes, English Cashmeres, English Merinos, Wool Beiges, Fine Serges, All Wool Foulés, Amazon Cloths, Henriettas, Nuns' Veilings, Fancy Cashmeres.

THE FOLLOWING INCIDENT SHOWS THE VALUE OF THE WORK:—

The case is that of a boy who had been some time in prison.

This lad was employed in a shop at Westminster, and associated, alas! with evil characters, who induced him to rob his master's till. He was caught in the act, tried and convicted, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. His mother applied to the Secretary for his help, in the matter of saving the lad from the course which he was shaping.

The Secretary took the boy in hand, and one of the Society's Missionaries obtained for him a berth on board a brig called the Royal. Before taking him on board, the Missionary took him to the Mission-room, and advised him, prayed with him, gave him a Bible, with certain texts which the boy was exhorted to specially notice. He had been about three months on board the brig when he ran away, having helped himself to some of his shipmates' gear. He joined a brigantine, whose captain "was given to drink." When on the coast of France, the ship ran ashore, and out of the five hands on board, this boy and a man were the only ones saved from the wreck.

When he got ashore his shipmate left him. He sat down and began to think, believing that his sins had found him out, and that God was punishing him for all that he had done. He had his Bible with him. He opened the book at a place of a marked text, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee." He prayed earnestly that God would direct him and make him a better boy. Peace came to his heart. Many years after the forgoing incident, a Thames Church Missionary went on board a steamer off Gravesend, where he gathered the crew together for a service in the forecastle. The kindly behaviour and earnest attention of the men, caused the Missionary to specially thank them for the way in which they had received him.

"No thanks are due to us. You should thank the second officer, for if ever there was a Christian man, that's the one."

The Missionary then made his way to the officers' cabin. There he saw a fine, handsome, robust man, with a gold stripe upon his arm. At once he was recognised, and after some conversation, the preceding story was told, and the officer made himself known to the Missionary as the boy who was helped by him many years before. His position is such as to enable him to earn sufficient for him to keep his aged mother and a deaf and dumb sister.

For the glory of God and the eternal welfare of immortal souls, this earnest appeal is made.

Contributions may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; or they may be sent to the Society's Bankers, Lloyds' Bank, Ltd., 72, Lombard-street, E.C., or direct to REV. H. BLOOMER, Secretary, 31, NEW BRIDGE STREET, LUDGATE CIRCUS, LONDON, E.C.

A LETTER FROM DR. BARNARDO

To the Friends of Christ's Work among the "Waifs and Strays" of our Streets.

Dear Friends,—After an absence in America of more than three months, I rejoice to find myself once more in the midst of the engrossing duties of my beloved rescue work in East London.

Since I left England on July 3, 466 poor Boys and Girls have been admitted to the Homes. Of these 25 were babies in arms; others were deaf and dumb, or blind, or little cripples; whilst 84 were homeless youths who found within our Labour House their first chance of a better life. The latter were mostly taken from the Lodging Houses or from the Streets of the Metropolis—houseless, friendless and starving, utterly and hopelessly destitute.

In addition, I find that during the same period we gave 7,740 nights' lodgings, with 9,580 rations, in our Open All-Night Shelters to as many poor young girls who were penniless and Homeless, who must, apart from such aid, have had to pace the weary streets till morning!

The full tide of our winter's work has not as yet set in, notwithstanding which my family already numbers 3,570 souls, or about 500 more than at this time last year. On one single day during my absence no fewer than eleven destitute children were admitted. I am now admitting at the rate of forty children per week, although I have resolutely to close the doors to all except the absolutely destitute. During the nine months of the present year, I have already placed out in life, in the Colonies and throughout the United Kingdom, 1,076 trained boy and girl inmates.

With all this work being done during the autumn, it will not, I imagine, greatly surprise you to learn that when I reached home I found my good helpers with an empty purse and a bank account overdrawn, whilst many clamant demands for money to discharge liabilities, incurred during my absence, were being made daily. I am now busily engaged in preparing a fresh issue of NIGHT AND DAY, which will give fuller particulars of our absorbing work; but as that magazine cannot reach your hands until about the end of the second week in November, I feel that I must, without further delay, tell you thus briefly of our present urgent need of funds, assured as I am that you will, according to your measure, cheerfully co-operate with me to supply that lack.

Indeed, I want your immediate and generous aid, in order to lift off some of the heavy burdens now resting upon my shoulders, and to enable me to prosecute with renewed courage and hope the blessed work to which God has called me.

Commending my great family of Little People to your Christian love and care,—I am, your faithful Fellow-worker, amongst the children of the Streets,

P.S.—I trust you all received a copy of our last Annual Report (1889) with audited cash accounts, which was posted to donors during my absence. If desired, I will gladly send you fresh Copies.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mrs. R. B. Lyth, Missionary in the South Seas.

Our readers will observe that this issue is a Double Number, and contains a copy of "The Christian" Almanac for 1891, besides six additional pages of literary matter.

Dr. Barnardo is busily preparing a fresh issue of Night and Day. Meanwhile he has issued a letter to his friends, which will be found on page 33.

A valuable letter on "Religious Movements in Germany" appears in The Independent, from Dr. Stuckenberg, an American divine, residing in Berlin, who exercises a warm Christian influence there over British and American students. He tells us that outside theological circles negative criticisms and speculations are pushed into the background by the deeper question of the dead state of the German Church; that never since the days of Luther and Spener has there been such an awakening of religious leaders; that the elevation of the life of the Church is becoming the one problem; and that the protest against the State regulation of the Church, and the handing over all the things to pastors, to the exclusion of lay activity, is strong and influential. Surely we ought to mark the going forth of the Spirit's working among men.

Dr. R. W. Dale, in the volume just issued, "The Living Christ and the Four Gospels" (Hodder & Stoughton), presses the point with powerful amplification, that it is from the witness of men rather than from the trustworthiness of literary records that the Christian faith is propagated, and that if we had no more than St. Paul's summary of the Gospel, in his unquestioned Epistle to the Corinthians, we should have an adequate basis on which to rest our faith. This line of reasoning is open to the danger of unjustifiable concessions, but the argument that the real witness to Christianity is in the Saviour's living ability to pardon, cleanse, and keep trusting ones, needs to be raised and strengthened.

It is also to be remembered that much stress was laid by the Lord on the witnessing mission of his servants. Before the four Gospels were written the first companies of believers were doubtless strengthened and sustained by the reminiscences and accounts of Jesus from those who were eye and ear-witnesses of his gracious words and mighty deeds. And now at home, and in mission fields, men need this actual, personal experience. Such testimony as "Come, make trial of Christ; we are witnesses that He is a living Redeemer," would do much to save this generation from a faith which is traditional, and would better fulfil the Lord's intention respecting his followers.

The Daily Telegraph, in the course of a very friendly article on General Booth's new scheme, has the following weighty remarks on the practical value of religion, in opposition to the ineffectiveness of unbelief:—

> One characteristic of General Booth's scheme cannot be ignored. He propounds it with religious enthusiasm, and he strives to change the heart and save the soul, as well as to improve the physical condition. Even if we look at the matter quite coldly and impartially, we must be struck with the fact that nearly all the charitable work of this world is done by those who believe in a better world to come. Agnostics and Secularists, who think that we have only one life, do not build hospitals or go as sisters of charity among the poor. Giving to the poor has been the outward and visible sign of inward spiritual faith even before the rise of Christianity. We suppose, that out of every hundred pounds given to charity in England today, ninety-nine come from religious men or women.

After remarking on the unsuccessful attempts to found Socialist colonies, the writer observes that "the queerest credulity of our age seems to keep people together, better than philosophy, or scepticism."

Whatever view may be taken of General Booth's project, in its details, for our slum population, it gives undoubted emphasis to a pressing problem of the times. The wisest men have taught that the highest stages of national development are those of the greatest peril. As population becomes centred; as municipal government becomes weakened by the withdrawal from cities into suburbs of the citizens who are rich and have been foremost in commerce; as localities are turned into huge workshops, and the tenements for the people cease to be homes for domestic influences: so must evils innumerable spring up. There are differing opinions as to General Booth's scheme, but it at least does this, it projects the condition of great cities into the foreground, and declares that the hour is come when Christianity must solemnly and thoroughly deal with this condition.

We read that at the late meetings of the Congregational Union at Swansea, the local committee decided not to request a meeting for working men as at other places of assembly. The reason given was one of interest. Wales does not contain a vast majority of the labouring classes who are indifferent to religion. The bulk of Welsh working men are within churches, not outside of them, and this fact is owing to the different way from that of England of conducting Sunday-schools, and among the Welsh Nonconformists of conducting church meetings. The fact in its relation to present social questions suggests a very weighty lesson, and one to which denominational meetings might well turn their attention.

The Bishop of Chester, on the occasion of his recent visitation, is reported to have spoken very severely in regard to the effect of Puritanism upon "the day of rest and refreshment," which had, he urged, "become for multitudes a day of sluggish and wearisome inactivity." The "filthy tipplings which the 'Book of Sports' anticipated as one of the results of Sabbatarianism had," he stated, "become scandalously and perniciously common." We are forced to think, however, that the Bishop quite mistakes the cause of all this laxity. The fact that "the stream of natural requirement has been dammed up," and that therefore there is a reaction, will not satisfactorily account for it. The causes lie deeper, and it should not be necessary for anyone to tell the Bishop where to look for them.

A day or two recently spent in the Potteries enabled us to see the excellent work carried on in the large hall and premises of the "Salvation Mission." This work was instituted by Gipsy Smith, and since his leaving Hanley, to become an evangelist in connection with the Wesleyan body, it has been carried on by Mr. Lancelot Middleton and Mr. Thomas Hogben. A somewhat detailed account will be found in another column. The need is great, the work is well organised, the superintendents and their helpers are thoroughly spiritual and efficient. We very warmly commend the Mission to all who believe the Gospel, in its doctrines and its activities, to be the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

The last report of the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India contains much valuable information respecting the progress which is being made in the important work of spreading Christian literature in that country. By means of training institutions in the principal cities, under the management of Christians of established character; by grouping together several of the native schools into circles, with an efficient Christian teacher to visit each school and give systematic instruction in Scripture, and set Christ before the children; and by the substitution of good school-books for the wretched, if not demoralising, books often in use, the Society is doing quiet but effective work. More than 8000 children are now under instruction, and there is evidence that the teaching thus imparted to the children is not without its effect upon the parents, who often learn something of Divine truths from their little ones.

Apart, however, from such educational work among the young, the Society has made a very commendable beginning in the province of producing and circulating Christian literature generally, for which "in every part of India, and from all parties, especially from missionaries, the call is most urgent." Last year more than 780,000 copies of various publications were printed, but the necessity for the quadrupling of this branch of work is emphasised by the statement of Dr. Murdoch, the venerable secretary, that the character of the people of India is largely moulded by literature. The main lesson of one of the most popular native prose works is said to be how to overcome by deceit, and it has been stated that the greater number of Hindu tales turn upon the profligacy and treachery of women.

The Press is busy on the enemy's side; many books are published with the express purpose of opposing the Gospel. The evil done in our own country by the "putrid filth" in circulation should stimulate us to help India to provide the antidote for this poison.

It is highly desirable that young people should be warned against the evils which attend and follow betting and gambling. In view of recent apologies for card-playing, Lieut.-Colonel S. R. Richards writes to us from Southport:—

The mere initiation of the young, ignorant of the world, into a practice like card-playing, which, as a matter of fact, is one of the national amusements most turned to evil purposes and fraught with temptation, must be both foolish and dangerous And this, not only on account of the fascination of the game and the tendency to gamble at it, as experience proves, but because the mere knowledge of card-playing in itself constitutes a strong temptation in later life, when associated with companions who gamble, as all more or less are sure to be. For elders of the Church to encourage, by theory or in practice, doubtful amusements, or habits which are entirely unnecessary, and are acknowledged to have led to the ruin of many, is to abuse their powerful moral influence, and to hamper the efforts of those guardians of the young who, with greater loyalty to Bible principles, and truer love towards those entrusted to their care, are endeavouring to save them from needless exposure to temptation.

Some startling statements were recently made by Mr. Ernest Hart, in an address delivered before the Society for the Study of Inebriety, regarding the extent to which ether-drinking prevails in some parts of Ireland. In the course of a systematic inquiry, it had been ascertained, he said, that more than two tons of ether openly passed along the railway every year into the Cookstown district, whilst much more was conveyed thither surreptitiously; in two small villages in that district two tradesmen are said to sell more than five hundred gallons each every year, and on fair days the atmosphere is described as being laden with the smell of ether. It is said to be drunk by both sexes, young and old, and the consumption has been increasing during the last year or two. Is it not the obvious duty of the legislature to check the present unrestrained traffic in such a demoralising drug?

It is quite exceptional in these days to come across a thoughtful paper in which Socialism is not held up as a panacea for most of the evils which at present affect and afflict society. Mr. G. W. Cook, however, in the current number of The Andover Review, under the heading of "Socialism in the Light of History," certainly succeeds in the attempt to show that in many instances during the past history of humanity Socialism has been tried and found wanting. It is pleasant to find so able a scholar and student of the opinion that most of the industrial difficulties which are so largely responsible for the modern socialistic outcry are by no means of a permanent nature. Mr. Cook insists upon it that "they have grown up within a century as a result of the marvellous development in inventive skill, and there has not yet been sufficient time to adjust our social life to the new conditions."

We trust that Mr. Cook is right, but it must not be overlooked that, while our social life is being "adjusted," men are being starved into crime, and women are being forced into vice, by cruel cheapness and starvation wages. The socialistic movement of recent years, while failing in its own efforts and objects, may do service in awaking Christianity to its responsibilities and duties in regard to social questions.

The use of feather trimming for winter dresses has been decreed by the magnates of fashion. It is gratifying to know in connection with this matter that the Princess of Wales has given orders that nothing need be submitted for her inspection, or that of her daughters, in which birds are used as trimming. The Princess Christian is credited with having set this example, which we trust will be widely followed by those who have it in their power to put a stop to a fashion which is the cause of untold cruelty to the innocent lower creation.

An article in a recently published book, entitled, "Why we Suffer, and other Essays," contains some suggestive facts and figures, showing how in proportion as debasing and materialistic conceptions of life obtain in nations or communities, so vice and crime are prevalent. For instance, in Saxony, described as "the fortress of freethought," it is stated that in the year 1878-9 13 per cent. of the births were illegitimate, as compared with 7 per cent. for the rest of Europe, whilst the annual average of suicides was 338 per million: in France and Germany the average was 160, and 152 per million respectively, being more than double that of England and Wales, and nearly tenfold that of Ireland.

"Infidel theories," says the writer, "regarding man and nature, rising into barren and naked materialism, have acted with a solvent and corrosive power upon Franco-German society"; and he asserts that, in Germany, the period when the writings of Schopenhauer and his disciple were at the zenith of their circulation was the most prolific in cases of self-murder. The Franco-German war is also said to have had demoralising results. But it may be remarked that Germany is not alone in such an unenviable notoriety. France and Austria—although in the former country a large proportion of the increasing number of suicides is due to alcoholism—also point a painful moral as to the results which attend wanderings in the desert of fatalism, pessimism, and materialism.

One of the most striking illustrations of the decadence of France is to be found in the unpleasant fact that last year the number of marriages in that country was lower than it was even in the unhappy year of 1870, when most of the marriageable men had to take up arms in the Franco-Prussian War. The decline in the population is by no means the most serious of the results which follow this falling off in marriages, though that is grave enough from a national point of view. There are other effects, and not a few causes, far more alarming, because they affect vitally the moral and spiritual well-being of the people.

It is painful in the extreme to think of the impositions to which country folk are subjected in the name of religion. Not only are ritualistic assumptions often palmed off upon them as essential Gospel verities, but in many cases the unthinking are schooled in superstition, and thus made plastic material for Popish exploitation. We learn that only recently a village in Shropshire was visited by a man who sold from house to house a penny paper, giving what was termed "Our Saviour's Letter" on attending church, observing the sacraments, &c.; the well-known apocryphal correspondence of Christ with King Abgarus, of Edessa; and the silly monkish fabrication called "The Letter of Lentulus to the Senate of Rome," describing the personal appearance of our Lord. Though the contradictory statements made concerning "Our Saviour's Letter" might well raise the suspicion of even the unlearned, the sheet is likely to be purchased by many people, the curious as well as the credulous. We trust colporteurs and village workers will hold themselves ready to expose the wickedness of this Romish deception, whereby, among other things, Christ is represented to have written things that never could have come into his mind.

At the first anniversary of the English church in Clumber Park, belonging to the Duke of Newcastle, acolytes wearing scarlet cassocks and swinging thuribles preceded the clergy, who were followed by acolytes bearing a cross and lighted candles. Then came two bishops, one of Central Africa, the other of Argyll, in gorgeous copes and mitres with precious stones. The altar was ablaze with lighted candles, incense was freely used, the elements were consecrated with the Angelus bell ringing, the so-called host was elevated, and a preacher from St. Alban's, Holborn, declared, after making the sign of the cross, that Christ was now present with them at the altar. Is this the Christian religion, or is it not? Is it truth, or is it falsehood? Is there among faithful men to be supineness, or indignant and united protest?

Rev. R. M'Cheyne Edgar, of Dublin, in a striking little pamphlet, entitled, "Cardinal Newman and his other Gospel," clears away many of the mists which recent eloquence has left to obscure the view of the late Cardinal's teachings. While there is full and ample appreciation of the Cardinal's style, poetic power, gentle, retiring disposition and character, it is forcibly shown that the Gospel taught by him was that of "salvation by baptismal regeneration, salvation by sacramental grace, salvation by a priesthood with delegated powers of absolution."

An excellent keynote to the proceedings of the National Protestant Congress, held this week in Portman Rooms, was struck by Sir Arthur Blackwood in presiding at the opening meeting on Monday evening. Eschewing a severely alarmist tone, he said that all lovers of the Reformed faith must yet be full of grief at the things we see and hear among those that are Protestant in name. Our strength lies not in a great array of high-sounding names, or in organisations, however excellent; we need to humble ourselves before God, and ask Him to indicate the way in which his truth is to be defended. Excellent papers on "The One Spirit and the One Body" were read by Rev. J. Hiles Hitchens, D.D., and Rev. Marcus Rainsford; and some time was spent in earnest prayer. Next week we shall summarize the Congress discussions.

The Gift of the Spirit.

The following thoughts are not sent forth in any dogmatic or contentious spirit. The writer will be unfeignedly thankful for the correction of any error, misapprehension, or oversight on his part.

It is important that Christians should be of one mind and of one judgment, and be able to speak with the accent of conviction concerning so vital a subject as the Holy Spirit.

There are those (1) who appeal first to the Word of God and then to experience, and (2) those whose first reference is to experience, and secondly to the Word of God. Stated thus, there can be no doubt that the former is the only safe rule. It must lead to erroneous conclusions to begin with our experience, and then seek to authenticate it by an appeal to Scripture.

Let it be definitely admitted that both parties are agreed as to the reality and preciousness of the Gift; the question is as to the means by which, and the conditions under which, this promised blessing is bestowed.

The gift of the Spirit without measure is the peculiar blessing of this dispensation, consequent upon the propitiatory death, resurrection, and glorification, of Jesus the Son of God. So long as human sin remained unexpiated, the Spirit could not be outpoured; but when the Son of Man had been lifted up from the earth, and had been glorified by God in heaven and by believers on earth, the Spirit was immediately shed forth. Forty days after the resurrection Jesus returned to the Father, and was glorified; but yet the Spirit was not given. Ten days later, when the Day of Pentecost was fully come, He was glorified by man on earth—for Pentecost ("seven Sabbaths shall be complete," Lev. xxiii.) typified a sevenfold rest of faith on God's crucified and risen Christ. Then the Spirit was poured out.

There are in the Book of Acts four several and successive mentions of the giving of the Spirit—viz.: in Jerusalem (ii.), in Samaria (viii.), in the house of Cornelius (x.), and on the disciples of Apollos and of Paul at Ephesus (xix.). These all took place and were recorded for a special purpose, the consideration of which will materially help to a clear comprehension of the subject.

As it was essential that no doubt should exist that the salvation of Christ was not confined to Israel, God's elect people, but was equally vouchsafed to the Samaritans whom they hated, and to the Gentiles whom they despised, Jesus specified all three in his commission: "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me in Jerusalem, and all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (i. 8).

In like manner it was needful to be incontrovertibly manifested that the Samaritans and the Gentiles were, equally with Israel, partakers of the Holy Ghost. Therefore the Apostles Peter and John were specially sent to Samaria for the purpose of conferring upon believers there the gift they had themselves received. And Peter had a vision from God to prepare him to receive without gainsaying the evidence that the Gentiles had received the Holy Ghost, as well as the house of Israel. In this case the gift came, not as at Samaria, by the laying on of the Apostles' hands, but direct from God; and not after, but before, baptism in water: showing that no ritual was necessary, nor any order prescribed: the one essential purpose being to leave no question as to the inclusion of the mingled people of Samaria and the far-off Gentiles in the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The peculiar action of the Apostle Paul with reference to the twelve men at Ephesus, who had received the teaching of Apollos, and had been baptized by him, took place in order to give unmistakable expression to another truth of great importance to be emphasised at the beginning of the Gospel. Apollos knew only the baptism of John, but he taught mightily as much as he knew. About twelve men received his teaching, and were baptized with the baptism of John; that is, they confessed their sins, and believed that Another was to follow John, mightier than he; but they did not know that He had already come, and had been glorified; and as they could not believe what they had not heard, they had not received the Holy Ghost.

In the providence of God, Paul came to Ephesus, found these disciples, and put to them this testing question—

"Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye became believers?"

They reply, "We did not so much as hear whether the Holy Ghost be yet given." (Compare John vii. 39, "The Holy Spirit was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified.")

"Unto what, then, were ye baptized?" (What have you received, if you have not received the Holy Ghost?—the gift which is the consequence and proof of having received the good news of Christ.)

"Unto John's baptism."

That makes it clear. "John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying, that they should believe on Him that should come after him, that is," Paul explains, "on Christ Jesus. When they heard this they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus, received the Holy Ghost, and prophesied.

Here, as at Jerusalem, Samaria, and Cæsarea, the actual reception of Christ and his finished work, and our union with Him in death and resurrection life, is shown to be the one and only essential qualification for receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The main significance of this incident rests upon the fact that the Holy Ghost is given immediately upon our belief—that we cannot receive the Spirit unless we believe in Christ, and that we cannot believe in Christ without receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit.

The apparent exception to this in the case of Samaria only proves the rule. It is specially noted that "as yet He was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus." Whether there was any lack of the fulness of the Gospel of Christ as it was preached to them; or any want of its full reception on their part; or whether the gift was delayed in order to its unmistakable manifestation, we do not undertake to decide: the fact remains that in the providence of God it was so ordained that the Samaritans should receive the Spirit through the prayer and the laying on of the hands of Peter and John, whom the rest of the Apostles at Jerusalem had sent thither, on hearing that Samaria had received the word of God. Thus the Church at Jerusalem took to her heart the Samaritans, with whom the Jews for ages had had no dealings.

It is greatly to be regretted that the sense has been obscured by the introduction of the word "since" in Acts xix. 2, referred to above; and of the word "after" in Eph. i. 13, which should read thus: "In whom ye also, having believed, were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise which is the carnest of our inheritance." A contract is sealed at the same time that it is signed. "Signed, sealed, and delivered." It all goes together. We are signed, sealed, and delivered by God's own act and deed, the moment we believe on the Son of God. We are forgiven, adopted, justified, sanctified, at once and once for all, when we are born again through repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. "Ye are complete in Him"; "for by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." (Col. ii. 10; Heb. x. 14.)

Nothing is gained, and the work of Christ is depreciated, when we minimise regeneration and its effects in order to magnify the second blessing. Is not the second blessing consequent upon receiving the second half of the Gospel? At the head waters of the river of grace, the leading Pentecostal preacher, in his comprehensive answer to the anxious inquiry, "Men and brethren, what must we do?" announced for all time the constituent elements of the water of life: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, into the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise is to you [Jews] and to your children [after you], and to all that are afar off [Gentiles], even as many as the Lord your God shall call." Not to some who have entered "the higher life" is the promise made, but "to as many as the Lord your God shall call." Not part of the Holy Ghost first for life, and the residue later on for service. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ."

There is indeed progress, and the progress may be marked by one or many definite stages; but are they not stages in our experience, not in the gift of the Holy Ghost?

But the Gospel may be only partially preached, or if fully preached only partially received: so that regenerate persons may have no knowledge of having been made partakers of the Holy Ghost. When, however, this knowledge is revealed to the soul, it becomes conscious of a blessedness it never knew before. And if the knowledge of the Spirit's indwelling be attained suddenly, the effect may be so vivid as to seem like a second conversion. Perhaps it might be described as the second half of conversion.

We think that Scripture shows that the Holy Spirit is given immediately when the obedience of faith unites us to the crucified and risen Christ; and that we can only be filled and kept filled with the Spirit in proportion as living in the Spirit we also walk in the Spirit—letting the word of Christ abide in us richly, obediently believing and believingly obeying every revelation of his will, doing his pleasure, hearkening to the voice of his Word.

A LUTHERAN PROTEST.—We recently stated that a book had been in circulation in Germany traducing the character of Luther, and saying that he committed suicide in a drunken bout. The calumny was promptly exposed by Protestant scholars, and the name of the Reformer fully vindicated. Another answer to the fal-ehood is now proposed by evangelical Christians in the Fatherland. The details are set forth in a pamphlet by Mr. D. B. Wiemann, of Barmen, soliciting subscriptions for the erection of a Lutheran church in Rome. A Protestant place of worship is much needed for the German community in the city; and already £1000 has been raised on behalf of the project.

LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

THE WORD DECLARING THE UNSEEN GOD.—John i. 18.

With this marvellous verse, the Evangelist brings to a close his sublime prologue. It is a befitting introduction to all that follows. Like some noble portal to a temple of transcendent size and beauty, it admits the reverent soul into this Divine Gospel, thrilling the heart, quickening the imagination, and preparing the thought for things which have not entered into the heart of man to conceive. Here is the seed-plot of the Gospel. Here is the standpoint from which the Nature and Ministry of the Lord are to be viewed. Here are struck those three keynotes which stand at the head of these articles, and which in different combinations vibrate through the entire range of the writings of the Apostle John.

We believe in the Being of God. Vast as this universe is with depths and heights, and its unmeasurable expanse, we believe that it is filled throughout with a mighty Spirit. He is everywhere. He knows everything. He can do all things. But the human heart pines to know what He is. Man seeks after God, groping in the dark, if haply he may feel after Him and find Him, and read the secret of his inner being. "What is God? What does He think and feel? What will He be to me?"

You send me to study Nature. But I find there nothing but his power and Godhead. His deeds, not his heart. And sometimes I am baffled by the apparent working of a malign power by which the creature is brought into subjection.

You send me to study Providence. But the march of God through the ages is so vast, and his footsteps so far apart, that they seem to be hidden in the sea, and his path in the dark waters, so that it is hard to understand the true trend and character of his dealings with the children of men.

You send me to decipher the Names of God. El-Shaddai, the God of Might, on whom difficulties which threaten to overwhelm us break harmlessly, as storms on the brow of the Matterhorn. Jehovah, the Unchangeable, who knows no shadow of turning, whose word is inviolable, and his covenant sure. Jehovah Sabaoth, the Lord of hosts, on whose bidding legions of bright spirits wait. But, after all, these names rather disclose the might and splendour of a sovereign, and do but increase my dread of Him as my sins come back to memory.

Is there nothing more? May I not see Him? Is there no open door of vision where I may stand and satisfy the hunger of my soul; no spot in all the wilderness where I may shelter behind a rock and catch a glimpse of his majesty as He passes by, escorted by the serried ranks of angel armies? "O that I knew where I might find Him, that I might come even to his seat!"

But it may not be! No man hath seen God at any time. Never yet. Not Moses, for he was hidden under the hand of God, and saw not his face. Not Elijah, for God was not in the earthquake or fire. Not the favoured three, for the cloud of glory dazzled them with its splendour. And even in the Apocalyptic vision, the rapt gaze of the seer beheld only the circumambient halo as of the jasper and sardonyx stone. And if we were to search the annals of any other nation, we should receive from every quarter the reply, addressed by a grey-haired Indian to Sir John Franklin during one of the expeditions of that renowned explorer: "I am an old man now, but I have never seen God."

And the explanation is given in those memorable words of a later Scripture: "He only hath immortality, dwelling in light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen, or can see." "The King eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only wise God." If the vision of the glory of God, as it was veiled by the human nature of our Lord, was so awful, in its dimmed radiance of glory, that the beloved disciple fell at his feet as dead, what would not the effect of its insufferable splendour be on the nature of any created being? It is of God's mercy that there are as many dense curtains between Him and us as covered the tabernacle of old, and veiled the unearthly glory of the Light that shone there.

But, surely, there must be some satisfaction for this hunger of the soul to know God, and of that other hunger, more eager still and harder to bear, for love. Our hearts pine for God and for love. What will we not give to appease our yearning for love. This makes us seek so eagerly for human friendships, mourn so bitterly if they are withdrawn, feel so lonely if they come not within our reach. Oh that this great and invisible God were Love! But how can we know? Hush! the Word hath declared Him; hath told the secrets of his inner being; yea, more, has let those inner secrets reveal themselves through his words and life.

I. The Qualifications of the Word for declaring the unseen God.—(1) His Eternity.—This was indicated by John the Baptist (15). Our Lord was his cousin, younger by six months, and John had already been for eighteen months before the people when Jesus came from Nazareth to be baptized. Thus, in a very true sense, "our Lord came after him." But when the greatest of woman-born saw Him approaching, he who had never before quailed before the face of man, whether royal or priestly, lowered his erect bearing to a deep humility, and cried: "This one must take precedence of Me, it is his by right, for He was before me." And so speaking, He is the spokesman of the entire prophetic band, whom he represents.

Ask Isaiah, the evangelic; or Abraham, the ancestor of the Jewish race; or Noah, standing on the green sward of a new world; or Adam, the first man; or the oldest star that first glimmered on the bosom of the night; or the most ancient elder who stands at the foot of the eternal throne; and from each the reply comes back dimmer and fainter from ever further distances, He was before me.

Jesus is the Alpha; the beginning; the first. He was before time, as we have seen. As Isaiah tells us, He is the Father of Eternity. And therefore He is well qualified to declare God.

(2) His Nature.—"The only begotten Son." Many ancient manuscripts give this phrase as God only begotten. God has many sons, but only One Son. Angels are sons by their creation. Penitent sinners are sons by regeneration and adoption. But our Lord Jesus is Son in an altogether unique and unrivalled sense. He is Son by generation. "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee" (Ps. ii. 7; Acts xiii. 33). And He is the only Son thus begotten.

It is a profound depth, for which our thought has no fathoming-line. But clearly this phrase indicates that our Lord Jesus shares in its fulness the very Nature of God. "He is a partaker of that incommunicable and imperishable essence which is sundered from all created life by an impassable chasm."—[The late Canon Liddon.] He is the object of such love as an Abraham might have felt to his son, his only son, Isaac, but multiplied by the difference which must ever part the finite from the infinite. He used the expression of Himself, because it constituted in Jewish speech the very strongest method of claiming equality with God. It was well understood in that sense by the Jews, who instantly charged Him with blasphemy, and sought to avenge so daring an assumption of Deity (v. 18).

Is it not significant that the humblest and meekest Being that ever trod on our world, the pattern of perfect holiness, whose perceptions as to the truth of his own Being could not have been mistaken, dared not withdraw a single iota of his claim, but died, rather than evade its entire force? (xix. 7). He could not abate those claims, because He thought it not robbery to be equal with God. He was ever conscious of his divine oneness with God (x. 30). He knew whence He was (viii. 14). He was in constant fellowship with God (x. 15). And, therefore, He was well qualified to declare Him.

(3) His Intimacy with the Heart of God.—"Which is in the bosom of the Father." At a Jewish table the guests reclined on couches in such a way that one might easily lean back his head on another's breast. Of this privilege the beloved Apostle availed himself at the last opportunity which offered, and leant on Jesus' breast. The breast is near the heart. By this tender and sacred clue he helped himself, and has helped myriads in succeeding ages, to realise the deep love, the close intimacy, the perfect acquaintance, subsisting between the Word and the unseen God, so that He is well able to declare Him. "I know Him" (viii. 55). The preposition "in" might be rendered "into," as if there was an ever deeper and closer approximation.

(4) His Human Nature.—"The Word was made flesh." He was the Son of God; but throughout this Gospel He speaks of Himself repeatedly as the Son of Man. Not a Son of Man. Not the Son of a Man. But, as if He were the child, offspring, and representative of the entire human family—the Son of Man (iii. 14). Whilst, therefore, as the Son of God, He was able to know God perfectly, as the Son of Man He was able perfectly to express Him, unfold, and reveal Him; in such a manner that all might understand the deepest thought and being of the ever-blessed One.

II. The Mode of Declaration.—This is very wonderful. He spoke about God, corrected men's false conceptions, confirmed their vague and visionary hopes, and poured floods of light upon the mysteries of God's nature, which had been hidden from ages and generations.

His choicest revelations were made to the little inner group that gathered closest around Him. He gave them God's word. He manifested the name of God to the men who had been given Him out of the world. In tender, glowing words He made known to them all that was concealed from other eyes in that ever-blessed word, which the Jews dared not pronounce (xvii. 6, 14, 26). All that language could convey was conveyed in the words of the Word.

But He did more; He so emptied Himself, He became as to his human nature so utterly dependent on his Invisible Companion that the life of God declared itself through his. He did nothing of Himself, but what He saw the Father do. He lived by the Father. He spoke only what his Father said to Him. He made known only what He heard from his Father. His words were not his, but the Father's that sent Him. The very works He did were disclaimed by Him. Remember his emphatic declaration: "The Father which dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works" (v. 19, vi. 57, xii. 50, xiv. 10).

And thus, when Philip said to him on one occasion, "Show us the Father," the demand elicited a sad and heart-weary reply, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father. Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me?"

This then was our Lord's way of declaring God. God wrought and spoke through his human life, that as men beheld its grace and truth, they were able to study as through a veil, or from a reflecting mirror, the very nature of the unseen God. In blessing little children, in welcoming the lost and desolate, in lessening human pain, in weeping true tears of sympathy, in bearing our griefs and carrying our sorrows, in dying for our sins, in seeking and restoring an erring disciple, as a gardener might lift up a flower bent downwards by the storm—in all these things, Jesus declared God, by letting the God that was in Him live through Him in each lovely act and tender word.

III. The Declaration.—"The Father." From his first talk with the woman by the well to that other talk with women at the sepulchre, the one choice word with which He designated God was Father (iv. 23, xx. 17). In that name He came. Of that name He spoke. By that name He taught us to commence our daily prayer. Into that name we must be baptized. Within that precious name, as a rampart of sure defence, we are to live. He is the Father's gift. Heaven is the Father's home. True worshippers are the objects of the Father's search. Humble hearts are the chosen dwellings of the Father's love. All who belong to Him are dear to the Father's heart. God is his Father, and the Father of all those who have received Him, and in doing so have obtained the right to become sons of God. Other men, as St. Paul said, may be his offspring; but they are sons.

Not orphans or desolate are we! Never lonely again! Never pining for a love which mocks our yearnings and evades our reach! Never roaming the universe to escape God, or dreading Him as unknown and unknowable! Never again shrinking from life for its solitudes, or from death for its mystery, or the hereafter for its terrors! But nestling ever in the strong, tender arms of a Father who pities us, and whose love is as much more sensitive than that of any earthly father as his nature, thoughts, and ways are higher and better than ours; or as the fire is greater than the straw which is lit at its blaze (Eph. iii. 15).

What a blessed lot is this! Let us bathe our tried, fearful hearts in these rays of sunshine, with which Jesus has lit up life and death, earth and heaven; and, as the little child, in the dark tunnel or on the turbulent waves, forgets its alarm with its father's voice in its ear, its father's heart as pillow, its father's arms as encircling walls, so, amid the problems and perplexities of life and death, let us trust the Fatherhood of God, soft as a summer zephyr, deep as ocean depths, and be at peace.

AMONG SWISS ROMANISTS.

The work of evangelisation is progressing in the midst of Romish superstition in the Canton of Ticino. In the time of the Reformation a number of people in the canton left the errors of Rome for the pure light of the Gospel. They were persecuted and banished, however, and for three centuries the region was entirely closed to Gospel effort. Yet some sparks of the light of God's Word were glimmering, and, on the building of the St. Gothard Railway, an Italian colporteur was the means of converting several Ticinese workmen.

Upon that the Evangelical Committee at Bâle made it their special work to organise a Mission, and chose Biasca for their centre. In 1886 they built a chapel and school, which they maintain from subscriptions. The little church at Biasca counts thirty communicants, all converts from the Romish Church. The day-school counts forty-two pupils, and the Sunday-school has fifty children on the roll. The pastor visits and evangelises in other parts of the canton.

Many English people are continually passing through Ticino on their way to and from Italy. They would find a great deal to interest them if they were to stop, if only for a few hours. We are much hindered by the priests, and also by the great indifference which exists here, as in most Romish countries.—Yours faithfully, Carlo G. Gay, Pastor.

THE SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY has affiliated institutions in the ports of Naples, Piræus, Port Said, Constantinople, and Smyrna, all conducted on unsectarian, evangelical, and temperance principles. The object is to provide in large seaports places where seamen may write and receive letters, board for a time, and otherwise be free of the intrigues of the harpies and the landsharks who are ever ready to pounce upon Jack whenever he goes ashore. The home department of the central branch in Naples has been helpful to not a few. To assist fellow men in distress is felt to be a Christ-like duty. Best of all, there have been seasons of spiritual blessing, and continued instances of individuals receiving spiritual good. A more commodious Rest is needed at Naples, especially in view of the prevalence of cholera in various countries. Thousands of strangers land there on the way to Australia, India, &c., and the city is overrun with evil guides. A safe refuge and a happy English home is what visitors and seamen need in this important city. A missionary, helpers, and boatman are attached to the Rest, which is conducted by a committee of resident English ladies of which Madame Tell Meuricoffre is president. The committee desire that the work may be extended, and that many important shipping ports may be provided with the like blessing. Mr. Stephen Burrowes, the superintendent, is at present in Great Britain, lecturing on his tour in Egypt and Palestine with diagrams and views. His present address is, care of Seamen's Bethel, Eglesham-street, Southside, Glasgow.

CHINESE GIRLS AT SINGAPORE.

The Chinese Girls' School at Singapore, belonging to the Female Education Society, was instituted, in 1843, to teach Chinese females practical Christianity, and to train up the girls in cooking, house-cleaning, washing, making their own clothes, &c. Many of the girls have become Christians, married Christian Chinamen, and settled down as happy wives and mothers, their light shining amongst the heathen by whom they are surrounded; several of them, as circumstances allow, visit their countrywomen, and the hospital and prison.

Many distressed girls brought to the School by the police have become Christians, married Christian Chinamen, and are still leading consistent Christian lives in Singapore. Seven little children bought in China by some Malay sailors were taken from them by the police and brought to this School in 1860, where they grew up and became true Christians. They are now the wives of Christian Catechists belonging to the Church Missionary Society; five are working with their husbands in Foochow, China, and two at Fusan, in Corea. Six young women teachers in the school also go out as Bible-women. Forty children are now in the school, some having no other home. The school is entirely free, principally supported by the two sales of work sent from England, which our kind friends in Singapore assist us to dispose of. The expense of the School, including board, clothes, teachers' salaries, carriage, conveyance, medicine, and various expenses, relieving Chinese in connection with the School, house repairs, &c., average about 250 dollars per month.

THE GOSPEL IN THE FIJI ISLANDS.*

One of the most impressive missionary stories of modern times is that of the triumph of the Gospel in the Fiji Islands. Fifty-five years ago, when Christian work was commenced among them, the people of these islands were savages of the most completely depraved type and ferocious cannibals, knowing nothing of God; but through the patient toil of ambassadors of the Cross, the heathen darkness and gloom in which they were enshrouded has long since dispersed, and to-day we find that the whole population is under Christian influence, and many thousands of the people are truly seeking to walk in the way of the Lord, not a few having gone forth as evangelists and Christian teachers to "regions beyond."

"There are," we are told, "nine hundred Wesleyan churches in Fiji, at every one of which the frequent services are crowded by devout congregations; the schools are well attended, and the first sound which greets the ear at dawn, and the last at night, is that of hymn-singing, and the most fervent worship, rising from each dwelling at the hour of family prayer." In helping to bring about this wonderful work of transformation, Rev. James Calvert has been an honoured instrument, and his career affords a worthy example of heroism and devotion. Many of his most interesting experiences are graphically rehearsed in the volume before us, which is indeed a well-condensed presentment of the whole story of the Fiji mission. The narrative, which is very fully illustrated, can not fail to attract attention, and excite interest. Such histories give conclusive evidence of the inherent power of the Gospel, and are the most convincing arguments and effective pleas on behalf of Christian missions. As Mr. Calvert says in a letter to Mrs. Vernon which is inserted in the book, "This remarkable work of God cannot be two widely known," and we are glad to see this story of "the Cannibal Islands" added to Messrs. Partridge's valuable series of cheap missionary biographies.

PALESTINE.—The Jewish World states that the Sultan of Turkey has granted a concession to a London syndicate for trading and constructing railways, &c., in certain parts of Asia, including Palestine. The development of the resources of the Holy Land will form a prominent feature in the programme of the company, which will make its appearance as Asia (Limited).

Letters from Scotland.—1.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

While acting as your representative at the recent autumn Conferences in different parts of Scotland, I made it my business to take note of various matters bearing on Christian thought and effort among the churches of that land. My opportunities were limited, partly from the pressure of time and partly from the fact that it was the "dead season" of the Christian year; most of the leading workers had not returned from their summer holiday. In some half-dozen letters, I shall endeavour to gather up and present to the readers of The Christian the results of my somewhat cursory observations and inquiries. I may perhaps fitly begin with a brief account of A Sabbath in Edinburgh.

The natural beauties of the Scottish capital cannot well be hidden in any atmospheric conditions. But under the glow of a bright and unclouded autumn sun on a Sabbath morning the famous city looks its very best. As far as the eye can reach, every street is thronged with devout, or at any rate demure-looking, church-goers. If Paul had visited Edinburgh at such a time, he would surely have complimented the inhabitants, as he did the Athenians, on their devotion to the worship of their God; of course I do not presume to carry the parallel any further.

The Sabbath sojourner in Edinburgh has plenty of choice as to churches and preachers, and the numerous Saturday morning advertisements in the daily papers leave him without excuse. I had heard and read much about, but had never seen or heard,

REV. JOHN ROBERTSON,

Mr. McNeill's successor at the McCrie-Roxburgh Free Church; so I elected to spend the forenoon hours with him. The day's experience certainly justified the choice. Mr. Robertson's church stands in a side street off one of the main thoroughfares that traverse the old town. Externally, it is as poor and mean-looking a structure as the most iconoclastic Puritan could desire. Inside it is tolerably spacious and comfortable, and strangers are made heartily welcome. Mr. Robertson has evidently attracted around him a large number of middle-class young people—a very hopeful kind of congregation. When he stood up for the opening prayer, he had a weary, jaded look on his face, and I judge from some of his remarks in the course of the service that he is working at high pressure. Pulpit popularity in these days has some serious drawbacks. I was deeply impressed with his brief opening prayer—both as to the manner and the matter of it. He went at once, with no stilted tones of voice, and without any dreary circumlocution, into the audience chamber of the Father in heaven, and simply told out what was in his heart. It was almost startling to me, because of its comparative rarity in my experience, to hear the preacher earnestly thank God for the evidence he had received by letter and testimony during the week as to distinct blessing through the Gospel preaching of the previous Sunday. I understood it when I heard Mr. Robertson's sermon later on. He preaches for immediate results, and he evidently gets them. The "intimations" for the coming week nearly took my breath away by their number and variety. Every day seemed to be crowded with work—and work of the right sort, too, on behalf of the masses around—prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, temperance efforts, Gospel preaching, house-to-house visitation, social gatherings, and I know not what beside. They must be a congregation of workers; the pastor himself appears to be the busiest of them all. The willing horse generally gets too much to do; Mr. Robertson actually apologised for not undertaking visitation work outside the bounds of his own flock, as he had been requested to do. He confessed to being in arrears with that part of his proper work, but announced a day when he would be visiting between seven and nine in the evening, so as to catch the heads of the household at home. If the fire of his zeal burns at this rate all the year round, Mr. Robertson must be simply killing himself by inches. He has not the splendid physique of his forerunner, Mr. McNeill. After preaching twice in his own church, he was to give the Gospel address that same evening in the Free Assembly Hall.

I cannot tax your space with any detailed notes of the sermon. It was founded on the narrative of the Flood, chiefly on the primary cause that brought about the great judgment on rebellious mankind—the marrying of the sons of God with the daughters of men. He uttered a very solemn protest against such unequal alliances, and portrayed the disastrous results that ensue when the mothers in a nation become corrupt. The language of the discourse was exceedingly terse and picturesque, with only a few rough expressions that were not repulsive in their coarseness, but would have been better left out. When a man is in dead earnest, however, a few verbal transgressions may well be forgiven. The close of the sermon was a fervid and direct appeal to any outside the ark of salvation to hasten thither and escape impending doom. I had seen a notice in the public prints some days before that Mr. Robertson had gained the favourable opinion of Mr. Spurgeon during his month's recent ministry in the West of London. I could quite explain that now.

PROFESSOR MARCUS DODS.

Seeing by the advertisements that Dr. Dods was to preach in the afternoon at a U.P. church in the city, I resolved to go and hear for myself the great arch-heretic of the hour, whose utterances had divided his own communion into two hostile camps, and set the tongues of the Christian world wagging either in praise or blame. A long walk after dinner brought me to the unpretending structure, in a thickly-peopled neighbourhood, where the famed Professor was officiating. I was a little late, and found the church crowded, with little more than standing-room left. Dr. Dods is in appearance as unlike one's notions of the ideal heretic as he could well be. Instead of the aggressive and self-assertive bearing that one expects, I found a man with fresh, fair face, with quite a wealth of fine grey hair on his head—altogether a most attractive and benevolent-looking countenance. The services of the day were in celebration of the jubilee of the senior pastor of the church, but Dr. Dods, with the exception of some allusions in prayer, made no reference to that in his discourse. It was a sermon of the regulation pattern, founded on the healing, by Peter and John, of the man who lay at the beautiful gate of the temple. I could not detect the remotest taint of positive doctrinal heresy in it, and almost the only remark he made that one would think of criticising was the statement that, if Peter had had a penny in his pocket, he would have dropped it into the beggar's hand and passed on. That seemed to me to be a reading into the story of something that is not in it. The application, that spiritual healing must come through faith in Christ, was plainly put; but the sermon was closely read from manuscript throughout, and was entirely devoid of fire or passion in its delivery. The church was very crowded, and the day was hot, and that might have had something to do with the air of languor and listlessness that appeared to pervade the congregation. Judging from this specimen of his powers, the effective pulpit of the Free Church of Scotland does not appear to have lost a very shining ornament in Dr. Dod's transference to the class-room, however it may have gained or lost in other respects.

A Y.M.C.A. SERMON.

The evening found me in St. Andrew's Parish Church, George-street, listening to a sermon by the talented Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's, on behalf of the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. He had a large congregation of hearers, most of them young and highly intelligent in appearance. I could not forbear noting the unusual comprehensiveness and catholicity of the Doctor's "long prayer." Of course, special mention was made of the Association and its work; but no good cause, the wide world over, seemed forgotten in his intercessory petitions. He prayed for the Latin Church; for the Greek and other Eastern Churches; for the Lutheran Church and all the churches of Protestantism; for the Churches of England, of Ireland, and of Scotland, so called; for the various Free Churches of the realm, and for the Salvation Army. In connection with each he found something heartily to thank God for. He prayed for Her Majesty's Government, and—what is much more unusual—Her Majesty's Opposition. Those engaged in varied professions and callings in life were borne up before God on the wings of faith and prayer; not forgetting the journalists. Certainly, there are some in the ranks of that profession in the preacher's own city (as indeed there are everywhere) who are not beyond the need of being prayed for. Few members of our British communities wield greater influence or need more wisdom in their daily work, and they are not prayed for so often or so earnestly as they ought to be.

It goes without saying that Dr. Whyte's sermon was at once cultured and eloquent, but it had no very special bearing on the occasion, as it seemed to me. It was a fervid and splendidly intellectual dissertation on Paul's famous discourse at Mars Hill, and embraced a scathing description of that section of modern society that dissipates its time and energy, as did many of the ancient Athenians, in hearing and retailing the latest news. Paul's gentle tenderness towards the devout but idolatrous Greeks was made the text for an earnest plea on behalf of charitable and cautious judgments with respect to those from whom we differ. The sermon was not extempore. Would it not have been more telling if it had been spoken straight from the heart, rather than through the somewhat chilling medium of manuscript? Preachers of such conspicuous mental gifts and powers of graphic utterance as Dr. Whyte, do themselves an injustice in not throwing away the paper crutch and trusting to the inspiration of the inward light, and that sympathetic receptivity of soul that is seen through the glistening eye of the hearer.

THE WESLEYAN FORWARD MOVEMENT.

It was a part of my programme for the day to see something of the evangelistic service in the large U.P. Synod Hall, conducted by the young representative of Wesleyan Methodism in Edinburgh, Rev. George Jackson, of whom I had heard a very good report. Hurrying across from George-street to Castle-terrace, I got to the hall only in time to find the great concourse dispersing itself. I waited through a rather prosy prayer-meeting, and was readily granted a short conversation with Mr. Jackson. He told me that this Methodist revival in the northern capital originated two years ago in a project to build a second Wesleyan church in the city. The meetings began in the Albert Hall, and the movement was so successful that the spacious Synod Hall was secured for the evening assemblies. This was the tenth consecutive Sabbath evening meeting there, and they will be continued during the winter. A membership of 150 has been formed, most of these being the fruit of the services. Mr. Jackson has superintended the work from the beginning, but he is now to have an assistant minister. No special attraction is provided for the people in the shape of music or otherwise, and they have been drawn by the simple presentation of the Gospel. One very encouraging feature is the large attendance of young men and women. Great crowds of this class promenade along Princes-street on the Sabbath evenings, and, as most of the churches do not hold evening services, it is certainly a great thing to have services such as are held in the Synod Hall and the Free Assembly Hall at the evening hour. Many young students attend the Synod Hall during the winter session, Mr. Jackson informed me. Bible-classes are held in connection with the movement, and in other ways these Wesleyan friends are manfully endeavouring to reach the careless and unchurched masses of the city. I learned the curious and interesting fact that the "Borrie Bequest," out of which this special movement has received monetary help in its inception, is a fund left by a Free Churchman for the extension of Methodism in Scotland. The congregations contribute towards the expenses fairly well, from week to week; but I was given to understand that there is room for the practical expression of sympathy on the part of all who wish to see the masses evangelised.

On my way from Synod Hall to the hotel I found a small but well-balanced choir singing Gospel hymns in the street by the light of a lantern that showed on its transparent sides striking Gospel texts. The singing was at once pleasing and effective, and, as a large crowd stood listening, I could not but cherish the hope and belief that the Gospel in sweet song might move hearts where the more laboured efforts of the pulpit had failed, or had not had the chance of reaching them.

A CALL FROM IRELAND.

We are in a most out-of-the-way yet beautiful place—Schull, Skibbereen, co. Cork. It is simply "land's end," with the most delightful, refreshing sea breeze, perfumed with gorse and heather. There are many Protestants here, mostly Methodists, and a fine church, and sound, good teaching in it, thank God; but there is also abounding ignorance with a much larger number. We were talking to a poor old creature yesterday, who said she remembered the "great failure" (meaning the famine of 1846-7); she spoke of it in a whisper. She told us she had had nine children, and she does not know where those who are alive are now—abroad somewhere, and she is alone! She said that when she lay down in her loneliness, thoughts came of all we had to go through hereafter; "we don't know the terrors of all that," she said, and shivered with such blank painfulness.

When she spoke slowly I could follow her Irish (very few of the peasantry in that locality are acquainted with English); but I lost her thread in the rapid way in which she told her hopelessness. I taught her in Irish the verse "Come unto Me," &c., and told her of the Comforter, and she put the blessed words into her own Irish, and repeated them two or three times. Ah, it is sad! We have heard that this year the Protestant teachers have been withdrawn from Cape Clear for want of funds; while the priest is working there, and has got up a fine chapel, and is getting back the converts. Some are holding firm, however; will you pray for them. I fear there is an awful lack of self-sacrificing voluntary workers in the Church of Christ. H. A. D'Arcy.

SUNDAY LABOUR AT HONG KONG.—The last China mail informs us that on Sunday, August 14, there was to be seen in Hong Kong harbour a noble example, by the captain of the steam-ship Straits of Bellisle (owned by Messrs. Neil, McLean & Co., of Glasgow) giving the crew their rest on the Lord's Day, whilst almost every other ship in the immense mercantile fleet at anchorage was working cargo, the same as on any other day of the week.

The Hero of Uganda.*

It is a melancholy pleasure to us to read the life of Mr. Mackay, knowing that his work on earth is done. But such a splendid record should speak with powerful voice to many another young man, endued with bodily strength and intellect to follow so noble a lead.

With a true missionary spirit burning in his soul, Mr. Mackay acquired skill as an engineer, which was of the utmost service in his subsequent career. His work was to him a whole-souled passion, and every hour was turned to practical account in picking up useful arts.

When at last commissioned by the Church Missionary Society for foreign service, he made a remarkable speech, at the farewell meeting to himself and five others. He said, within six months the committee would probably hear that one of the missionaries was dead. When that news came, they were not to be cast down, but send someone else immediately to take the vacant place. He left the youngest but one of the well-equipped party of eight but, in the short space of three years, to be the only representative in Africa of that original band.

Here is a description of the physical difficulties with which he had to contend:—

"The dense and thorny jungles, of which I have already had a collective length of nearly a couple of English miles, presented a resistance quite peculiar to themselves. They form chiefly a growth of underwood and climbing plants, which have sprung up on the site where a fine primeval forest once stood. What has become of these forests it is hard to say. Remnants of stumps seem to indicate that they were cut down by a previous generation of savages, probably to make way for the growing of corn, which they sow only on the most fertile patches; and, the villages in their vicinity having been destroyed by war or other causes, the ground was left to nature's hand, and she has indeed shown me what she can produce when left to work her will. Imagine a forest of lofty, slender trees, with a cop between of thorny creepers, so dense below that a cat could scarcely creep along, and branched and intertwined above like green, unravelled hemp. The line of the road through it is a path wriggling right and left, as if it had followed the trail of a reptile, and almost losing itself here and there, where the creeping wild vine and thorny acacia have encroached upon it. Caravans from the coast to Unyanyembe, Uganda, Ujiji, and from these places to the coast, have passed and repassed such impediments on the way; yet, though the pagazi's clothes were torn, and the bales had at times to be dragged along the ground, no one ever ventured to cut a branch or a twig to let the daylight in, where the light that was only served to make the darkness visible.

"I had come up this road before, so I knew what was before me, and now the densest jungle has yielded to the slashing strokes of a score of Snider sword bayonets, which I have given my best men to carry."

One principle of missionary success in this land is clearly recognised in the following utterance:—

"With the children I am on the best of terms. At all times I find myself surrounded by a host of little boys, eager to help me in anything.

"More than ever I am longing for the day when the necessary rough work of pioneering will be done, and I can settle down to spend every day in teaching the little ones. I cannot think the day far distant when I shall see my daily school for these children, and watch them grow in wisdom and understanding, and in the fear of God. In such a class I dream I see a nucleus of a training college, which shall furnish manifold seeds of life in place of the units which we white men must ever be in Africa. Of these will some be trained for the work of the ministry, and the day arrive when a Msukuma will be Bishop of Unyamwezi, and a Muganda, Primate of all Nyanza!

"But much soil must first be turned up, and a deal of what may be called dirty work done, and many weeds rooted out before the good seed be cast in with success, and then we know for certain that some will bring forth a hundredfold. If we sow before we plough, we sow by the wayside, or on stones, or among thorns; and the devil, the flesh, and the world are here, as everywhere else, ready respectively to deny a harvest."

Paul-like, he was not without a dangerous experience from wind and wave, when the Mission vessel, the Daisy, was wrecked on the Lake of Victoria Nyanza. He says:—

"The wreck was already so complete that it could not now be much worse, and as the storm subsided a little we set to work to knock up a hut out of spars and sails, and as our goods dried we gathered the articles together to conceal them from the covetous eyes of the natives. Thankful to God for sparing our lives, and that our property was not more damaged, we changed our dripping clothes, and found some food. We soon set to work to repair the Daisy, much as one would make a pair of shoes out of a pair of long boots; cutting eight feet out of the middle of her, we brought stem and stern together, patching up all broken parts in these with the wood of the middle portion, and after eight weeks' hard labour we launched her once more on the Victoria Nyanza.

"Only the other day I came across some of Stanley's letters in The Daily Telegraph, and discovered, to my dismay, that this is the very spot where Stanley had one of those hair-breadth escapes from massacre which seemed to have characterised throughout that last but memorable march of his across the continent. Well it was for us that he was not 'vengefully disposed' on that morning; for had he then fired but a single shot, the natives would doubtless have taken a terrible revenge on us, as we were wrecked on the very same beach; but a kind Providence foresaw all, and ever since we set foot on this shore the natives have proved themselves as kindly disposed as we could have desired. Wherever I find myself in Stanley's track, in Uganda, Ugogo, or even Ukerewe itself, I find his treatment of the natives has invariably been such as to win for him the highest respect for the face of a white man."

On the drink evil Mr. Mackay writes:—

"Oh, how often will I enter in my journal as I pass through many tribes, 'Drink is the curse of Africa'! Useguha, Usagara, Ugogo, Unyamweri, Usukuma, Ukerewe, and Uganda, too—go where you will, you will find every week, and, when grain is plentiful, every night, every man, woman, and child, even to sucking infants, are reeling with the effects of alcohol. On this account chiefly I became a teetotaler on leaving the coast, and have continued so ever since.

"I believe also that abstinence is the true secret of continued and unimpaired health in the tropics.

"Who wishes to introduce civilisation into Africa? Let a sine quâ non of the enterprise be that its members be total abstainers. The West Coast is ruined with rum; it is killing the Kaffir in the South; and even on the East Coast, at Zanzibar, a vile liquor is distilled from the sugar-cane at Kokoto-ni that is retailed by every Hindu, Banyan, and Goa merchant in all the coast towns, to the destruction of the Suahili race."

We hope to give in our next issue some extracts relating to his more direct efforts in Christianising work.

*Mackay of Uganda. By his Sister. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. In this fascinating volume is detailed the wonderful career of Mr. Alexander Mackay, up to the time when, like a true hero, he died at his post in Central Africa. There is a charming simplicity in this narrative, which is replete with thrilling incident and permeated with a deeply spiritual tone.

The Cry of India's Daughters.

Dear Sir,—During the past few months the British public have had forced upon their notice repeated revelations of the horrors of child-marriage in India.

Beginning with the case reported by The Times in April of last year, in which a rich Hindu of forty-seven years of age, who had been married fourteen times, was charged with cruelty to his infantile wife of nine years, we have had a constant succession of similar cases, in all of which branding with hot irons, beating with sticks, and hanging by the hair have figured with such sickening frequency that the wonder is that Englishmen have borne it with equanimity. But, wonder or no wonder, it is so. The nation which boasts of being the champion of the weak and the deliverer of the oppressed has for the last twelve months allowed the reports of these outrages on helpless childhood to go the round of the civilised world without raising a hand to stop the pernicious custom, which, in a country where we are the supreme rulers, is the cause of unmentionable suffering, and of thousands of nameless deaths. This un-Christian-like indifference, however, has at length had its hitherto unruffled surface stirred. A case of frightful character, and involving the death of the poor little child-wife, has lately occurred under such revolting circumstances that has been formed with the object of securing the raising of the limit of age at which children in India can be married.

We are thankful that at last an effort is to be made to modify this evil of child-marriage, and that some relief seems likely to be forthcoming for the little ones of our vast colony of India. But the purpose of my letter is to ask—Shall this measure of relief satisfy the Christian Church? Shall not the followers of Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," aim at something more radical—something, in short, that will be for the extirpating of those prolific roots of all cruelty and sin in India—the Hindu and Mohammedan religions? Such a revelation of the sin which infests and degrades the female sex in India as that seen in the reports of the cases mentioned above is surely a call to God's people to fresh energy and new efforts. The only sure remedy for India's sin and the only power by which the women and children of that land can be raised to a purer level is the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The efforts of Government will avail but little. The imposing of restrictions and penalties will only at the most confine the evil. What is required is a of Indian society with the truth and spirit of Christ. And then will come that happy consummation when caste and the zenana shall no longer fetter the liberty of one hundred and thirty millions of women; when little girls cannot be compelled by British-made law to become the wives of grown-up men; when the present seventy-eight thousand child-widows under nine years of age shall be an enormity of the past; and when weak women and helpless children, instead of being cruelly neglected as though they were beings of inferior value, shall have the same medical provision and relief as their men.

But, alas, how distant such a millennium is for the female sex in India; and how little is being done to bring it near! At the present time—although India has been given to us in a special manner to specially evangelise—for the 130 millions of women and girls in that land there is only one European lady missionary, representing England, America, and Germany, to every quarter of a million souls. And "what are they among so many?"

We have lately had two distinct calls for men from two societies, each asking for a thousand new missionaries. Why should not a third call go forth to the women of our land for a thousand female evangelists to work among the victims of the zenana?

The circumstances of the case demand it. No women in the world are under such bondage, for as that of the zenana? Sir W. Muir, a recent Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces of India, and the best living authority on the subject, has lately testified that in no Mohammedan land is the purdah system so strict as in India. Where, again, shall we find such customs as those which embitter the existence of women and children in India? And where, too, is the family life with all its potentialities for good or evil so cut off from the Gospel, and from the ordinary influences of civilisation, as it is amongst Hindu and Mohammedans in India? To seek to convert a nation by working only or even chiefly among the men is bad strategy. The vital point in the nation's life is the home. And, until our missionary forces reach and occupy that point, the final victory will continue to be postponed.

There is at the present time a Zenana Missionary Society working exclusively among the women of India, and representing all Protestant sections of the Church of Christ in Great Britain. It is the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, W.C. It confines its operations to India, because it was the condition of India's women which called it into existence thirty-eight years ago, and because, too, it conceives its task to be the fulfilling in some measure of Christian England's responsibility to its greatest and most important non-Christian colony. The Committee of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission is anxious to go forward in its holy enterprise against the system of the zenana, and the false religions which have given it birth. To this end it appeals for Christian ladies to volunteer for this urgent service of the King. It appeals, too, for the generous aid of God's people to enable it to send them forth; and finally it appeals that prayer may be made "without ceasing" (Acts xii. 5), for the enlightening and liberating of over 130 millions of fellow female subjects in India.—Yours sincerely,

H. Lewis.

Havering Vicarage, Romford, Essex.

THE JAFFA MEDICAL MISSION has established a hospital, and works largely among Moslems. No active opposition is offered in this region to philanthropic efforts, but missionary labourers are barely tolerated. With work hindered and schools closed, extreme reticence as to spiritual results is the only hope for continuance of this Mission. During last autumn old patients warmly welcomed the two deaconesses who for several weeks went from village to village holding a sort of medical mission day by day. Opportunities are multiplying in the earnest search after souls for whom Christ died. Colonel J. F. Morton, of the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, is treasurer.

VILLAGE WORK.—Many a village might be stirred up by means such as have been employed at Merrow, near Guildford. About twelve months ago it was laid upon the heart of a Christian man there to do something for those around him, and accordingly he threw open his best room to any who would come for mutual Bible study. The first evening only three attended, but as time went on the company increased, till the room was filled with a band of earnest Christians. At the anniversary just held several friends bore testimony to blessing received. Open-air work has been carried on through the summer months by the members, and much good has resulted from their efforts. A magic-lantern display in the open-air reached with Gospel truth many who never attend a place of worship. Another season of Bible study has just been begun.

OUR "COALIES" AND CARMEN.

Among the newer missionary enterprises is an effort to reach the London coal-heavers (popularly known as "coalies") and carmen; but, although the movement is new, it is full of encouragement. It is well known that men of the same craft prefer meeting with each other rather than being lost in a crowd with men of other vocations.

It is very interesting to trace the providential dealings of God in preparing his agents to carry on his work in the world. A few years ago a young man was converted while engaged as a furniture remover. Instinctively with his new life came the longing to benefit those engaged in the same calling. So he interested a few friends, and gathered the men for a tea, linking with them the "coalies" of the district. This was about seven years ago. Recently this young man, Walter Prentice, begged the London City Mission to take charge of this new work, and offered himself as their missionary. Both requests were in due time granted, and about six months ago the movement was affiliated with the City Mission, with Prentice as the special missionary to the men.

Since then the whole of the North and North-West of London has been divided into four districts, each with its own committee and district secretary, and each having, once a quarter, a special social tea and meeting for the men under visitation. Thus, at the present time, about 4000 men are under regular visitation, and 600 or 700 men and their wives are gathered together quarterly to a distinctively Gospel meeting.

The results so far have been very encouraging. Over 300 temperance pledges have been taken, and many of the men are now in church fellowship, as a result of the ministry of the Mission among them. The want just now is a guarantee of about £25 per annum, to meet the expenses of meetings, teas, management, &c., a very modest sum indeed for so considerable a work. These poor men themselves contribute some £30 a year in small weekly and monthly subscriptions, which is the best proof that they value this effort for their moral and spiritual good. Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C., will answer inquiries respecting the work.

A SCRIPTURE-READER'S HOUSE WRECKED.—The house of a Protestant Scripture-reader in Galway, Mr. MacNamara, was attacked a few evenings ago, by a party of men, who smashed the furniture, and rendered the dwelling almost uninhabitable. Rev. T. Boland writes to us from Central House, Galway:—"I have been personally acquainted with Mr. MacNamara, and his wife and family, for years, and have known them to be most earnest and successful workers in the cause of Christ, for which alone the priests instigated this attack." A fund has been started to enable Mr. MacNamara to repair his house before the severe weather comes on, and to replace the furniture which has been broken.

UNITED PRAYER FOR MISSIONARY WORK.—In the present state of Friends' Missions there is much to call for thanksgiving and prayer. It has, therefore, been resolved to hold meetings for this purpose. The first is fixed for Thursday, November 6, and the place the Women's Large Committee Room, Devonshire House, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C. Account will be rendered of work, at home and abroad, and workers about to leave for distant spheres of labour will be wished God speed. The circular of invitation says: "The meetings will be open to men and women Friends, and all connected with our First-day schools and home mission meetings; and it is hoped that Friends who are unable to be in London at the time proposed, will meet together for prayer in their own districts, or unite in the spirit of intercesssion for an abundant blessing on the work and those engaged in it." Communications respecting the meetings should be addressed to H. S. Newman, Leominster.

VILLAGE WORK IN IRELAND.

WE thank God for what has been and is now being done in the southern parts of Ireland. But much remains yet to be done, and, as we look round on "fields white unto harvest," we are fain to ask, Where are the reapers?

With the exception of a few here and there, we find a mournful want of real hearty interest in those who are perishing for lack of knowledge.

My fellow-worker and myself have recently come from the north, where there are open doors on every hand; but we yearn to carry the message of salvation to those who are still "sitting in darkness, and in the shadow of death." We find them very willing as individuals to listen, but in the villages the way seems sadly blocked for gathering them together for meetings, for want of a place in which to hold any services. We would that God may open doors for us in this direction.

Will some who read this be roused from their apathy and indifference, and seek to let in the light on the souls of those who are kept in darkness and ignorance by those who are their professed leaders and guides? A. M. B.

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH.

THE best time to visit Gray's Yard, James-street, Oxford-street, is on a Sunday afternoon, between three and half-past four, when the new hall will be found filled with about 500 casuals, the Sunday-school being held in the adjoining building, at the same hour.

"To the poor the Gospel is preached." This briefly describes the services of the Ragged Church, and those who have watched the faces of that strangely mixed congregation are struck with the quiet attention with which they listen to the word. At the close of the meeting there is a distribution of tea and bread. Men who claim the benefits of the lodging-house and soup-kitchen seem really grateful for the cheap accommodation, supper of good soup and bread, bed with blanket and sheepskin coverlet, breakfast of tea or coffee and bread, all for fourpence, and plenty of soap and hot water into the bargain, not forgetting the attractions of the library, and the good fire which looks so inviting on a wet winter's night. It is no small thing that in the Sunday-school some 300 or 400 poor children should be brought week by week under the influence of loving Christian men and women, who care both for the bodies and souls of these little ones. Mr. A. G. Fraser, 22, Gloucester-place, Portman-square, W., is one of the honorary secretaries.

MILDMAY HOUSE, HASTINGS, a branch of the Y.W.C.A., has been well used during the busy summer season, when the house, 37, Wellington-square, was found far too small to accommodate the ever-varying crowd of city and other visitors. Gospel meetings were thankfully attended by many who realised that the spiritual food and heart refreshment went far to recruit weary bodies; and we believe that not a few found soul rest in Jesus. The benefit many of these young girls experienced during their stay is the subject of a continual stream of grateful testimony. The institute work has also been progressing.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—On Tuesday week the annual praise and prayer meeting of this society was held at Exeter Hall. Sir Robert Phayre presided, and gave a very animated and encouraging address. Fervent prayers followed, and a spirit of earnest supplication on behalf of the unhappy fallen women of the metropolis was evinced throughout the evening. Mr. Christian, the organising superintendent, announced that the society, in addition to their usual day and night meetings, were organising special arrangements in order to secure large gatherings of the fallen during Christmas week and the last nights of the old year.

RUSSIAN JEWS IN PALESTINE.

MY DEAR SIR—I read with deep, sympathetic interest, in your issue of October 10, the letter by "An Eyewitness," on "Russian Jews for Palestine," in which I was appealed to by name. I did not reply at once, as I wished to take time for thought and prayer. During the last few days several friends have called my attention to this letter, urging me to take up this work, and some have kindly promised pecuniary aid. We gratefully acknowledge the existence of workers among the Jews in Jaffa and Jerusalem, but none acquainted with the present aspect of the work, as depicted by "An Eyewitness," will deny that there is room for more workers, and, perhaps, room for some modification of old methods of work. We have, after much prayer, resolved to take up this work at once, and are laying out plans for New Testament distribution and preaching the Gospel, first to these immigrants to Palestine, making Jaffa our centre, and from that centre going out to visit Jews in Cairo, Smyrna, Salonica, Constantinople, and the Danubian Principalities. Our plans are not yet fully matured, so that we shall be grateful for the continued and earnest prayers of the Lord's people interested in Israel. We feel strongly that we are rapidly nearing the "time of Jacob's trouble," and the close of this dispensation.

May it be ours to be found at our post, occupying until He come.—Faithfully yours,

J. WILKINSON.

BIBLE-CLASS UNION.

THERE was a large attendance at the meeting of this Union in Exeter Hall on Saturday evening. The Union is composed of Bible-classes in houses of business. One recent sign of the vitality of the classes has been the tendency to branch out into classes for porters and apprentices, Dorcas societies, and prayer-meetings. Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, hoped great things would be accomplished this winter. He counselled them to aim at securing light, leading, and sweetness.

Rev. J. S. PRATT, of St. Stephen's, Clapham, gave his young audience some practical words on the necessity of combining religion with business. Rev. J. T. BRISCOE, of Peckham Rye, spoke of some of the dangers to which business young men are exposed. He warned them against amusements which did not recreate but exhaust. He deprecated countenancing the present-day disposition to doubt everything, and also described the demoralising results of betting. The antidote to these and other evils was a robust spiritual life. Among the other speakers was the head of a firm that has a Bible-class in its establishment. He thankfully acknowledged the assistance it gave to the young men in their employ.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Mrs. E. A. Duffield, from the capital city of the United States, who is at present staying at the House of Rest, 10, Finchley-road, N.W., writes to us:—"There is not in Washington a Christian reformatory which will admit a coloured young woman, unless in the capacity of a servant. Two girls, tired of a street life, applied for admission to a Rescue Home, but were turned away, and had to go back to their evil courses. In March last a few coloured ladies opened a small reading-room in a locality abounding in public-houses. The effort has been wonderfully blessed, and we have not room to accommodate the numbers who nightly frequent the place. There is a great need, in different parts of the city, for mission houses where men and women will be made welcome, irrespective of their colour. We trust that some Christians in this land of freedom will show an interest in work of this character." Communications to Mrs. Duffield may be addressed to the care of Miss Mason, at the House of Rest.

A STRIKING POLICY.

A GENERAL famed for victory,
Since a lost battle ne'er knew he,
When asked how such success could be,
Said, "'Tis my simple policy,
Advance, and strike!"

There is a lesson for us here—
Why should we ever faint or fear?
Soldiers of Jesus, forward go,
And, dreading not the stoutest foe,
"Advance, and strike!"

We must not on our laurels rest,
Much land remains to be possessed;
God's truth needs no apology,
And this should e'er our motto be,
"Advance, and strike!"

And we may hear, like trumpet sound:
"Upon the multitude around—
The Lord of hosts your Sun and Shield,
With weapons you for Him may wield—
'Advance, and strike!'"

Advance upon the heathen world,
Our banner never must be furled,
On which these words in beauty shine,
"The world for Christ," our Lord Divine,
"Advance, and strike!"

Advance, though pierced by many a wound,
Advance, till every inch of ground
Is conquered for our blessed Lord,
Whose voice, methinks, now speaks the word:
"Advance, and strike!"

Oh, let us never slumbering lie!
If we would sing of victory,
Then we must dare to do or die,
And this must be our policy,
"Advance, and strike!"

MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.

DEAR SIR,—There are some inaccuracies in the published notes of the meeting held at the Home of Industry on the 15th instant. I can hardly allow to pass without correction the statement that I "mentioned the desire to send out one thousand missionaries the coming year." I did refer to the appeal for a thousand additional missionaries for China; but I did not name any limit of time. The words "the coming year" have been added in error. I referred to the excellent article by Dr. Wright in the current number of The Contemporary Review, on "The Forward Movement in China," and I quoted the paragraph bearing on the appeal for a thousand missionaries. This paragraph is worth reproducing in your columns. It is as follows:—

"This large demand is as eminently reasonable as at first sight it appears startling. Looked at from the statistical point of view, it seems that there are still in China 300 centres, with populations of over 200,000 each, unoccupied by the missionaries, and 200 centres of 100,000 each. These alone, without taking into account the groups of population under 100,000, form an aggregate of 80,000,000 souls still beyond the influence of the missionaries in China. The above items are given on the authority of Dr. Ashmore, who has been in China since 1851, and who, from his great experience and ability, is well qualified to speak on such matters. If Dr. Ashmore's approximations are correct, there would be a field of 80,000 souls for each of the thousand missionaries."

Yours, B. BROOMHALL, Sec.

ADULT SCHOOLS IN LONDON.—The half-yearly meeting of the Council of Delegates from the Adult Schools in London was recently held in the Memorial Buildings, Bunhill-row. There were present delegates from over twenty schools, with an average attendance together of eleven hundred scholars every Sunday. Practical papers were read bearing on the work, followed by lively discussions. It was decided to publish a pamphlet stating fully the aims and objects of Adult Schools, with notes on how to start and maintain new schools, and some causes of success and failures. A large public meeting was held in the evening, G. B. Sully, J.P., of Burnham, Somerset, taking the chair.

THE CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

More than eighteen years have gone by since the first packages of Christmas Letters were sent out from Brighton to the Sussex County and a few other hospitals. Those parcels represented an entirely new departure, which, with the blessing of God, has been so extended that last Christmas upwards of 650,000 letters were scattered, making a total since 1871 of about five millions and a half in English and other languages. The Letter distribution has always been accompanied by an enclosure of Christmas and New Year's cards with Gospel texts.

The report recently issued contains interesting testimonies. One earnest worker writes:—"In the parish distribution the letters are quite as acceptable as elsewhere. Women have been led to attend the mothers' meeting after having had their interest in the Bible excited by their means. In many cases those who have been overlooked have asked for 'their letter,' and others have testified that they had found them not only interesting but profitable. A special letter ('General Use,' No. 4) was particularly useful to a dying man. It was the last thing he read before his eyes closed on earthly things, and it is now the treasure, never to be parted with, of his sorrowing widow. But perhaps more pleasing than all is the reception given to the letters by the omnibus and tramcar men, a class with so few advantages, so many temptations, and who meet in general with so little sympathy or consideration from the public. Those who have had them in previous years speak of having five letters at home which they read over and over again when they have a day off work. Others have framed their cards; and for weeks before Christmas many are asking about the letters, again and again begging their thanks to the senders, and wishing them a happy Christmas and New Year."

Beside the varied letters adapted for general distribution, others are year by year specially issued for members of Bible and communicant classes, mothers' (suitable for mothers' meetings), various for the sick and nurses, various for the aged and for children (profusely illustrated; suitable for schools and teachers' gifts), railway men, postmen, cabmen, tram and omnibus drivers, the blind (Moon and Braille types), "Nothing to Nobody," &c. Thus the Mission is enabled, as a handmaid to established work, to strengthen such work with special season appropriateness, and, at a time of special pressure, to furnish bright and attractive missives needing only a signature, and, if desired, a few added lines, to constitute each letter a personal and individual greeting. By the inmates of workhouses, infirmaries, &c., the "one letter in the year" is looked for with keenest anticipation. "We call them our love letters," said one gentle inmate of a Cornwall workhouse. Sent forth by Christian love, with the message of Christmas love, the appellation is no misnomer. Further information may be had from the organising secretary and treasurer, Miss E. Steele Elliott, 66, Mildmay Park, N.

WEEK OF UNITED AND UNIVERSAL PRAYER.—The Evangelical Alliance annual invitation and programme has been issued, signed by representatives of foreign branches of the Alliance as well as the British organisation. The "week" extends from January 4 to 11, and the topics suggested for exhortation and prayer are:—Sunday, January 4, subject for sermons, "The Glory of the Triune God;" Monday, "Confession and Thanksgiving;" Tuesday, "The Church Universal;" Wednesday, "Nations and their Rulers;" Thursday, "Home Evangelisation and Missions to the Jews;" Friday, "Missions to Mohammedans and the Heathen;" Saturday, "Our Families;" Sunday, January 11, subject for sermons: "The Manifestation of Christ in his People." Programmes, giving details, may be had from the offices of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

OUR READING.*

We give some extracts from a pamphlet which, from its attractive style, will probably be read with interest by all into whose hands it is put. It will suggest serious thoughts to many, while its needful cautions should prove useful in many directions:—

"In these days of compulsory and free education, when books are so cheap, a most important question is how to induce a demand for really good and profitable reading, and how to counteract the taste for that which is harmful.

"The Free Libraries Act, which has been recently adopted in so many towns, is, it is to be feared, placing many good people in the position of being unwillingly taxed to supply, gratis, to all comers, along with much that is good, not only sentimental rubbish, but even moral poison. Popularity-hunting philanthropists may enlarge upon the blessings which free libraries are to the community, but their view of the matter is too often superficial and thoughtless, or they would not fail to see that the advantages are largely counterbalanced by serious evils inseparable from an attempt to pander to the tastes of all.

"The chief feature of the day is the craving for sensational writing. The harm thus done to the rising generation is incalculable. The chief reading of the poor in our English towns is literary garbage, and it is producing a crop of blasted lives and grave social perils. No greater duty can be laid on philanthropists than to combat this evil. Nearly twenty years ago a publisher's periodical said that among educated persons, too, a sensational literature which vividly describes the sins committed against society has become fashionable. And if, as Sir Joshua Reynolds said, 'A room hung with pictures is a room hung with thoughts,' what are likely to be the thoughts suggested by many of our modern hoarding advertisements?

"Among the masses those newspapers seem to be preferred which, in return for a halfpenny, give more excitement, more strong language, and more bad printing than any others. The railway bookstall is certainly a convenient place for the study of men and manners. As to the omission of profitable matter, it is worse than useless to complain of the newspaper editors. As soon as the readers are ready for columns about a missionary conference these will be forthcoming.

"But we cannot imagine any man of religious principle who owns or edits a paper acting upon the assumption that the duty of the press is simply to reflect public opinion, and to make no attempt to form it. In many quarters a thin veneer of moral sentiment will obtain entrance for writing which is the product of deliberate atheism. The daily press may sanctify itself by carrying voices from the servants of God into the homes of the people; but never by merely printing the 'funny' point in the sermon that made the congregation 'titter.' A librarian in one of our largest cities testifies from long experience that schoolboys or students who take to novel-reading to any extent never make much progress in after life. They neglect real practical life for a sensually imaginative one.

"We find in some novels, religion travestied as fanaticism, humility termed pusillanimity, virtue ridiculed as prudery, and holiness laughed at as absurd preciseness. The providence of Jehovah is vilified as fatalism, and the retributions of eternity as fables of gloomy austere enthusiasts. Revenge is dignified as a lofty sense of honour, and wealth with beauty are made higher standards of excellence than virtue or intelligence. Sensuality is sanctioned as innocent indulgence, or softened into one of the many infirmities to which flesh is heir.

"It is to be feared that among some young people there is much secret reading of bad books; but there is also a good deal of very questionable reading by children who are simply ignorant that they tread upon dangerous ground. It is very necessary that someone in authority should scrutinise the books which young people read, and teach them to discriminate between the wheat and the tares. With many small dealers who sell penny dreadfuls evil is wrought from want of thought; but many better-class booksellers sell much which is questionable, and justify themselves by the demand and the fact that it pays—a miserable plea for a professed Christian.

"May God grant that, even in this busy, pleasure-loving age, amidst the multitude of books which invite our attention, his Word may ever occupy the first place, and form the most important part of all our reading."

The Nonconformist ministers of Hull unitedly opposed the renewal of a drink licence for Buxtonville Gardens, and it was refused.

In connection with the Wesleyan Mission on the Panama Canal there is a flourishing temperance society. After only one year's work the membership is 110.

Mr. Charles Watson, Halifax, one of the staunchest friends of temperance in the kingdom, has passed away. He was noted for extraordinary zeal in the distribution of temperance literature.

The Liverpool magistrates have refused further applications by public-house managers for transfers of licences, and a number set down for hearing were withdrawn. The magistrates' action has caused consternation in interested circles.

The arrangements for Mr. Caine's temperance crusade in India are practically complete. The hon. gentleman expects to reach Bombay on November 15, and he will proceed to the South and visit all the temperance associations organised there during the last two winters by his energetic lieutenant, Mr. Evans. Mr. Caine's object is not so much to organise as to ascertain how far the Indian Government has carried out the wish of Parliament to suppress the outstill and improve the administration of the excise in general.

PARIS MISSION TO THE JEWS.—More commodious premises than those hitherto occupied in Rue Malher have been taken for this Mission. The hall and dispensary are now situate at 21, Quai aux Fleurs, just opposite the Hotel de Ville, across the Seine. Miss Palmer, the hon. treasurer, writes: "The Lord is exceedingly merciful to us, and the work is going on splendidly."

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—Conferences in connection with this Mission have lately been held at Stirling and Doncaster. At the Stirling Conference, interesting accounts were given of conversions through visiting and sending The Railway Signal to men on the line. Encouraging reports were given of progress and blessing in the Mission. Great need exists in Glasgow for ladies to engage in the work. The Doncaster Conference was also full of interest. Large meetings were held in the Corn Exchange on the following Sunday, when striking testimonies were given by the railwaymen. The secretary will be grateful to hear of any ladies who can undertake to send The Railway Signal to men at outlying stations. Address, 18, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

"ALCOHOL AND CHILDHOOD" is the title of a pamphlet issued at 2d. by the Church of England Temperance Society, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, being the report of an afternoon Conference, held in June, at Sion College, Victoria Embankment. The Duke of Westminster presided, and many eminent medical gentlemen took part by speech or letter. Sir Henry Thompson expressed the opinion that "Ill health in later years is largely due to a life of conformity to the error of regarding alcohol as a necessary article of diet; and one of the first duties of a parent is to secure his offspring from needless evils of that kind. I say nothing of the moral evil associated therewith, not less but more important." Among other cases, Dr. Thomas More Madden speaks of a boy of eight, admitted into a Dublin hospital suffering from delirium tremens; and of three children, under eleven years of age, reeling drunk out of a publichouse on a Sunday afternoon. Alcoholic tendencies may be inherited, but need not be developed; and it is physiologically wrong as well as morally unjustifiable ever to allow a healthy child to taste alcohol in any form. Dr. Barlow (of University College and Children's Hospital) related instances of child diseases traceable to administration of alcohol; and Dr. Clement Dukes showed that beer is a drug which deadens the will power and excites animal instincts in the young. Its relation, therefore, to immorality is most momentous.

The Gospel in Spain.—1.

By J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

THE ROMISH PROGRAMME ON THEIR OWN SHOWING.

Apologists for the Papacy are wont to endeavour to show that the Church of Rome, as it exists in our times, is by no means the scheming and deceitful institution of the Middle Ages; but a practically reformed and purified body, thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the age, and only too happy to favour liberty of conscience and the spread of education. It is in England and America, where perforce it has to "grin and bear it," playing the part of the fox without the grapes, that it wears this aspect. In less favoured countries it is otherwise, and there it sometimes ventures to show its hand in a manner which in England would mean ruin to its fondest hopes.

The more I get to know of the actual practice of those whom the Spaniards nickname "crows"—the priests who pick their bones—the more I am convinced that the so-called Church which sends them forth is the masterpiece of the enemy of souls. Idolatry as practised among the heathen and even the soft blandishments of Mohammedanism are but clumsy substitutes for the truth, in comparison with this. They may have sufficed to satisfy the yearnings of less cultured minds for the satisfaction of being "just with God," but here is something infinitely more subtle, infinitely more treacherous.

The following conclusions arrived at by the members of the recent Romanist Congress at Saragossa are translated from a Madrid daily, El Imparcial, and serve to express in their own words what the representatives of the Papacy in Spain care to make public of their present tactics:—

(1) To protest solemnly against the liberty of worship.
(2) To work without resting to bring about the constitution of [Roman] Catholic unity.
(3) To solicit full liberty of religious teaching, and the prohibition of all schools which are not [Roman] Catholic.
(4) To solicit also the prohibition of work on holy days.
(5) To permit religious students to be redeemed from the military service.
(6) To establish [Roman] Catholic libraries in all the barracks.
(7) To obtain the recognition of the right of the churches to acquire property without any limit at all.
(8) To found [Roman] Catholic working men's centres where such do not exist, establishing a federation in which masters and men, with Christian spirit, may be able to decide the social problem with justice.

A brief consideration of the points involved in these resolutions will give an excellent idea of the comparatively straightforward portion of the policy of Rome in Spain at the present day. Let us take them one by one in their order:—

(1) This alone is sufficient to show what a thorn in the side of the priestcraft the Gospel work is proving, however apparently insignificant; for there is no other enemy to be feared in this direction.

(2) This is practically a corollary to (1), the "unity" aimed at being, in other words, the reinstatement of Popery as the only legal religion in Spain, with the consequent establishment of a nineteenth century Inquisition, as sure and subtle in its workings as of yore, but attired to suit the spirit of the age. Once the law of the land declares the profession of any other faith illegal, the whole machinery of that truly fiendish institution is again set in motion; for the religious tribunal has only to declare So-and-so an offender against this law, and hand him over to the arm of the State, directed, and in fact worked, by the priests themselves.

(3) Here is another word of encouragement to the labourers in, and supporters of, the Protestant schools in Spain. If they did not affect the minds of the people they would be left alone. The thanks of their friends are due to the prelates of the Peninsula for their gratuitous recognition of this still humble work. At the same time it should be noted that the "full liberty of religious teaching," viewed in the light of the rider which follows, can mean nothing else than liberty to saturate the minds of the young with the thousand and one lies of Rome, and forbid to them the key of truth—the Bible—under threat of the Inquisition.

(4) This means placing another weapon in the hands of the Church, for the "holy days" are legion, and of course their number can only be decided by the clergy. The prohibition of work on one day in the week as a social benefit, by securing the much-needed proportion of rest to the labouring masses, is a most desirable consummation; but this means quite another thing, with its consequent penalties and sales of "indulgences."

(5) Here is a comparatively reasonable proposition, though only to be rendered fair by including other professions; but evidently intended to stand alone as an inducement to the youth of the country to swell the clerical ranks.

(6) This is the most legitimate and straightforward proposal of all, against which nothing can be said; but to cope with which the Protestants of England should determine to place a selection of suitable Gospel works side by side with the Papist tomes in every instance.

(7) Here we have the fellow resolution to (2), carefully separated from it, and sliced in between the only two which profess to seek the welfare of the people, that the real aim of the whole Congress might not be too transparent or look too formidable. In other words this means the replacement of the vast riches of the Church, which have been preyed upon since its back was broken by Crown, State, and mob, by the original means of collecting it, the forced dying depositions of the wealthy, and the bleeding of the country yet once more to fatten cardinals. The Spaniards themselves have a saying, that the canon of the Romish Church may be summed up in these words, "Todo para mi, y nada para vos"—"All for me and none for you;" it is hardly possible that they will again afford liberty for the practice of such a precept.

(8) A very pretty snare is this to entrap the simple artisan, who fancies, after a good meal and the day's news-sheet, that he knows as much of the world and the devil as the Prime Minister himself. But the old serpent has many coats, and here he is in something "very taking." Anyone who professes to deal with what the lower-class Spaniard knows of the "Social Problem" is listened to with avidity, for those who hold opinions averse to the interests of the masses usually hold their tongues when in their presence. Yes, the little game is to lassoo the many in this fashion, and at the same time to cultivate the patronage of the rich, as being the guides of their troublesome employés, always with an eye to business, as expressed in the preceding resolution.

So much for the tactics of Rome in Spain, and, as "forewarned is forearmed," let us prepare to meet the foe in his own trenches, but that not in our weakness, but at the bidding and in the strength of the Lord of hosts, our Captain and our Guide, ever keeping close to Him, and trusting Him alone to give his victory in due time.

MISSIONARY ARROWROOT.—Owing to the loss at sea of the Dunedin, the 1889 supply of the Aneityum arrowroot sent to the Free Church of Scotland by the native Christians as their contribution to Gospel ordinances was destroyed, though it was covered by insurance. The 1890 supply is short, owing to hurricanes which swept Aneityum. But that and part of the supply from Nguna, in the same New Hebrides group, South Pacific, is now available at 1s. 3d. per lb., plus parcel post rate; on application to Messrs. Dymock, Guthrie & Howden, 135, George-street, Edinburgh.

MISSIONS & FOREIGN RESIDENTS.

Dear Sir,—In reading the report of the Missionary Conference at Shanghai in The Christian of July 4, I noticed the remarks upon the paper read and the discussion which followed upon "The Relation of Christian Missions to Foreign Residents." Your correspondent says they both "failed to touch the great point of getting foreigners saved, taking it for granted, apparently, that they were either already saved or could not be saved." These words indicate a very general feeling among missionaries that they are in no way responsible for the foreign residents, but that they are sent to the heathen alone. Is not this an unscriptural limitation of our Master's command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature?" Does not this include the foreign resident as well as the heathen native?

St. Paul, the great Apostle to the Gentiles, who was set apart by God for this special work, never forgot the claims of his own countrymen. "To the Jew first, and also to the Gentile" was his invariable rule, and in his longing earnest desire for their salvation he says: "I could wish that I were myself accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." Every year hundreds of young men leave England for commercial situations abroad. Who is to look after them? The answer is prompt—"the Church." And who are the representatives of the Church in heathen lands but missionaries?

If missionaries pass them by on the other side, and content themselves by writing home sad reports of their evil lives, yet at the same time making no practical effort to save them, what hope, humanly speaking, is there for them? True, the account of God's work amongst foreign residents is not such interesting reading as conversions from among the heathen. "But doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it? and He that keepeth thy soul doth not He know it? and shall not He render to every man according to his work?"

I feel sure that much of our fruitless work among the heathen arises from the Church's sinful neglect of our fellow-countrymen abroad. I may appear to write strongly, but in the light of the following facts not, I believe, too much so. In a seven years' residence in a British colony, during which time I frequently came in contact with missionaries, no missionary ever made the slightest advance to me, or appeared to manifest the slightest interest in my spiritual welfare; while at the same time I was longing for help and advice from one who was able to give it.

I write this in the belief that my experience is not uncommon, and that missionaries would find foreign residents far more approachable than is generally supposed. Genuine sympathy and a desire to become all things to all men will find a way into most hearts. None but those who have passed through it know the many temptations to which commercial young men abroad are exposed, and how much they need Christian help and sympathy. In closing, may I quote the remark made to a missionary friend of mine, who never loses the opportunity of stretching out the hand of brotherly sympathy to sin-sick souls: "Mr. ——, if there were more missionaries like you we traders should not live the lives that we do."

HOXTON HALL.—The aggressive Gospel Temperance Movement started here in 1878 has gradually assumed the character of a permanent Mission, and the various classes of frequenters have distinct sectional organisations. One man brought the first money saved since he ceased to use strong drink for transmission to his aged mother. Young men are protected from the contaminations of East-end thoroughfares. Women and girls are taught, not only the Gospel, and temperance, but all that relates to social ethics. It has been proved that those thoughtlessly called "confirmed drunkards" can, by kind and wise action, be rescued from drink's thraldom. Over 300 children come trooping into school every Sunday and from 130 to 150 infants. At Christmas time a free dinner stirred up much enthusiasm among a great number of very poor children, mostly those outside the school. No less than two hundred helpers are engaged in regular effort in connection with the hall. Mr. W. P. Goulding, 41, Moorgate-street, E.C., is treasurer.

Persecution in Peru.

At the close of 1888, two colporteurs of the American Bible Society, J. B. Arancet and J. Q. Illescas, working under the direction of Rev. F. Penzotti, agent on the Pacific coast, visited the village of Cocachacra. This village is situated in the valley of the river Tambo, which falls into the Pacific Ocean a few leagues south of the port of Mollendo.

Here, as everywhere in South America, until the minds of the people were prejudiced and overborne by the priest, there was manifested a strong desire to possess the Scriptures. No sooner did this become known to the priest than he poisoned the minds of the poor Indian villagers, and so incited them against the colporteurs that, under his leadership they gathered together, to the number of about two hundred, and actually threatened to put them to death by stoning.

Of course the priest was too wily to assume the responsibility of accompanying the mob. The colporteurs really thought that they had but a few more moments to live, and Mr. Arancet asked to be allowed to commend himself to God, which being granted, he prayed, and then said, "Now you can do whatever you wish." Just then the local magistrate came up and rescued the colporteurs, taking them to his own house, where he kept them till the next day, when, the fury of the populace being abated, he sent them away.

As soon as Mr. Penzotti received the news of this outburst, he felt it to be his duty to place himself by the side of his colporteurs; but by the time he could get to Cocachacra they had already gone to Arequipa, the capital of the Departamento, a city notable as being the most ultramontane in Peru. The first day after his arrival at Arequipa, Mr. Penzotti met with no obstacle to his work, and sold a good many books. Early on the second day, however, while in the act of selling a New Testament to a man on the street, the bishop happened to pass by, and, seeing the man eagerly examining the book, he called the first policeman that he saw, and ordered him to arrest Mr. Penzotti. Having apprehended him, they set out in search of the colporteurs, and, as soon as they had all the three secured, they proceeded to confiscate the books, and, in violation of four different articles of the Peruvian Constitution, they kept them in confinement for nineteen days, when they were liberated in virtue of a telegram from Lima. So servile to the curia ecclesiastica are the civil authorities of Arequipa that, had it not been for the activity of the Italian Consul on the spot, and the intervention of the Italian Minister at Lima, they would no doubt have lain in prison for an indefinite time, without being brought to trial.

On asking for the boxes of books that had been confiscated, Mr. Penzotti was informed that they had been burnt; but when the municipal authorities discovered that they would have to be paid for, they restored them after a delay of some two months. Persons who have never lived in a Roman Catholic country can form no idea of the utter disregard for truth and right that this form of religion produces among all classes of society.

Wherever the Scriptures are put into circulation they invariably create a desire for the preaching of the Gospel, and Mr. Penzotti had been but a short time at work in Callao, the centre of his operations, when a group of people, who had purchased Bibles, and wished for a better knowledge of them, gathered around him to hear his expositions.

At first they were but few, and very poor; but interest deepened, and the number speedily increased, so that in a very short time they rented and furnished a meeting-room.

It is true that in the Peruvian Constitution there still exists an article that recognises the Roman Catholic as the State religion, and prohibits the public exercise of all other forms of worship; but this has for a generation been a dead letter, as is manifest from the fact that in the same city of Callao there have existed both church and school buildings for English-speaking Protestants for more than twenty years; as also in Lima, the capital, for a somewhat shorter period; while for the pagan worship of the Chinese there are more than thirty different places in Lima and Callao—one, in fact, located within a few yards of Mr. Penzotti's meeting-room; yet none of these have been subjected to any persecution whatever.

Inasmuch as the article of the Constitution that speaks of religion makes no exception on the account of language, and seeing that there are now thousands of Spanish-speaking Protestants outside of Peru, it is difficult to see the reason why there should be in Mr. Penzotti's particular case a restoration of the proceedings of the Inquisition. Yet so it has been. The persecution began by violent attacks in the press, and by writing on the door, and front of the meeting-room, "Death to the Protestants."

From threats of this kind they proceeded to maltreatment of the adherents. When none of these things served to intimidate them, application was made to the local authority against them. This gentleman promised to look into the matter, and did so by attending the next meeting.

Instead of finding anything to be punished, he found much to approve, and so intimated to the complainants when they came back to see what he had resolved to do. Foiled in this, they had recourse to the Archbishop in Lima, and the local authority in Callao notified Mr. Penzotti that they must hold their meetings with closed doors, which has been done from that time onward.

The Archbishop came from Lima, and made a public procession in the street, where the meeting-house is, and halted in front of the door for some minutes, probably to exorcise the unclean spirits. The next step was to institute a criminal prosecution against Mr. Penzotti for violation of the Fourth Article of the Constitution.

This was commenced in April, while the writer, in company with Dr. Drees, superintendent of the South American Mission of the M.E. Church, was on the ground; but it was not believed that it could be sustained at this period of the history of Peru. Recent letters from Mr. Penzotti, however, inform us that he has actually been thrown into prison in Callao. Mr. Penzotti has a congregation of more than a hundred and fifty members, who have been received on profession of their faith in the short period of less than two years, and, instead of being discouraged, their zeal is increased by the persecutions which they suffer.

Characteristic of the man, the prisoner asks prayer, not for his own deliverance, but for the liberty of Peru. It seems to us that if the Evangelical Alliance would bring its influence to bear on this matter it would greatly accelerate that end.

RESCUE WORK IN RICHMOND.—As the result of an address by Miss Ellice Hopkins, at the "Star and Garter," in 1881, the hearts of some ladies in this neighbourhood were stirred to reach and help girls and women fallen from virtue. Since then the work has gone on with many vicissitudes of hope and discouragement, until a permanent Refuge and Shelter was formed at 54, Larkfield, where Miss Box is the devoted matron. A missionary, Miss Tavender, also traverses the most frequented thoroughfares at night, in the hope of finding some who are willing to be saved from a life of shame. The very first night of entering upon her work, she found a young married woman who had "come out" for the first time, because she and her husband and their little girl were starving. She was sent back to Isleworth unstained, and some permanent help found for her. The hon. treasurer is Mr. Head, Sunnyside, Richmond.

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

TENT WORK.

In spite of rains and storms during the past summer, the Evangelization Society has prosecuted its Gospel work under canvas with undiminished energy and encouraging success. In a modest pamphlet of some fifty pages, which has just been issued, a summary is given of the operations of the Society during the past few months, in this particular department of the service.

The report says: "This year we have provided preachers for forty-eight tents, twenty-five of which are the property of the society, and the others that of private individuals or of associations." With these tents, 204 places have been visited by sixty-nine evangelists. Most of these places are in country districts, where missions are almost an impossibility, except by such means. Generally, the evangelists meet with welcome, but sometimes prejudice raises opposition to their work. In one of the Eastern Counties, both the vicar and the Wesleyan minister resisted the coming of the tent, but it is pleasing to learn that "at the end of the visit, both vicar and minister were at the tent, giving their aid to what they recognised as a good work, and one that had God's blessing."

It is gratifying to find that the fruit of former missions appeared in several places, and those who during the first season had been brought to know the Lord were this year among the most earnest and faithful workers.

A lady, writing of a village in Kent, says: "The whole tone of this place is changed. Some of the most hardened have been brought to a knowledge of the truth, and the change in some of them is most remarkable." Other testimonies of a similar kind are given in the report, and serve to show how solid and real is the work.

The hon. secretary calls attention to the heavy expenditure connected with the work. The tents are expensive, and seldom last more than two or three seasons, and this only with the greatest care. In view of the great need for such work, and for missions during the winter months, we hope that the necessary funds will be forthcoming.

That its work is appreciated is evidenced in many ways, and particularly by the fact that in one day alone in the past month (September) applications were received for 240 meetings, and all these in places where the people could not bear their own expenses.

All communications should be addressed to the Hon. Sec., Evangelization Society, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, London, W.C.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—A letter of protest to the Bishop of London from the Church Association with respect to the recent "Service of Reconciliation," thus concludes:—"We fail to understand why a cathedral should be supposed to be polluted by a breach of the Sixth Commandment through the act of an irresponsible lunatic, while you publicly refuse to admit that any reparation is due to the Almighty God for a yet more flagrant and continuous violation therein of his Second Commandment."

THE CRIPPLES' HOME continues to shelter a large and helpless family in the new premises, 17A, Marylebone-road, W., re-opened last year by Princess Christian. The annual report shows that last year thirty-six girls were admitted. Four went into service, one has been apprenticed, and a few others have left. The year closed with eighty-six girls in the Home. Crippled girls, not under twelve years of age, are received for a period of three years, educated on Christian principles, and taught a trade. Some are received to do the domestic work and wait upon their afflicted companions. Basket-work, needlework, and straw bonnets and hats are largely made in the Home, and suggest one means of helping this beneficent work, which has been carried on since 1851. Some kind friends are found to conduct Bible-classes and devotional meetings in the Home.

For the Young.

By Annie R. Butler.

[concluded.]

V.—Crossing the River. (The Mother's Story.)

My little Kathie has gone to Heaven. Oh, how can I write it? During all last week she was very, very ill, although I did not despair, and the doctor gave me great hope.....

Towards evening Kathie asked me to pray with her. She said she felt so very ill, she could not pray herself. She told me that she had been praying all the night before when she was not asleep, but that now she could not pray at all. I prayed with her, and then repeated a little verse:—

"Lord, my frame is faint and weary,
And I feel too weak to pray;
But Thine arms are all around me,
And Thou art my only stay."

It was new to her; and she thought it beautiful. After a time she said, "Say it again, mother," and soon she asked for it again.

About half-past six Madame Pons came in with Monsieur Pons, who had only arrived that day. He had not yet seen Kathie. He stayed some time; and then said he would like to pray if she could bear it. I asked her if she would like it. She said, "Oh, yes." He prayed most beautifully; and soon afterwards left.

When he had gone she said to me, "What a beautiful prayer!" By-and-by she said, "Mother, pray again with me." Then, after submitting to something which had to be done for her, she said, "What a lot of things I have earned for my dolly!"

During all this illness Kathie's great desire had been to have a new big dolly when she got well—a very big one, with lots of clothes properly made, so that she could dress and undress it. I promised to buy her one, and said that each time she had various things done for her, she should gain something for its trousseau. I had to write down each time what she had gained; and oh, the intense joy the prospect of having this doll was to her!

With all her development and intelligence, Kathie was a thorough child. She rejoiced in her little life, in her play, and in her little sister. She loved her so! How tenderly she watched over her and guarded her, playing with her for hours! All through her illness her great joy was to have baby come to the door and kiss her hand to her. When well enough, she always prepared some little surprise for her. Either she had dressed a little doll, or I must get a biscuit ready, or something: and an hour before the time for baby to come up, she chattered to me in anticipation of her visit; and for long afterwards. Baby was the very delight of her heart. She loved the boys; but this little sister was especially dear to her. But I must go back to her last night.....

I said, "My little lamb, I think Jesus is going to take you to be with Him in Heaven."

She looked at me in astonishment. I could see that the thought had not come to her. She replied, "Do you think so, mother dear? Madame Pons's little girl was much worse than I am; and she got well."

"Yes, darling," I said, "but she had not this illness; and I know you are going to Him."

She lay quietly for some little time, and then opened her eyes and said, "Mother, it is all true. I think I am going to Heaven; I feel so very ill."

"Are you afraid, my love?" I said.

"Oh no! mother," she answered with a smile.

"Are you glad, darling?"

"Yes," she said, "now I am very glad. I was not at first. I wanted to stay and be your little comfort; but I am glad now: and I hope Jesus will come quickly and take me."

Then I said, "Does my little girl think she is going to Heaven because she has always been so good?"

"Oh no! mother," she said. "Jesus died for me. He has washed me in His blood. I am His little lamb."

"Darling," I said, "you will soon be safe in His fold, and see His face." She smiled, and I thought that her last moments were come....

Then began a night of such glory and beauty! I little thought my darling was so ripe. She had talked but little of herself, and we had always dreaded any precociousness, and never forced anything with her; but now we saw what she had stored up in her little heart. She said, "Pray again, mother; not that I may get well, but that the angels may soon come and take me."

I prayed as she asked me, and she said, "That's it," with a glad smile. Presently she said, "Sing, mother,

'Here we suffer grief and pain.'"

I tried, but could not. She said, "Why mother, you can't sing."

Nurse knew it in French: "Ici pleurer et souffrir;" and she took up the hymn, and sang it, Kathie beginning each verse for her.....

She asked, "Whom shall I see in Heaven, mother? Oh, I shall see Auntie Etta, and Auntie Lizzie, and Mrs Morgan, and Mr. Stott, and Grannie, and two grandfathers and—who else, mother?"

I said, "I don't think any one else that you will know, dearie."

"Oh yes," she said, "there must be somebody else. Ah, I remember; Verena, the little girl who died at Lausanne. I shall see her. Ah, but Verena suffered a great deal more than I do." Poor darling, she was suffering so much herself, such constant agony; but she did not murmur.

I said, "My poor little lamb is suffering much; but she is Jesus' little lamb too, and He will not let her suffer more than she can bear."

"No," she murmured, "Jesus sufferd much more for me." Then she added, "I'm papa's little lamb too."

Presently she said, "Baby must be your little comfort now, mother"; and then she asked, "Who will have my little room at the Maison A.?" There was a wee room which she had been promised for her own for the next winter—the first time she had ever had a room to herself; and she had so rejoiced to think she could put her dolly there and her treasures, and be alone. "I think," she said, "you had better keep it for your little room, mother, until baby is old enough to have it."

Often she put her little icy-cold arm round my neck, and told me she loved me; and every now and again, as the sickness came on, she cried out, "Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

She again asked me to pray. Then she turned to me and said, "Mother, you won't put on a black dress for me, will you? I don't want you to."

I said, "Why, darling?"

"Oh," she replied, "You must rejoice that I that I am going to live with Jesus, and not cry for me. Please, mother, don't wear black."

For a moment I left her and went on the the balcony to calm myself, and then I heard her say to the nurse—

"Vous direz à mon père et aussi à ma mère que quand ils auront un petit ange au ceil, ils ne devront pas pleurer." *

"Non, chérie," replied the nurse, "tu seras un petit ange avec de belles fleurs." †

"Mais non," she said, "pas fleurs: une couronne et une harpe d'or." ‡ And she opened her eyes wide.

She could scarcely speak now; she was getting weak, very weak. I knew she could not last till her father's arrival. By-and-by the last moments came. It was now half-past seven. I saw she was going. She began to gasp; she tried to speak, but could not. I said, "My love, you are now crossing the river. Look! Jesus is putting out His hand. You will soon see the Celestial City." She made a supreme effort to say something; over and over again she repeated it. I tried to catch it, but in vain. Then nurse said, "Say it in French that I may listen." Then in Frenh she repeated it: "Je suis heureuse." †

"Heureuse?" we asked.

"Oui, heureuse," she replied, smiling. And putting out her little hands, she drew her last breath, and was gone.....

VI. After-Fruits.

"The little one shall become a thousand . . . I the Lord will hasten it in its time."—Isa. lx 22, R. V.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; for they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them." Blessed is our little Kathleen, who from her very nature seemed fitted to enjoy intensely the beauties and delights of Heaven. And her work on earth is not done. From the broken earthly casket comes the fragrant memory of a life on which the power of Christ rested—of a death over which Satan had no power.....And thus is Kathie still honouring her Lord.....

And the work which came so near the little missionary heart, the cause to which she and her mother (mentally) had pledged her life—"my Medical Mission," as she called it—we cannot believe that it will suffer because she has been taken to higher service.

"Do try to give Herbert the taste for collecting," she said to her mother with her dying breath. Will not many young brothers (besides the four of her own that she has left), and sisters too, be stirred up on reading this story to give, first their own selves to the Lord, and afterwards to this work by the will of God—so that "Little Kathleen" may have many substitutes in the home work now, and many representatives in the home and foreign mission field in the time to come?

Those who would like to help on the work that Kathie loved can write to—

(Miss) Annie R. Butler,
Children's Secretary, who will be glad to hear from them, and answer their letters; and to receive the names of any who would like to join the "Kathleen Band" of the "Children's Auxiliary of the Medical Missionary Association."

"The Christian" Almanac, 1891.

The old world story of the Israelitish youth who rose through pit and prison to the post of Premier in Egypt is one of undying interest and worth; not only as a true tale of Eastern romance, but as a unique illustration of the value of piety, purity of life, and fidelity in service. Perhaps no more striking commentary on the Divine promise, "Them that honour Me I will honour," can be found in all the archives of the world's literature, ancient or modern. By the aid of the skilled artist we have represented in "The Christian" Almanac for 1891 (which forms a supplement to our current issue) some of the leading incidents in Joseph's eventful life. These sketches, we believe, present to the eye, with graphic realism, the peculiarities of Oriental costume, custom, and architecture. The artistic finish of the pictures, and the very ingenious colouring of the whole series, add to their attractiveness, and help to make them worthy of the subject. The well-developed ears of corn make an appropriate and unobtrusive background. From the purely pictorial point of view we feel justified in thinking that the "Almanac" will find much acceptance.

The engravings are set in orderly array, and tell their own thrilling story almost without the aid of the accompanying passages from the sacred record. In the first we see the fond but partial parent sending the favourite son in search of his nomadic shepherd brethren. Then we follow the varying fortunes of the lad in his sale and imprisonment, his consultation by Pharaoh, his exaltation to place and power, his strangely Providential encounters with his brethren from the far land, and, finally, his parting benediction before his translation to the higher world.

In a forthcoming volume, Rev. F. B. Meyer thus interprets the central illustration, which depicts one of the most pathetic scenes in the career of this noble Hebrew servant of God, of his brethren, and of his people :—

"And Joseph cried, Cause every man to go out from me." There was great delicacy here. He did not want to expose his brethren, and yet he wanted to say words which could not be understood by the curious ears of mere courtiers and place-seekers. His brethren, too, must have a chance to be themselves. "And so there stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren." We must stand alone before Christ, if we would know Him. The priest, the minister, or the Christian friend, must alike go out. There are joys, as there are sorrows, in which no stranger can intermeddle. As Peter met our Lord alone on the resurrection morning (for "He was seen of Cephas"), so alone must each man meet Christ. Why not at once?

And he wept aloud. He gave forth his voice in weeping, so that the Egyptians heard the unusual sounds, and wondered. Was this joy or grief? I am disposed to think it was neither. It was pent-up emotion. For many days he had been in suspense; so anxious not to lose them; so afraid they might not stand the test. When from some secret coign of vantage he had watched them leave the city in the grey light, he may have chided himself for letting them go at all. His mind had been on the stretch; and now that the tension was removed, and there was no further necessity for it, he wept aloud. Ah, sinner, the heart of Christ is on the stretch.

"And he said, I am Joseph." He spoke in deep emotion; yet the words must have fallen on them like a thunderbolt. "Joseph!" Had they been dealing all the while with their long-lost brother? "Joseph!" Then they had fallen into a lion's den indeed. "Joseph!" Could it be? Yes, it must be so; and it would explain a great many things which had sorely puzzled them. Well might they be troubled and terrified. Astonishment as at one risen from the dead, terror for the consequences, fear lest he would repay them the long-standing debt—all these emotions made them dumb. They could not answer him. So he said again, "I am Joseph, your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt"; and he added very lovingly, "Be not grieved, nor angry, for God did send me." How much this reminds us of another scene, not far from the gates of Damascus, when Jesus arrested the young persecutor with, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" And he said, "Who art Thou, Lord?" And the answer came back, "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." Penitent sinner! it is thus that thy Saviour speaks to thee. "I am Jesus your Brother, whom thou hast sold and crucified; yet grieve not for that. I was delivered by the determinate counsel and fore-knowledge of God, though the hands have been none the less wicked by which I have been crucified and slain. But if you repent, your sins shall be blotted out."

"And Joseph said unto his brethren, Come near unto me." They had gone farther and farther back from him; but now he bids them approach. This is a beautiful illustration of the way in which a sinner may be reinstated in the loving favour of God. We are not set to serve a time of probation. We need not stand afar off. We may step right into the deepest and closest intimacy with the Son of God. Once "afar off," but now "made nigh" by the blood of Jesus. One moment the rugged road of repentance; the next the Father's kiss and the banquet in the Father's home.

A moment more saw him and Benjamin locked in each other's arms, their tears freely flowing. And he kissed all his brethren? Simeon? Yes. Reuben? Yes. Those who had tied his hands and mocked his cries? Yes. He kissed them all. And after that they talked with him. So shall it be one day. The Jews are slowly filtering back to Palestine in unbelief. Sore troubles await them there, to prepare them to recognise their rejected Messiah. But the time is not far distant when they shall be prepared to hear Him say, "I am Jesus, your Brother, whom ye crucified; but be not grieved with yourselves, for God has brought good out of evil, both for Gentile and for Jew, by saving life with a great deliverance." "And they shall look upon Him whom they pierced, and mourn because of Him." "And so all Israel shall be saved."

The daily texts that go to fill up the remainder of the "Almanac" have been chosen, as formerly, with prayerful meditation. We have often been gladdened to learn in the past that these morsels from the groaning table of God's provision for the spiritual needs of humanity, have been found strengthening to readers from day to day. An instance of this occurs in the current number of Echoes of Service. A Chinese lady missionary, who, with her husband, has lately suffered from the native hostility shown to so many foreigners, writes:—

"The text for last Saturday (July 19) on 'The Christian' Almanac was, 'God is to us a God of deliverances.' Truly we have proved Him so: no injury, no sunstroke, but borne as on eagles' wings."

REV. JAMES O'CONNOR has received about one thousand pounds towards the purchase of a house for missionary work among Roman Catholics in New York. About £6000 will be required to give him the facilities needed for preaching, and to give a home for young converts from Rome—especially converted priests. Will not Ireland, his native land, do something, and England, ever ready, respond, and Scotland send a blessing? Our friend's work is literally houseless as yet. I believe your readers will send help to our brother, now that they hear of the need. His address is 72, Bible House, New York, U.S.A.

How shall I their number master?
How shall I get through?
How keep calm amid the tumult?
Lord, what shall I do?

Earth.

What is earth, sexton?—A place to dig graves.
What is earth, rich man?—A place to work slaves.
What is earth, grey-beard?—A place to grow old.
What is earth, miser?—A place to dig gold.
What is earth, schoolboy?—A place for my play.
What is earth, maiden?—A place to be gay.
What is earth, seamstress?—A place where I weep.
What is earth, sluggard?—A good place to sleep.
What is earth, soldier?—A place for a battle.
What is earth, herdsman?—A place to rear cattle.
What is earth, widow?—A place of true sorrow.
What is earth, tradesman?—I'll tell you to-morrow.
What is earth, sick man?—'Tis nothing to me.
What is earth, sailor?—My home is the sea.
What is earth, statesman?—A place to win fame.
What is earth, author?—I'll write there my name.
What is earth, monarch?—For my realm 'tis given.
What is earth, Christian?—The gateway of heaven.

The light of God.

When the true light of God ariseth, the light that is God Himself, then must all created light vanish and fade. When the uncreated light shines forth, and glows, and beams, then must needs the created light wax pale and dim, as a little candle in the noon-day sun. O children, could a man but see this glorious light for one short moment, he would say that the glory and the joy of all the world fade and disappear in the glory and the joy of that little moment; and it is now, in our mortal bodies, that we can know such joy and gladness.

Rev. SAMUEL LANGDON,

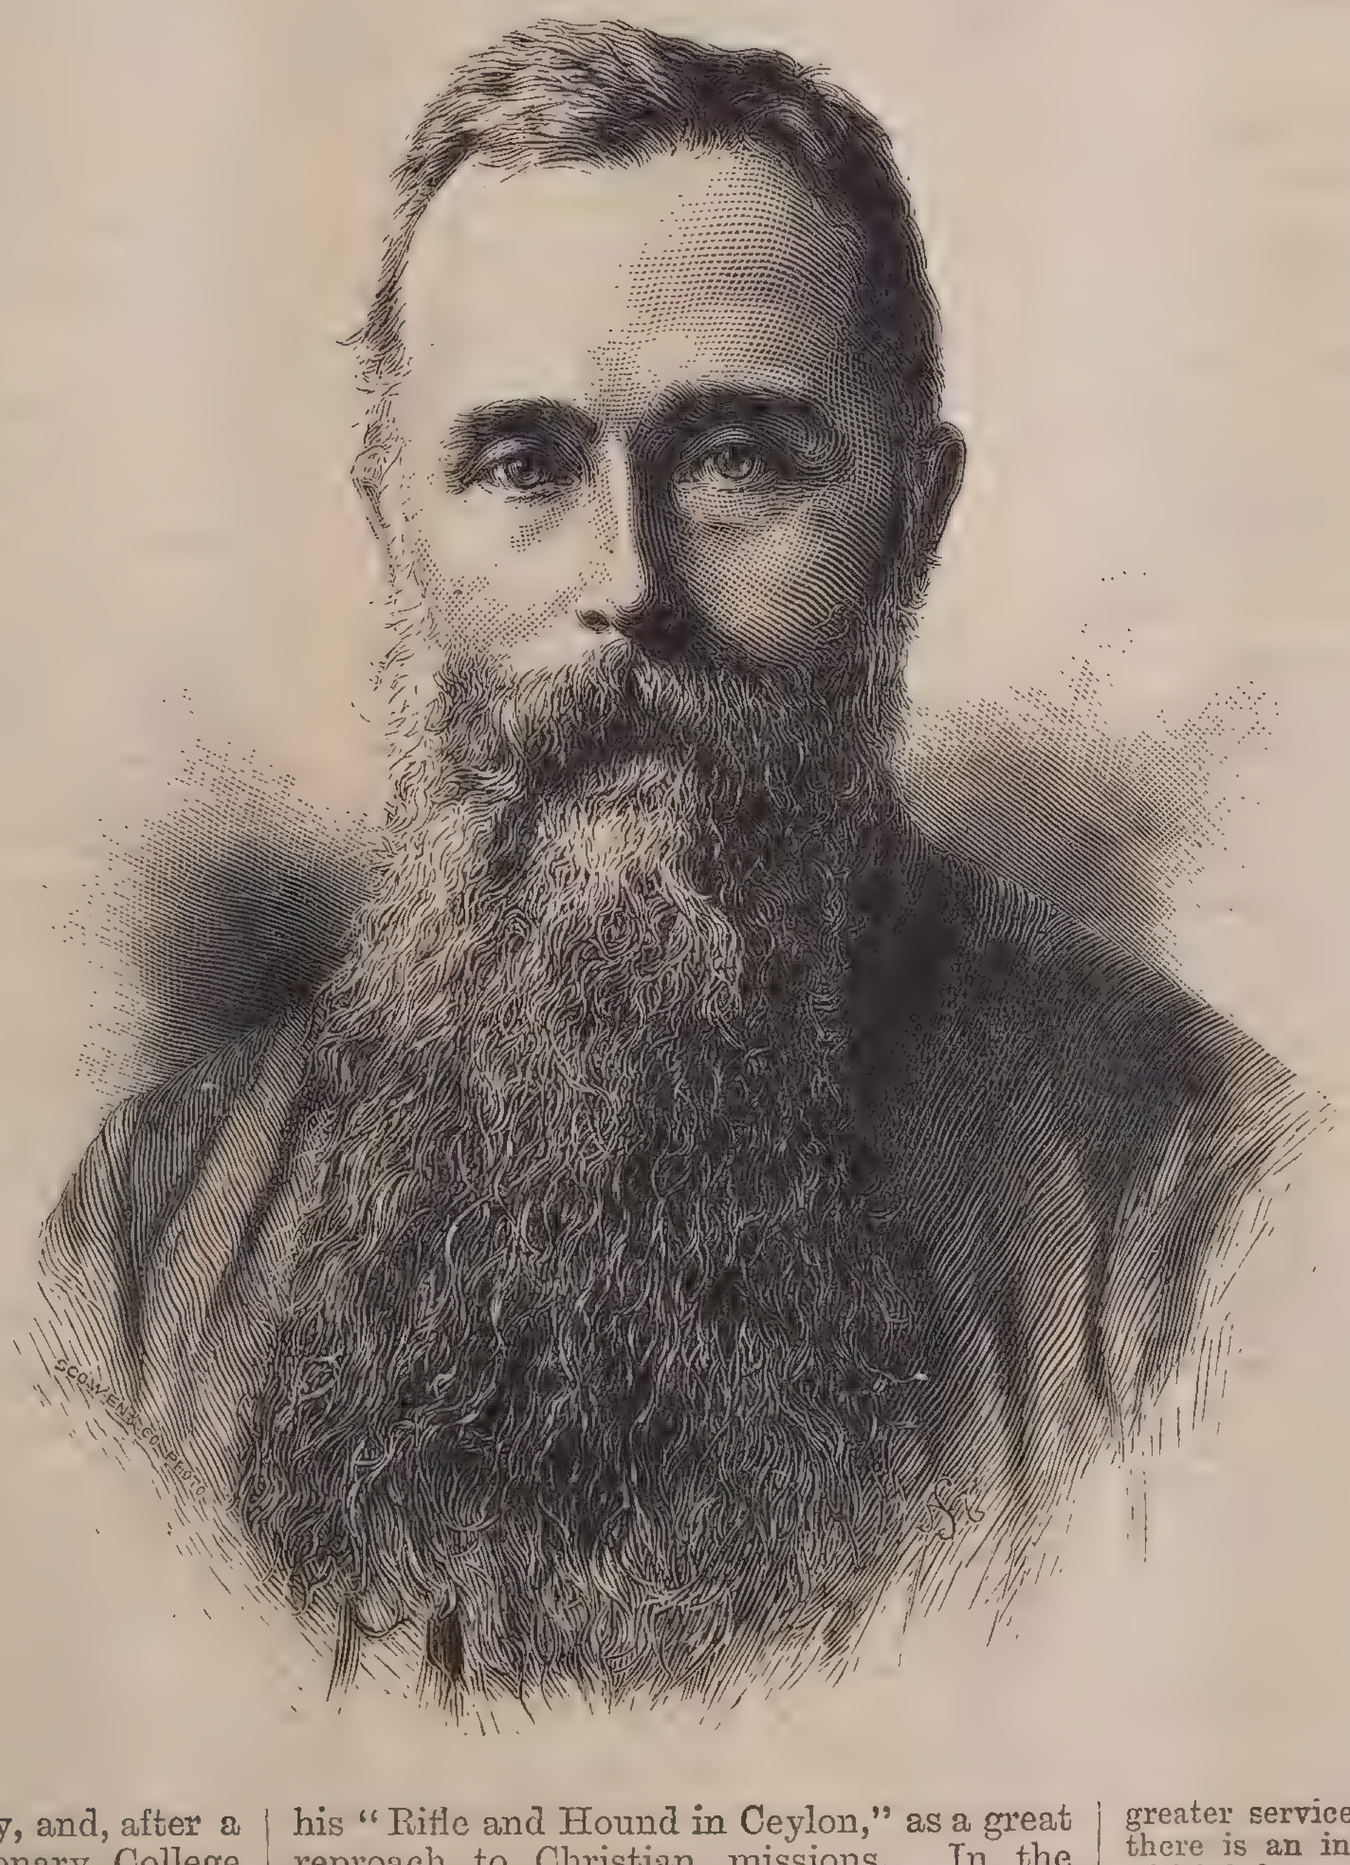
Wesleyan Missionary, Ceylon.

IN our weekly picture gallery, missionaries have had an honoured place, though Ceylon has not been represented hitherto. This beautiful island of the south has had a goodly succession of honoured men, belonging to different missionary societies, who have pressed the battle of Christianity with heathenism to the gate. In days gone by there were Clough, Daniel Fenn, Gogerly, Hardy, Jones, Kilner, Scott, and a host of others. One of the most noteworthy of the younger men is the subject of this sketch.

Samuel Langdon was born in Cornwall in 1847, and is full of Cornish humour and vivacity. Soon after the completion of his school life, an opportunity was given him of making a trip round the world in a sailing vessel. In due course the ship touched at Ceylon, and, as his name was on a Cornish circuit plan as a local preacher, he threw himself with great ardour into Christian work. He gave several lectures on Romanism. As the Papacy claims to have a quarter of a million adherents in the island (its work having been continuously carried on since the Portuguese occupation in the early part of the sixteenth century) these lectures created quite a sensation, and there was much angry movement amongst these volatile Oriental adherents of the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Langdon dealt blow after blow at the weak places in the Papal armour, until The Catholic Messenger anathematised him with the usual vocabulary of wrathful energy, and into certain quarters of Colombo it was not safe for him to venture.

After some weeks' delightful and active work for Christ he left the shores of Ceylon, scarcely hoping to see them again; but, in course of time, he was accepted as a candidate for the Wesleyan ministry, and, after a successful career at the Missionary College at Richmond, was designated for Ceylon. The Ceylon missionaries, unknown to the young student, had asked the Missionary Committee for his appointment. It need not be said that Mr. Langdon felt he had found his providential path.

He has now seen two terms of service, and is universally known and respected as a hard-working and most capable missionary; one who is full of impatience with the old ruts, and full of schemes for getting out of them such as only Christian ingenuity could invent. Wesley College, Colombo, and Richmond College, Galle, owe him much; especially the latter, of which he was the first Principal. He started the Kandy Girls' High School, the Kandy Girls' Industrial Home, the Badulla Girls' Industrial School and Orphanage, the Haputale Boys' Home of Industry and Reformatory, the first children's hospital in Ceylon, and the Wiseman Hospital, named after the energetic and devoted secretary of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society.



For a long time the work of missions in Ceylon was chiefly confined to the seaboard. This is referred to by Sir Samuel Baker, in his "Rifle and Hound in Ceylon," as a great reproach to Christian missions. In the interior and within a great circle of mountains is a lovely country called Uva, the Singhalese inhabitants of which, until five years ago, were almost entirely neglected. To the work of carrying the Gospel to the degraded population of this dark province Mr. Langdon, aided most usefully by his wife, so devoted himself that he is now referred to by the Ceylon newspapers as "The Apostle of Uva."

The work has grown with surprising rapidity, and this "Ceylon Inland Mission" gives every promise of success. Scores have professed conversion, and there are many inquirers. There are now seven preaching rooms, ten ministers and catechists, sixteen day school teachers, and ten day schools containing 450 scholars, nearly half of whom are girls. At the commencement of the work only one in 600 of the female population could read. For his useful work in the Homes of Industry and especially in connection with the Reformatory branch, Mr. Langdon has received the thanks of the Governor in the Legislative Council and special mention in various State papers. It is playfully said by his brethren that he brings some new project to every breakfast table to talk over with his worthy wife.

The following extract from an article by Mr. Langdon gives a good example of his go-ahead ingenuity:—

I found out long ago that it was most difficult to avail myself of the help of the magic-lantern in the Uva villages. And yet picture-teaching is just what the villagers need. Extremely few of them can read, and the most childish ignorance of everything but evil prevails on every hand. Wondering what would be the best missionary method in the circumstances, I thought of a "Peep-show" which I had seen in Kandy, under the superintendence of a Moorman, which drew large crowds of people, and brought the owner no small gain. Having with me a magnifying-glass of some power, it did not take long to convert an old packing-case into a "Peep-show." A kind friend who is a photographer supplied me with some pictures of Ceylon and a large number of "mounts," which I use as slides, on which I fasten my pictures as I get them. That is the machine complete, with the exception of the "stand," which is being made to serve the purpose of chair as well.

The magic-lantern has some advantages—for instance, the pictures can be shown to more people in that way. But, on the other hand, the concentration necessary for the "Peep-show," and the bringing of ones and twos and threes into such close quarters, is, perhaps, of greater service to the missionary teacher. And there is an interest about looking into the box which is keener than looking at open pictures and diagrams. It makes a capital introduction to the people. They are curious to know what is in the box; and you may make it, as well as a help to your preaching, a very interesting and attractive means of education. I find the people, most of whom have never been out of Uva, deeply interested in the pictures of Ceylon...We come now to the Scriptural pictures—a series illustrating the life of St. Paul. This furnishes us with the opportunity to which we have been leading up, and of which we are not slow to avail ourselves. The people who are not looking into the box, listen to our words as attentively as Kandyans can listen. The women listen in the intervals of business with the clay pots in the kitchen, and two or three men club together in the back-ground, dividing a betel leaf and scraping the smallest bit of chunam out of a little brass box to chew with it, commenting every now and then audibly on the remarks of the showman. We sing a hymn, and conclude our show amidst the thanks of the people. In one place, a village elder swore by the gods that he never had before the slightest idea that there were such wonderful things in the world.

Amidst abounding labours and journeyings oft Mr. Langdon has found time to write several books:—"Letters to a Junior Preacher," "Punchi Nona: a Story of Village Life in Ceylon," "My Mission Garden;" whilst his latest work, "The Appeal to the Serpent," published by the Religious Tract Society, has been received with favour as a popular statement, in story form, of the fashionable Neo-Buddhism and its contrasts with Christianity.

Mr. Langdon is now in England, seeking to recruit his health and to stir up greater interest in his many-sided and important enterprise in the interior of Ceylon.

THE GOSPEL AND THE MASSES

was the important and pressing topic set down for first consideration on the last afternoon of the Conference at Manchester. Rev. Edward Smith, late of the Clerkenwell Wesleyan Mission and now of Bradford, introduced it, dealing specially with the chief hindrances to the spread of the Gospel ministry. Mr. Smith was a Manchester pastor some years since, and he is evidently not forgotten there, as he was greeted with hearty cheers on coming to the front. The Gospel of Jesus Christ, he said, purports to be the great benefactor to the people; it claims to preserve the social fabric and to keep fresh the sanctities of the home. Its results have borne out its pretensions, and anything that checks its spread ought to give us great grief. Among the hindrances of the present time, Mr. Smith went on to mention, the drink traffic (chief among them all), the inherent indifference of the human heart, pride, love of evil as evil, the indiscriminate distribution of charity in mission work, the abuse of education, neglect of the Sabbath, the antagonism of a section of the daily Press, the prevalence of gambling and betting, exciting and exhausting pleasure, and the avowed indifference to religion on the part of clever public men. These hindrances are from the world around, but there are also hindrances from the Church itself, e.g. Sabbath travelling to hear popular preachers, sensational services, and a lack of a hearty welcome to the poor in our churches. As Christian workers we need to talk and demonstrate less, and work and love more. Let us get at the people face to face, and heart to heart, and seek to woo them into the ways of righteousness. There are many obstacles, but the power of God's Spirit can overcome them all.

The liveliest discussion of the Conference followed Mr. Smith's address. One friend in the audience thought that the rich people in the suburbs ought not to monopolise all the best preachers. Let talented ministers go down among the poor and use their gifts in proclaiming the Gospel. Then, why should not wealthy Christians follow the example of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Crossley, who live in Ancoats, an industrial district of Manchester, and carry on the work of a mission-hall there?

Principal Cave said he had lived and worked for years in the East End of London, and his experience was that the obstacles in human nature are not greater among the poor than among the rich. Let the preacher go to the masses, as one man with brains to another man with brains, and he will be courteously received and listened to. The people will always welcome Gospel preachers of pronounced convictions, clear in their utterances, and who can speak from personal experience. Intellectual difficulties ought to be considered and settled in private conference, and public evangelism directed to bringing men to spiritual decision.

Rev. Simpson Johnson thought that the fashionable "suburbanism" was a serious hindrance to work in poorer districts. Direct personal influence on the masses, by all ranks of believers, and the living out of a Christ-like Christianity will cause the hindrances to disappear.

THE DAY OF REST AND WORSHIP.

Before reading a paper on "The Obligation to Observe the Lord's Day for Rest and Worship," Rev. Dr. Gritton referred to the services rendered on behalf of Sabbath observance on the Continent in connection with the operations of the Alliance, and the devoted labours of M. Alex Lombardi, a Swiss banker. It is somewhat singular that while there is a strong inclination in different parts of the European Continent to wrest back the Sabbath for the physical, social, and spiritual benefit of the people, not a few in this country should be endeavouring to loosen the bonds that now secure the day for these important ends. Dr. Gritton's essay was an elaborate and closely reasoned argument, from Divine sanction and obligation, in favour of all the community having one whole day in every seven set apart for the purposes of rest and worship. The Sabbath law has the same binding force as that of any other part of the moral code, and it is equally applicable to all races and all dispensations.

The closing meeting in the evening was perhaps the best attended of any. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe gave the first address, which was on "The Person, Presence, and Power of the Holy Ghost." In the early stages of his remarks he showed how, according to the graduated stages of Christ's exaltation as man, there was a parallel bestowment of power. Further, as He was endued with power He proceeded to endue his followers with a like power. When He was raised from the dead and exalted to the right hand of the Father, He entered on a new experience and position as the representative of the human race. As soon as He had in this capacity received from the Father power and authority over death, and had been brought into direct communication with the Father as never before, He proceeded to communicate to to the Church on earth the life of the Godhead in the gift of the Holy Ghost. The remainder of Mr. Peploe's addres was an exposition of the New Testament teaching as to the reception and filling of the Spirit, moulded somewhat closely on the lines of his recent address at Keswick. There was embodied in it an earnest appeal that the Church of to-day should not hinder the inflow and the working of the Spirit, but that there should be a submission of every part of our nature to his action, so that the world at large might be blessed according to the purpose of God.

Rev. J. F. Hallowes followed with an earnest and orderly address on "The condition of being filled with the Spirit." The conditions stated were briefly as follows: We must allow the Spirit to possess every part of our being; we must not be content with one filling; we must not waste the power we receive; we must use the power for the good of others; we must submit to God's plan for our life; we must habitually exercise unquestioning faith in God to work in and through us.

The closing utterance of the Conference was by Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, on "The Comforter and the world." He referred to the two antagonistic principles at work in the world and said that it was God's plan to accomplish his purposes here through the agency of redeemed men and women. When the Holy Ghost is given, therefore, He is given to the disciples, not to the world at large; and through them the world is to be blessed. We are told that the Holy Ghost will reprove the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment but this statement comes in the middle of the promise of the Holy Ghost to the Apostles. The world does not know Christ the Saviour, and it must be through the Church that they can do so. To this end there is the threefold promise to the church. (1) He will teach us; (2) He will guide us; (3) He will glorify Christ, by taking of his and showing it to his servants.

Colonel Malcolm, the chairman, thanked the Manchester friends for their kind hospitality and fellowship, and the proceedings of the Conference ended.

MISSION IN CORK.

Mr. W. R. Lane, of London, has lately held a gospel mission in this city under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., which was remarkable for the manifest presence and power of the Holy Spirit throughout.

The mission continued for a week. Each day there were four meetings, two for prayer at 8 a.m., and 12 noon, both of which Mr. Lane conducted; at 3 p.m. a Bible reading, and at 8 p.m. an evangelistic meeting. On Monday evening the annual public meeting of the Y.M.C.A. was held, at which there was a very large gathering; Mr. Lane gave an address at the close.

During the week the meetings were not as well attended as was hoped, but it was a season of rich blessing, and we believe many surrendered to Christ. Mr. Lane's addresses on "Thorns," "Herod," and "The Great White Throne" were specially impressive. His Bible readings were very profitable and instructive, and appeared to be highly appreciated.

Some scenes in the after meetings were most touching. A gentleman, evidently under deep conviction, rose and asked Mr. Lane if he wished those only to stand who were deciding for Christ for the first time, and having been replied to in the affirmative sat down, and after a few minutes he and his wife rose and stood arm in arm. On the same evening three young girls, one of them a German, were deeply convicted of sin. This German girl rose to testify that she was trusting Christ. Later, when Mr. Lane was speaking with her two companions, who appeared to be very unhappy, she came forward, and with tears rolling down her face, said in her broken English: "Do as me do—just opened my heart and Jesus came in." She now seeks prayer for the conversion of her relatives in Germany. One mother is rejoicing in the conversion of two sons, her whole family now professing to know the Lord.

On Friday, Mr. Lane conducted a praise and testimony meeting. Many rose to testify to blessing received. On the same evening there was a special talk to men; only about 600 attended. Mr. Lane appealed to them very earnestly to take Christ as their Saviour.

Convention at Manchester.

A SKETCH.

ONLY Thee, only Thee, Loving Saviour, only Thee, was our opening prayer as we gathered together to ask for blessing upon the coming meetings, and the prayer was answered, for all through the day "Jesus only" was the watchword of each speaker, as one and another opened to us the treasuries of God's Word.

In the forenoon meeting our thoughts were turned to our Master's will for us, as the chairman, Mr. ROBERT WILSON, read from John xv.: "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love....This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you." Only in loving and only to the loving one is there the blessing of abiding in his love.

One frequent failure in this very thing was again brought out by Rev. J. T. BUTLIN as he spoke of God's promises and our faithlessness. In Josh. i. 3, 5, we have his and victory; but the Book of Judges tells us of the people's repeated discomfiture, and their Captain sorrowfully asks, "How long are ye slack to go to possess the land which the Lord ...hath given you?" So it is with us oftentimes—our land is unpossessed, our enemies unsubdued. The hills and the valleys of the God-land are ours the moment we by faith "tread upon" them, but take one "hill" and test our measure of its possession.

The fruit of the Spirit is love. 1 Cor. xiii. gives us God's ideal; the same book gives us his children's lamentable failure. Chap. i. 4, 5 (R.V.), "The peace of God was given you...ye were enriched by Him," but chap. iii. 3, points to a falling off. "Ye are yet carnal," "envying, striving, having divisions;" what of the love which suffereth long and is kind, which envieth not? Chap. iv. 18 tells us "Some are puffed up," but love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. Chap. v. 6, 7, "brother goeth to law with brother," but love seeketh not her own. Most awful of all is chap. xi. 20, which speaks of shameful behaviour at the Table of the Lord, but love doth not behave itself unseemly.

So, all through the list of the hills of God-land. Peace, have we got it? Not only the peace of his pardon, but of his presence, the peace "multiplied" of Peter, the peace "garrisoning" of Paul, the perfect peace of the God of peace. And are we more than conquerors? or are the "chariots of iron" too much for us? Surely, we are conscious of a contrast between our practical possession and what might be ours through Him that loved us.

There was no time to touch on the third great promise of God's Kingship over his people, so we turned instead to the Giver of all, "Make us to see the things Thou hast for us, open our hearts and give us faith in Thee, so may we go in to possess the land, and overcome the enemy in Thy name, and for Thy glory—Amen."

Rev. GELSON GREGSON, in his address which followed, taking Rom. iv. 12 as a starting point, traced the walk of Abraham through its

FOUR GREAT STEPS.

(1) His leaving his own land at God's command; (2) his putting away Hagar and Ishmael, though they were dear to him; (3) his practical recognition always of the fact that he was a stranger and a pilgrim on the earth; (4) his yielding up Isaac in blind faith, trusting the bare promise, in spite of "common sense." Then came the Lord's "Now know I," and Abraham's rejoicing "Jehovah Jireh!"

The afternoon meeting opened with the grand old hymn, fragrant with many a memory:—

The sands of time are sinking,
The dawn of heaven breaks.

As the solemn words from 2 Peter concerning the swiftly coming day of the Lord were read there was a hush upon the meeting, which deepened as Dr. WHITE's words rang out, in tones of deepest certainty, "The Lord is near, very near! Are we ready to meet the Bridegroom if He should come to-night?" Then he traced the Lord's glorious Second Coming in connection with every-day holiness, showing how closely God links the one with the other; showing how the very motive power for a holy life is "The Lord is at hand."

"Teach us we have not been saved to go to heaven but to glorify Thee," he had prayed in the morning, and now he led us on to see how the coming Master wants his servants to glorify Him by winning the lost ones for Him, "till He come."

"WORK ON, MY BROTHER,"

were a friend's farewell words as the train moved off, "you may gather the last one in, and then the Lord will come!" Are we trying to gather the last one in? So we may be "hasting" (marg.) the coming of our Lord.

In speaking of the suffering which is so closely connected with service, he gave us a beautiful thought from 1 Peter ii. 21. The word "example" has an inner meaning; the idea is that of a child's transparent slate, under which lies the picture, to be outlined by the little one; or, more literally, as the old Greek master's used to first draw the figure, and laying it upon the ground, teach the pupil to trace over it. So the Christ-life is laid down for us to "trace over," step by step. Again, he gave us a jewel thought in connection with Hebrews xii. 11. "Exercised," points to the exercise of nerve and muscle given in the gymnasium; the school of pain is in it He tests and trains his gymnasts, such training involves suffering, but, nevertheless, afterward, it yieldeth peaceable fruits—"The Lord is Coming! God grant that every brow here to-day may be crowned with the Master's crown!"

In the evening meeting, Mr. GREGSON, in speaking to those who had wandered, said, "Sometimes we are driven by stress of weather back to the foundations. Often we try to whitewash the tottering wall; to cover the dry rot with a new coat of paint. But all the religious galvanism in the world will fail to resuscitate a religious mummy. To get the wrong set right we must go down to the foundation; we must test the wall with the plumb-line of God's truth; we must get back to the Word of God. The harmony between his Word and his children's life is what the world wants to-day.

Then very earnestly Dr. WHITE called upon those of us who were living in the sunshine, and specially those who were wandering in the darkness, to "consecrate our service this day unto the Lord." He spoke of the willing, glorious, whole-hearted service God wants: of the typical teaching from Lev. viii., which pictures to us the heart's affections, the strength of mind and body, and the earthly possessions whatever they be, offered to the loving Lord, to be his to do with as He wills for time and for eternity.

The meeting closed with the prayer, sung on our knees, in the quiet which told of touched hearts and yielded lives,

My all is on the Altar,
Lord, I am all thine own,
Oh, may my faith ne'er falter,
Lord, keep me thine alone.

COMMITMENTS TO REFORMATORIES.—The Home Secretary has sent a circular to magistrates, in which he says he regrets to find that nearly half the total of the commitments to reformatories are on first convictions; and he impresses on justices the necessity of satisfying themselves in all cases that the training and discipline of a reformatory are really requisite, and that there is no danger of sending comparatively innocent children to associate with hardened offenders.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY.

THIRTY-SEVEN years have fully run their course since Daniel Cooper had laid upon him the burden of caring for poor lost, friendless girls, and nearly seven years have passed since his life-work ceased and he received the summons from his Divine Master to come up higher. Had he lived to the present, he would greatly have rejoiced in the record of the past year's work, which the secretary, Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, sends us from 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

During the past year there has been a still further increase in the number of young women and girls for whom homes have been found, and to whom has been given the helping hand and a fresh start in life. It is impossible to realise what would have been the present condition of the 627 who have found a "door of hope" in the Homes of this Society, had this "door" been closed; and, when it is remembered that since the Society was founded 14,639 have thus been aided to a new and better life, it will be seen that there is indeed cause for thanksgiving and praise.

Many have left the Homes in a satisfactory manner, but it is, of course, impossible to say that all of these have since behaved satisfactorily; neither has it proved that all who appeared humbled and professed faith in Christ have really had "repentance unto life," but most abundantly has God rewarded the labours of his servants, and given them much joy in his service, as the fruit of the seed-sowing has been manifest in the life and consistent conduct of so many of the girls.

Subscriptions and donations of 1889 were nearly £600 less than in the previous year. To a great extent this was doubtless due to the knowledge on the part of friends that a large legacy had been received by the Society, but nearly four-fifths of this was expended to cover arrears and in various charges for repairs and leasehold and freehold purchases in connection with the various Homes in which the good work is carried on. If the removal from the contribution list of names of liberal friends calls forth a more entire dependence on the Lord who has thus called his servants home, the discipline will be for blessing, and his work will not lack the needed supplies.

PRAYER FOR THE SECOND ADVENT.

THE week of prayer, begun on Sunday, October 19, by two sermons in Christ Church, Brixton, from Rev. John Gregory, of Brighton, was continued up to Saturday, with growing interest, warmth, and blessing. Fervour and great desire were vividly testified as the meetings went on; and they closed with evidence of great comfort and joy in the prospect that became overwhelming in its wondrous reality. Men and women with evident spiritual power took part in all the exercises.

It was noticeable that there was no allusion to debatable interpretations. All were of one accord seeking for the fulfilment of the hope set before us. Many different schools of interpretation were represented without the least lack of harmony.

Among those who joined in the exercises were Sir S. A. Blackwood, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Canon Hussey, Rev. Mr. McLaughlin, Major Mackinlay, Dr. Bullinger, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and several other gentlemen and ladies. The chairman was the Rev. N. S. Taylor, who led with much simplicity and gentleness, leaving the whole direction to Him who maketh intercession according to the will of God. The course of throwing open the meeting for prayer, praise, and exhortation, was all through perfectly happy and encouraging.

The meetings being so refreshing and helpful, it was arranged to have a quarterly day of quiet meditation and prayer in connection with this momentous subject. Those who desire to join this Union, and to receive its occasional paper, should communicate with the secretary at the Conference Hall Clapham-road, London, S.W.

THE SALVATION MISSION, HANLEY.

Some time ago we brought before our readers the case of this important Mission. There is at Hanley a good mission population—60,000 people in Hanley itself, and 150,000 people within a radius of a few miles of the "Salvation Mission" Hall—an industrial population, comprising potters (male and female) to the number of tens of thousands, colliers, and iron-workers. In Hanley the provision made for evangelical worshippers in churches and chapels does not exceed about one-fifth of the population, and at the best-attended service on any given Sunday more than five-sixths of the people are absent from worship. There is at present neither Young Men's nor Young Women's Christian Association, nor rescue work, and the attempts at social endeavour generally have, up to the present, been very feeble and inadequate. One exceptional difficulty at Hanley arises from the fact that it is almost entirely a working-class town, with the employers of labour largely non-resident.

Most of these difficulties could easily be transformed into advantages. To begin with—the people are unusually impressionable, and are disposed to look with favour upon all vigorous effort in their interest, and especially in the form of earnest evangelism. Scepticism has no hold upon them, and it is most refreshing to witness how hundreds of men and others will regularly gather and stand around an open-air group in the market square and in other parts. This summer, almost nightly, crowds, numbering 500, 600, 800, and even more, have stood and drunk in the testimonies and appeals by the hour together, and sometimes three or four such crowds have been addressed simultaneously by various mission bands.

The Salvation Mission premises form an ideal mission property, being supposed to be considerably the largest mission premises in the provinces, and, of course, unapproachable in extent and capacity as a great evangelical centre for the potteries district. Since the hall was purchased, eight years ago, it has upon many occasions, and in its earlier history for months together, been crowded by dense throngs numbering 5000, and thousands have dated their decision to its services.

The struggle to keep up the heavy repayments in respect of mortgage conspired, last year, to bring about a crisis which nearly brought the spiritual work to an end, and the property to the auctioneer's hammer. By God's mercy this disaster was averted by the call to the rescue of Mr. Lancelot Middleton, a musical evangelist, who, with his colleague, Mr. Thomas Hogben, and other helpers, notably Mr. and Mrs. William Baker, barrister-at-law, of West Dulwich, have coped with the manifold difficulties throughout the present year, until the local debts of upwards of £300 have been cleared away, together with the major portion of the Burslem branch debt.

Now is the time to think about the establishment of special work amongst the mothers, the children, the pot-girls, besides other forms of spiritual and social enterprise; but before a single step can be taken with such most urgent work the mortgage debt of £2800 must be dealt with. We regret to learn that the bank from whom the property was purchased is pressing for settlement before Christmas, and the amount is too large for private mortagees to advance. It is hoped that some friends will soon "devise liberal things" in aid of the Mission.

Locally, nearly £500 has been raised, under the new regime during the present year, and the people of the Potteries cannot themselves do much more.

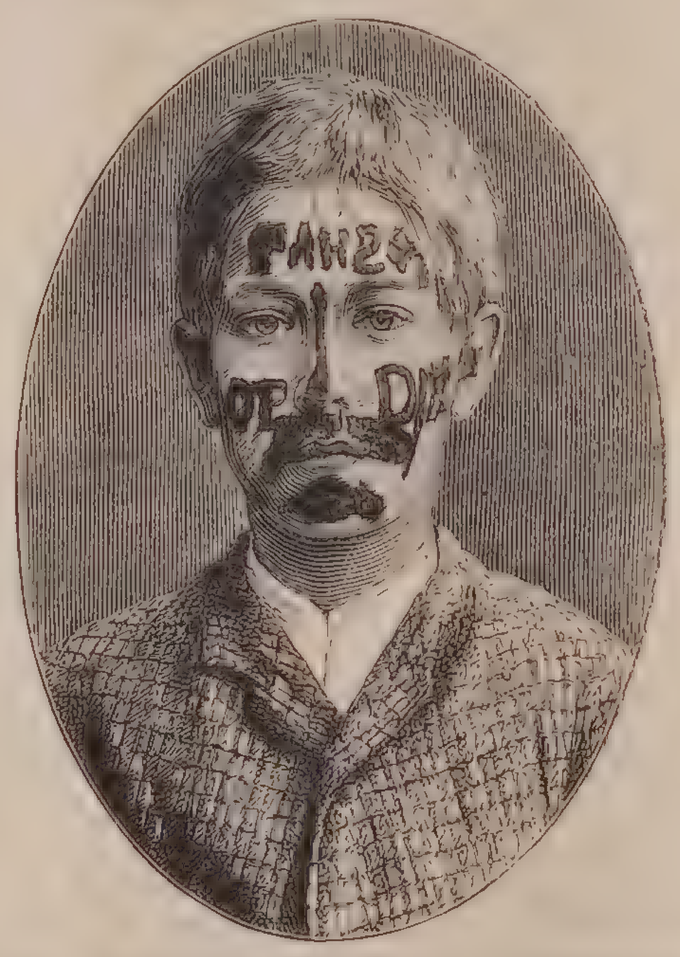
The work has been visited by Dr. Barnardo, Rev. C. Spurgeon, Rev. J. Jackson Wray, and other well-known workers, and is certified to by Rev. Dr. Paton, of Nottingham, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, &c. We have ourselves personally inspected and investigated matters, and are persuaded that now is the time for the liberating stroke.

The president of the Mission is Alderman Boulton, of Burslem; Mr. Ambrose Wood is the treasurer; and Mr. Lancelot Middleton, Highfield House, Hanley, the superintendent.

The Mission House, just finished, and opened by the kindness of some London friends, gives accommodation for several resident workers. Two deaconesses are already on the spot. Two others are urgently needed, and could be at once received.

RUSSIA AS PERSECUTOR.

It is with great pain that we witness the inhumanity with which the Jews in Russia continue to be treated. The wholesale expulsion of Jews from the districts not specially assigned to them has already affected prejudicially the commerce of the country. The people are fearfully hampered as to education, and in many other ways brought under the heel of oppression.



The Jewish Chronicle has published, in a letter from its Odessa correspondent, the details of a shocking outrage perpetrated on a Jewish lad named Rutenberg, at Bialystok, about 100 miles from Warsaw, by a Russian medical man, Dr. Gravonsky. The boy, with some schoolmates, had plucked some apples off a tree, and being caught in the act was carried into a stable, where he was brutally branded with lunar caustic on the forehead, chin, and both cheeks with the words, "Jew" and "thief," in Russian, Polish, and Hebrew. The above is a reproduction of a photograph of the lad.

From this it will appear that it is with comparative impunity that wicked men ill-treat the Jews in Russia. The photograph which we have copied speaks for itself; the Russian authorities have prohibited its sale or circulation—a fact which goes far to show their condonation of the outrage.

Referring to the Russian attitude towards Protestant workers, The Jewish Chronicle, in a recent issue, recalled the experiences of Rev. A. Thompson, who founded The Russian Workman, in order to expose the superstition of the Greek Church. It says:—"Thanks to Mr. Thompson's high personal qualities and his popularity among the aristocracy, the new paper circulated among and was freely supported by the middle classes and workmen. Colonel Paschkoff, one of the richest landlords and employers of labour, subscribed for thousands of copies, and so zealous was he in propagating these new ideas, that he invited Lord Radstock to spend several months yearly in Russia, preaching the Gospel in crowded aristocratic family circles, sometimes in English, sometimes in French. With the advent of the Slavophile Party to power, all such ideas were sweepingly dealt with, and an era of persecution commenced, lasting up to this day. Mr. Paschkoff and Count Korff were exiled, and still remain so. Mr. Thompson, adored of all the classes of rich and poor, had to leave the country. Lord Radstock was politely but sternly escorted to the frontier. Mr. Hilton, the general manager of Mr. Paschkoff's ironworks was imprisoned, and several other Englishmen, who were suspected of preaching the Gospel to Russian subjects, were sent to Siberia. Mdme. General Pyker, the responsible editor of The Russian Workman, was greatly annoyed by the Russian press censors. At last The Russki Rabotshi (The Russian Workman), was suppressed, and the editress died of a broken heart."

EASTERN MANCHURIA.

Mr. R. T. Turley sends us a long letter from the port of Neuchwang, north-east boundary of Kirin Province. With him are two young Christians, a Manchu and a Chinaman—experienced colporteurs; and much printed matter has been sold. In some of the villages, where the Chinese have flocked in and turned the wilderness into fine farm land, the workers' hearts were cheered by intercourse with converts—lights scattered here and there, sometimes bright, sometimes dim, in the utter darkness. Everywhere attentive audiences are found. The majority of the people are poor, suspicious, ignorant, and superstitious, but generally friendly to Missionaries. Our friend gives an interesting account of a conversation which the two helpers had with a Manchu soldier, who had tried every heathen religion, abstained from meat, opium, tobacco and drink, but could not find peace. An old sorcerer, a real Simon, kept Mr. Turley awake until midnight by apparently sincere questions, but the next morning secretly tried to turn the young inquirer against Christ, but the hypocrisy was not successful. If converted, this Manchu will be a light to his fellow soldiers and the colonists in Hai Lung Ching.

The whole district is sadly in need of the light, for doors are open everywhere, and population rapidly increasing. Whenever opium smoking is denounced, the reply is, "But you produce it;" but it is faithfully shown that Christ forbids its cultivation and sale for the use to which it is put by these people. The poor slaves of the habit often beg the missionary to cure them of it.

"There is a fine country," says Mr. Turley, "and we are trying to do a little to spread the Lord's work, but seem as a drop in a bucket. The converts of the few Missionaries are rapidly increasing, but require training and oversight."

"The harvest is ripe; and despite hatred of foreigners, there is no opposition worthy of mention." The British and Foreign Bible Society has twelve agents in Manchuria, under Mr. Turley. Shing King, the southern province, has been well worked for some years, but Kirin only partially, owing to immense distances; but Rev. Dr. Carson and Dr. Greig are opening a permanent station at Krian Ching Bu, starting with five agents. Tsitsikar, the northern and larger of the three provinces, is still a wild wilderness, so but little can be done there at present.

Mr. Turley thinks that if supplied with a strong portable magic-lantern and suitable slides (which would be received for him at 146, Queen Victoria-street), he could use them to much advantage in the large inns or caravansaries; for the people are like children, and pictures are highly appreciated and impressive. He concludes by an earnest request to home friends, to remember in prayer distant Manchuria, with its Manchus, Chinese, Mongolians and Coreans.

CANON WILBERFORCE ON THE OPIUM TRADE.

A SERIES of important meetings in connection with the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade have been held in the North during the past week, at all of which Canon Wilberforce has been the chief speaker. The first was held at Newcastle on Tuesday, the 21st, when the Canon's brother, Bishop Wilberforce, presided, and Rev. W. F. Swanson and Mr. Thomas Burt., M.P., also spoke. The following evening, Canon Wilberforce addressed a large gathering in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, when Lord Polwarth, presided, and Mr. Swanson again eloquently pleaded the cause of humanity and of Chinese missions. On Thursday, the 23rd, a still larger meeting was held in the City Hall, Glasgow, at which Sir Joseph Pease, M.P., the President of the Society, took the chair, and amongst the speakers who followed Canon Wilberforce were Mr. John Wilson, M.P., of Govan, and Dr. Dudgeon, of Peking, who is in this country for a few months. All the meetings were unanimous and enthusiastic in their condemnation of the shameful revenue derived from the opium trade.

Canon Wilberforce specially dealt with the Indian side of the question, leaving its effect on China and on missionary effort in that country to Mr. Swanson and others. The eloquent Canon is deeply impressed with the serious hindrance to the progress of the Gospel in our great Asiatic dependency, "that vast congeries of nations, which we call India," by the system under which our Government raises our unhallowed revenue from the vices of its own subjects. He believes that if the Indian Government would acknowledge that they were wrong, and sweep away the poppy, and prohibit its growth, there would be such a wave of missionary success that there would not be room to receive the souls that came in.

As to the revenue difficulty, he believes it could be easily dealt with. He was assured by some of the ablest and most trusted native leaders of the Indian Congress Movement, upon whom he called when in India last winter, that India is by no means oppressively taxed at the present time, and that far more might be done than is being done at present to develop the enormous material resources of that country. Whilst expressing most hearty admiration of our Indian administration as a whole, and considering the Civil Service of that country as "probably the best the world has ever seen," he issatisfied that there is great room for economy, both in civil and in military expenditure. On the latter point the Canon's testimony is the more valuable, as his only son is in the Indian army. These meetings cannot but have the effect of lifting the question to a higher position than it has hitherto held. J. G. A.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—Mrs. Courthope Todd writes to say that the "At Home" recently held at the Institute in Covent-garden was a great success. She desires to ask some of our readers, who have time, to devote one afternoon a week to a need long felt in connection with the work. Several hundreds of young persons have given up the stage, and these should be followed up thoroughly, and suitable situations obtained for them. Few have an adequate knowledge of the difficulty of obtaining employment for those who are anxious to get away from the old life. Some Christian girls are to be trained for sick nursing amongst those with whom they formerly worked; others are desired to start a pure literature brigade, or to visit amongst the hundreds of theatrical lodging-houses in the provinces. There are further branches of work proposed for which helpers are needed, Mrs. Todd will give details to any friends who write to her at the Institute, Macready House, Covent-garden, London, W.C. diminished neither his benevolence nor his cheerfulness; and his interest in the good works in which he was engaged continued unabated to the last. His death at Cashel, Ireland, was the result of a fall from his horse.

Evangelistic Notes.

Strathaven.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a three weeks' mission in the United Presbyterian Church here.

A fifteen days' mission has been held at the Baptist Chapel, Kings Langley, Herts, conducted by Miss C. S. Watts, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The meetings were well attended, and many testified to good received.

Rev. W. J. Mayers has conducted a series of special services in the Baptist Chapel, Lumb, in Rossendale. They have proved a great blessing to the church; on every hand testimony is given to help received and stimulus given to Christian work. Mr. Mayers delivered a lecture to a crowded audience one evening descriptive of Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Elgin, N.B.—The evangelistic services conducted here by Mr. Anderson have been brought to a close. The addresses were truly Scriptural and spiritual, and proved a source of great blessing

WHITTINGTON AVENUE Y.M.C.A.

THE missionary spirit is steadily growing among the members of the Y.M.C.A., Whittington Avenue, Leadenhall-street. The periodical conferences have done much to foster this interest, and will, it is hoped, lead to the consecration of many a life of promise to the service of God in regions at present beyond the influence of the Gospel. On Thursday last, Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided over a meeting at which "Methods of Missionary Work" was the topic considered. In the course of the proceedings, the secretary, Mr. N. R. Hughman, introduced to the members of the Association Captain S. Warren, who is about to commence work as joint secretary. Since Mr. Rogerson left to assume the secretariat at Stafford Rooms, Mr. Hughman has been struggling single-handed with the work in the City. Captain Warren will, it is sincerely hoped, prove a valuable helper. While serving Queen and country, he has done work for God in the army and navy. The Captain asked for the prayers of the members that much blessing may attend his endeavours among London young men.

After some stimulating words by the Chairman, Rev. J. H. HORSBURGH, of the Church Missionary Society, delivered an earnest address, not simply on methods of work, but also with reference to the urgent claims of the heathen upon disciples of Christ. He put it straight to the young men, whether they could individually assign adequate reasons for not responding to the Lord's command: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Rev. EDWARD PEARSE, of the China Inland Mission, followed with a description of the blessed work in which he has been engaged two thousand miles from the coast, in the great Eastern Empire. Mr. LEOPOLD G. HILL, of Harley House, Bow, who is studying with a view to being a medical missionary, spoke a few words on the duty of believers to make known the salvation of God.

RESCUE WORK AT SHEFFIELD.—Last week Mr. Corbridge, of the Rescue and Evangelisation Mission, 250, Duke-street, Sheffield, obtained permission from the magistrates to try the effect of Christian kindness and influence upon a woman who has been convicted for drunkenness seventy-four times. She stipulated that, if she so desired, she should leave Mr. Corbridge's care at the end of a week—a very short time in which to undo the degrading and brutalising work of many long years. But miracles as great as this have been effected by God's grace; and Mr. Corbridge asks the earnest prayers of all Christians for blessing upon his effort to lead this poor woman to Christ.

A NEW SONG.

"He put a new song in my mouth
Our God to magnify."

O GOD our Father, King of kings,
Ruler of all created things,
With joyous heart thy servant sings
Thy will be done.

The Gospel age is long begun,
And risen in glorious might the Sun
Of Righteousness his course to run.
Thy will be done.

Send down thy quickening beams of light,
Dispel the shades of heathen night,
Where doubt is darkening, show the right—
Thy will be done.

The glorious, loving, gracious will
Of Him who guides his people still,
Who gave his Son to save from ill.
Thy will be done.

To God the Father raise the song,
Let heaven and earth its strains prolong,
Till right has triumphed over wrong,
Thy will be done.

And in the ages yet to come,
When safe in our eternal home,
Be this of every good the sum—
Thy will is done.

Perth. A. J. GRAHAM.

CALL FROM A SURREY VILLAGE.

IT is proposed to erect a small Workmen's Hall and Mission Room in an outlying part of the parish of Cranleigh, Surrey. Captain H. Needham Knox, R.N., writes to us:—"Within the last eighteen months some large brickworks have been re-opened, and, as there are only seven cottages for the workmen and their families on the spot, nearly all the young unmarried men are obliged to get lodgings at some distance from the works. A small population is rapidly growing up, and, to meet this, more cottages are being built, and a site has been given for a workman's hall and mission room, as there is no place except a public-house on the road to Cranleigh for the younger men to spend their evenings. Tea, coffee, newspapers, &c., will be provided and everything done to make the hall bright and cheerful. After the first outlay, which will amount to from £250 to £300, the hall will be self-supporting. My sister, Mrs. Henry Fox, who lives very near, has interested herself in the workmen's wives and children, and has in her house a weekly mothers' meeting, besides a Band of Hope and singing class, as well as a Sunday-school for the children. As the numbers increase she will be able to have her meetings in the mission-room.

"Mr. Henry Fox, Hazelwood, Cranleigh, near Guildford, Surrey, will be happy to give any further information."

DUBLIN UNITED SERVICES.—The Noon Prayer-meeting, held in the Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, has been a power for good in this city; and gratifying testimony continues to be received of the Divine blessing which for fifteen years has accompanied the annual Convention. The Sunday afternoon evangelistic service has afforded a profitable hour to strangers in the city, and to others who are prevented from attending the ordinary services in the churches. The Friday meetings for children have grown considerably during the past year. Godly women meet together on Tuesday afternoons, to bear one another's burdens before the throne of grace, or to help one another to a better understanding of the Scriptures. Work has been carried on amongst the poor. During the year 31,000 breakfasts, and 24,224 penny dinners, have been provided for men, women, and children, without distinction of class or creed, as a means to the presentation of the Gospel of God's grace. The balance-sheet still presents a deficit, though slightly less than that of last year. Mrs. Robert Cotter is secretary.

M. RABINOWITCH AND HIS WORK.

The friends interested in M. Rabinowitch and his work will be pleased to hear that the building in which the meetings of the Israelites of the New Covenant are to be held is now completed. It is to be called the Somerville Memorial Hall. During the process of erection it excited great interest among the Jews, and was the occasion of much discussion on the teaching of Rabinowitch concerning Jesus the Messiah. The fact of a permanent meeting-place being built greatly impressed the Jews as a sign of Rabinowitch's fixed purpose to devote himself to the work of preaching the Gospel to Israel.

We request earnestly the continued remembrance of the testimony and labours of Rabinowitch by Christian friends in this country. M. Rabinowitch has, during the last month, been assisted by a young Jewish convert, and the Council in London have agreed to engage his services. The circulation of M. Rabinowitch's addresses and pamphlets in Hebrew, Jargon, and Russian has been very extensive. The attendance at the services is most encouraging. The annual expenditure of the Mission is fully £500. A report of the last year will soon be published.

CONFERENCE IN PARIS.

A conference on Christian life and work was held in Paris, October 14 to 17. The prayer-meetings were helpful, and the other proceedings stimulating. The visitors included friends from Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Russia (Colonel Paschkoff), and England (Lord Radstock).

M. Sainton pleaded the cause of evangelisation, showing that there is no reason why pastors should look with suspicion upon those who take the Gospel to the multitudes who are strangers to religious worship. M. Delattre deplored the smallness of the efforts put forth. He said: Why do not the Churches surrender their pastors for the evangelisation of the Roman Catholics? Let us go forth filled with the Holy Spirit, and sustained by a Church prostrate before God. Let us take nothing of the people; it is not meet that the devil should be asked to send forward the work of God. M. Puaux declared: The churches are asleep, because the pastors are. It is "the old man" who mounts the pulpit with us. Pastors, awake!

Not every word of this outspoken type was approved by all the ministers present, some of whom were by no means friendly to "free lance" workers, while others were anxious to tone down references to Romanism. Colonel Paschkoff asserted the supreme authority of the Holy Spirit and the Written Word, as opposed to traditional teaching and ecclesiastical prejudice. The assembly expressed by resolution its joy that the Gospel is being so widely proclaimed in France, and a hope that the work will continue to make ever-increasing progress.

M. Kennedy Anet, of Brussels, demonstrated the necessity for special work among Roman Catholics. He declared Popery to be nothing but a disfigured, or rather a caricatured, Christianity; the best Catholics have not spiritual peace. M. Poinsot, who had laboured forty-seven years in Belguim, said that with the Catholics the Bible has no more authority than the songs of Beranger.

M. Pasquet said: The conscience of the French people has been falsified by Catholicism. Popery is Paganism under a Christian cloak. There are grand individual exceptions, but the system is infernal. Some Protestants lose sight of the duty of evangelising Catholics. But for what else has God preserved Protestantism? Our churches must either conquer or perish. The discussions were very animated and listened to with close attention by numerous audiences.

Price Hughes, &c. We have ourselves personally inspected and investigated matters, and are persuaded that now is the time for the liberating stroke.

The president of the Mission is Alderman Boulton, of Burslem; Mr. Ambrose Wood is the treasurer; and Mr. Lancelot Middleton, Highfield House, Hanley, the superintendent.

The Mission House, just finished, and opened by the kindness of some London friends, gives accommodation for several resident workers. Two deaconesses are already on the spot. Two others are urgently needed, and could be at once received.

RUSSIA AS PERSECUTOR.

It is with great pain that we witness the inhumanity with which the Jews in Russia continue to be treated. The wholesale expulsion of Jews from the districts not specially assigned to them has already affected prejudicially the commerce of the country. The people are fearfully hampered as to education, and in many other ways brought under the heel of oppression.

[extracts.]

"A terrible calamity rests upon the province of Chih-li. At least 4,000,000 must suffer severely before next spring, undoubtedly tens of thousands must die. The flood was caused chiefly by the extraordinary rainfall, which the silted-up streams could not carry off; and the breaking of embankments which had been erected to save certain localities. East of this for 200 li, N.E. 150 li, N. 240 li, W. to Huailuh, and S.W. to Shuen-teh Fu is a lake. The mud houses have caved in by thousands, and those with brick foundations will suffer from the frost.

"In order to obtain a clear view of the present condition of the people, we must remember that last year's food was nearly exhausted, the harvest was promising and the reaping time nigh, when the flood came and the people saw the water rise until it covered the land, in some places from four to twelve feet deep. The harvest is destroyed; also vegetables, fruit, grass and stalk-fuel, so that you can see even now many are tried. During the winter it will be harder still for them. The officials and local societies have rendered efficient temporary relief, that is, a few days' food and shelter were given to 20,000 who came to the city (Tientsin); but most have now been sent back to their villages. Those in the nearest villages have received, adults 250 cash (about 9d.), children 125 cash, once; now they must get on the best way they can. The Government are going to give a little relief in the cold weather.

"I estimate that 9,000,000 dols. would be required for five months' relief, in order to give each adult 600 cash, and each child 300 cash, per month. A relief committee has been formed here, but, because of the depression of trade, very little can be raised locally. If we had 25,000 taels (between £4000 and £5000) to spend in grain, it would be worth 40,000 taels in cash when the river closes. The outlook for Chih-li is dark, and also for some parts of Shantung. One thousand bodies were taken out of the water at the bridge of boats. All the roads are under water. It is hard for the living to move about, and there is little space to bury the dead."

A MEN'S SOCIAL BIBLE-CLASS has been started at Kingsdown, Bristol, to give opportunities of studying what the Bible says about to-day's practical questions. It meets in the schoolroom of Portland-street Wesleyan Chapel, but is conducted on unsectarian lines. Rev. R. Wallis Boyns is the leader of the movement. The session was commenced with a discussion on the bearing of Bible teaching upon the question of "Capital and Labour." Other subjects to be discussed are "Is the Bible Inspired?" "The Bible and Science," "The Temperance Question," "Arbitration versus War," and "Gambling."

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

BLESSING IN WORK.

Dear Sir,—Are Christian workers to look upon times of conscious blessing in work for God as the only blessing? Or are we to believe that God has used our words, even though we have not experienced conscious help? I incline to the latter view; but it might be urged in support of the contrary view that when we do not receive conscious blessing, it is because there is something in us, unbelief, pride, &c., which hinders God from answerseing our prayer. I shall be thankful for any light thrown upon this subject.—Yours truly, Oaklands, Thorner, near Leeds. K. March.

SAMSON.

Dear Sir,—In answer to the request of "Inquirer" for the opinion of some of your readers of Samson, may I say that I have looked the subject up, and have come to the following conclusions:—

(1) Samson does not seem to have been endued with the spirit of wisdom to judge Israel so much as he was with the spirit of power to destroy their enemies; for this seems to have been chiefly the work he did. See Judg. xiv. 19; also xv. 14, 15 and xvi. 30.

(2) With regard to his falling into sin seeming to throw doubt on the fact that he was endued with the Spirit of the Lord—for that is, I think, what your correspondent implies—may I say that the Holy Spirit did not then continually remain with the servant of God, as it does now; for we find in Judg. xiii. 25, that "The Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times"; and, xiv. 19, that "The Spirit of the Lord came upon him," and again, in xv. 14, "The Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him," clearly showing that there were times when he was without it. Probably it was one of these times that he fell into sin; but when he cried unto the Lord, the Spirit of Power came upon him again, stronger than ever, so that he slew more of Israel's oppressors at his death than in his life.

(3) With reference to him making any direct communication to Israel from God, may I ask, Did any of the other judges do so? Was it not rather the work of a prophet than of a judge? Nearly the only one who seems to have made direct communication to Israel from God, during the period of the Judges, was a prophet, sent to them by God. See Judg. vi. 8, where we have a direct "Thus saith the Lord" (from a prophet, not a judge), the counterpart of which we do not find in any other part of the book.—Yours truly, F. D.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION has received the sum of £1000 from Mr. F. A. Bevan, to be repeated annually for the next four years, in memory of his father.

DOVE-ROW RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The twenty-first annual meeting of these schools was held last Monday, in the Morley Hall, Hackney. The present confined and dilapidated premises have become unsuitable, and the need of new buildings is urgent. About 550 children receive instruction in the classes of the Sunday-school. Admirable speeches were delivered by Earl Compton, M.P., who presided, Mr. J. Kirk, Mr. Melville Beech-croft, L.C.C., Mr. Hillman, Mr. Charles Cox, Mr. McFee, and others.

REV. J. THAIN DAVIDSON, D.D., on Sunday last, held his annual service for children and young people at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, which was very well filled in floor and gallery by young people and adults. Dr. Davidson made feeling reference to the death of Mrs. Edwards (professionally known as Mdme. Annie Williams), who had on many occasions sung Gospel solos at these and similar meetings. This lady, a devoted Christian as well as an accomplished vocalist, passed away on Sunday week. A touching letter was read from her husband, describing the comfort which she derived at the last from the promise of God, "Fear not, I am with thee; be not dismayed I am thy God," which had been precious to her for many years. Dr. Davidson took for his subject the figures and inscriptions depicted upon English bronze coins, from which he drew practical lessons of loyalty to Queen and country, and, above all, to the kingdom of heaven.

Obituary.

MR. JAMES DARLING, EDINBURGH.

MANY Christian visitors of the northern capital, as well as Christian residents of the city, will miss Mr. Darling, of the Regent Hotel, Edinburgh. He has been called home in a good old age, closing here a singularly consistent and useful life, but entering on a higher life "with Christ." His Temperance Hotel has been a wonderful meeting-place for Christians for a number of years. Every evening family worship is held in the drawing-room, and most of the visitors are happy to be present. The short service was conducted generally by Mr. Darling himself; but he often invited the assistance of Christians sojourning under his roof. Surely Mr. Darling's plan might be adopted at other hotels, the presence of visitors being optional. It will add much to the interest if one of the family, as at the Regent Hotel, can lead effectively in "the service of song."

Mr. Darling was an elder in the United Presbyterian Church of which Rev. Dr. Andrew Thomson and Rev. John Smith are the ministers.

For the past twelve months Mr. Darling has been in failing health. He was born in Dalkeith in 1820, and was one of the early pioneers of the temperance cause in that town, where he also at a later date started a temperance hotel. He subsequently removed to St. Andrews, and in 1863 settled in Edinburgh. While attending diligently to his own business Mr. Darling found time to take a part in many philanthropic and public duties—notably as a director of Carrubber's Close Mission, of the Band of Hope Union, and as an earnest worker in connection with the Drill Hall Sabbath Breakfast Mission. He has been for several years a member of the City Parochial Board, and has contributed during that time much to the comfort of the inmates of Craiglockhart Poorhouse. Mr. Darling was greatly esteemed by all classes in the community, and by none will his death be more keenly felt than by many of the poorer population, in whose welfare he took a very special interest. There are not a few humble homes in the city that owe much of their brightness to his genial and happy influence. Mr. Darling is survived by a widow and family of one son and three daughters.

DR. T. R. ARMITAGE.

We deeply regret to announce the death of Dr. Thomas Rhodes Armitage, the well-known friend of the blind. Born in 1824, after spending some years on the continent he entered King's College, London, to pursue the study of medicine. A close application to reading so told upon his eyes, however, that he had to relinquish study. A few years later he took the London degree of M.D., and commenced practice as a consulting physician. In 1860 his eyesight again failed, and though he never became quite blind, he found it necessary to abandon his profession. Henceforward Dr. Armitage devoted himself almost entirely to the work of improving the condition of the blind. He became an active member of the Committee of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, but soon came to the conclusion that it was of very little use to take the Gospel to people who were in the lowest depths of misery without making an attempt to supply their most pressing wants. He therefore founded the X.Y.Z. Fund (contributing over £17,000), which materially improved the condition of the blind poor. Impressed with the educational needs of the blind among the middle classes, Dr. Armitage became one of the originators of the Royal Normal College for the Blind at Upper Norwood, and has been one of its most staunch supporters, his pecuniary gifts alone having amounted to nearly £40,000.

Dr. Armitage was an ardent advocate of the use of the Braille type for the blind, and in 1870 he read a paper before the Society of Arts pointing out its advantages. A year or two earlier he had founded the British and Foreign Blind Association, which is still actively engaged in the preparation of books and music printed in the Braille system. He visited most European countries, the United States, and recently Egypt, with a view of ascertaining personally the condition of the blind in each. He was an active member of the recent Royal Commission on the Education of the Blind and Deaf and Dumb, and took part in international congresses on the subject, both in Paris and in Germany.

Latterly, in addition to almost complete blindness, he became very deaf; but his infirmities diminished neither his benevolence nor his cheerfulness; and his interest in the good works in which he was engaged continued unabated to the last. His death at Cashel, Ireland, was the result of a fall from his horse.

Evangelistic Notes.

Strathaven.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a three weeks' mission in the United Presbyterian Church here.

A fifteen days' mission has been held at the Baptist Chapel, Kings Langley, Herts, conducted by Miss C. S. Watts, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The meetings were well attended, and many testified to good received.

Rev. W. J. Mayers has conducted a series of special services in the Baptist Chapel, Lumb, in Rossendale. They have proved a great blessing to the church; on every hand testimony is given to help received and stimulus given to Christian work. Mr. Mayers delivered a lecture to a crowded audience one evening descriptive of Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Elgin, N.B.—The evangelistic services conducted here by Mr. Anderson have been brought to a close. The addresses were truly Scriptural and spiritual, and proved a source of great blessing to believers. The large Town Hall on Sabbath evenings was crowded. During the services there was a steady, regular increase of interest, and almost at every meeting some professed to accept salvation.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a most encouraging mission in connection with Upper Clapton Congregational Church. During his visit many were led to the Saviour, whilst many others have borne testimony to blessing received. A special address to men only, on "Man without God," brought together a large congregation; on another evening Mr. Thorne gave his life story.

E. P. J.

A ten days' mission has been conducted at Market-hill Chapel, Haverhill, Suffolk, by Miss Moore and Mrs. Griffith, with very encouraging results. The after-meetings were specially fruitful of good, whilst all the services were "seasons of refreshing" from the presence of the Lord. After concluding their stay at Haverhill, Mrs. Griffith spent four days at Castle Camps, Cambs., engaged in a similar work, with like blessed results.

Grangemouth, N.B.—A fortnight's mission has been conducted in connection with the Y.M.C.A., most successfully by Mr. J. W. Moodie. Much prayer preceded the mission, and, as the Gospel was clearly and earnestly preached, it is not surprising that there was a rich harvest of souls. Every night anxious souls entered the inquiry-room. At the closing meeting about thirty stood up to testify to having accepted Christ during the mission.

W. E. PARSONS.

Ireland.—Remarkable evangelistic meetings are at present in progress in Crumlin-road and Mountpottinger Methodist Churches, Belfast; during the last few weeks hundreds of persons have professed decision for Christ. Excellent Gospel services were conducted last week in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Belfast, by Mr. J. Townsend Trench; and also in connection with the Belfast Railway Mission by Mr. George Fearn, a convert from Romanism. Rev. James Kirkwood conducted similar services in the Methodist Church, Skibbereen, co. Cork; and Rev. W. Hay Aitken has concluded a fifteen days' mission at Carrickfergus.

ITALIAN AID SOCIETY.—Owing to the still numerous and urgent requests for admission to the Protestant Orphanage for Girls, at Florence, it has been decided that the number of children maintained in the Home should be brought up to fifty, in the course of the year. Already six new beds have been promised, and it is hoped to fill them soon. But the income has been smaller; and, notwithstanding care and economy, with an increased number of children, expenditure will also increase. Since its establishment about thirty years ago, the Orphanage has sheltered and educated a large number of children of Protestants from all parts of Italy, most of whom would otherwise have remained uneducated, or have been subject to Roman Catholic teaching. Many of these are the children of pastors or colporteurs, who have given freely all they had to give, to the service of Christ. The Secretary for England is Miss Reynett, 3, Cranley-place, Onslow-square, London, S.W.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. Sayce, the eminent Orientalist, who recently relinquished his professorship at Oxford, proposes to reside in Egypt.

Mr. W. Spencer Walton is steadily progressing in his restoration to health, though he is still a prisoner at Matlock, where he is under treatment. He hopes soon to be able to undertake public work.

Mr. Fritz Schaaff, superintendent of the Berlin Christian Mission, is in London, making known the character and needs of his interesting work. He will be glad of invitations to address meetings. Letters may be addressed to him, care of Mrs. Pennell, 5, Gordon-street, Gordon-square, W.C.

Mr. D. C. Joseph has resumed his work at Jerusalem. During a stay in the Isle of Man, where he first came to a knowledge of the Lord, he married Miss F. E. Moore, who will, it is hoped, prove a valued co-worker. This lady has for some time been pursuing studies preparatory to engaging in work amongst the Jews.

Mr. Solomon L. Ginsburg, who has for some time been labouring in Brazil, intends to devote himself to work among the Jews in South America. He has been accepted by Rev. John Wilkinson as an agent of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, and his address is 71, Rua Sete de Setembro, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

Mr. Matthew Burnett desires to return thanks to God for his goodness in having spared his life, and restored his voice, so far as to justify him in accepting a long-standing invitation to revisit Whitehaven, Cumberland, the former scene of his labours. Mr. Burnett, accompanied by Mrs. Burnett (a true helpmeet in the work), will deliver his first evangelistic address in England at Whitehaven on Sabbath evening next, November 2. He hopes to engage in further work in England and Scotland.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray has been suffering severely from congestion of the brain and other complications, brought on, it is thought, by his arduous labours in arousing interest on behalf of the proposed new Whitefield's Tabernacle. We are glad to learn that the graver symptoms of the brain congestion have now abated, and that Mr. Wray is slowly improving. It is not thought probable, however, that he will be able to resume his work before the new year. Meanwhile, the erection of the new building is a source of constant anxiety to him, and even in his confinement he is constantly devising plans in connection with it.

The Needham Brothers.—Rev. George C. Needham occupied the pulpit of Berkeley Temple, Boston, during the month of August. He commenced Gospel work last month in Minneapolis. Rev. B. C. Needham has accepted a call to the Coatsville, Pa., Baptist Church. He leaves the Bethany Church at Reading strong and aggressive, where he preached for three years. Rev. Thomas Needham continues evangelising. He is now at work in the South. He is an earnest, pathetic preacher. Rev. William E. Needham, the youngest of the four, is building up a prosperous church in Germantown, Pa. He makes the Cross his central theme, and conversions are numerous under his preaching.

Mrs. Ahok, the Chinese Christian who recently visited England, had a painful return to her home at Foochow. When on the house-boat which met the steamer at the anchorage, her brother and nephew, accompanied by Dr. Sites, broke to her the sad news that her husband had died a few days previously. The poor lady was rendered quite prostrate, and for some time was inconsolable. In her mourning she frequently said: "If I could only see his face once more, and tell him all I have done in England!" She knew how much it would have rejoiced his heart to learn of the Christian interest excited by her visit to Great Britain. After a time the troubled soul was calmed, and it is hoped that, by God's grace, she is now "rejoicing in tribulation." Miss Mead, who responded to Mrs. Ahok's appeal to undertake mission work in China, aptly writes: "God's dealings have been very wonderful. But then we cannot see as He does."

GERMANY.—The question of the dwellings of the working people in Berlin has for a long period occupied the attention of social reformers. A statement has recently gone the round of the Berlin press that a project has been submitted to the Minister of Commerce and Industry for the establishment of a suburban workmen's colony of 4000 dwellings in Lichtenberg.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

My Dear Sir,—In your issue of October 24 is a letter from "Inquirer," commenting on a certain passage contained in Rev. F. B. Meyer's exposition of John i. 2, 3, which appeared in The Christian of October 10. The paragraph to which reference is made by your correspondent is on the need of spiritual replenishment on account of the waste to which the spiritual life is daily liable. On this part of his subject, and immediately following an illustration drawn from physical life, Mr. Meyer's words are: "So does the freshness of the Divine life within us need to be daily renewed; and we must go back to Him in whom it is ever brimming, that out of his fulness we may receive, and grace for grace. It is in the reading of his Word, in waiting upon his ordinances, especially in the Lord's Supper, that the inner life becomes thus replenished and fulfilled with his grace and heavenly benediction." In this passage Mr. Meyer clearly states that the replenishment is derived, not simply from the Lord's Supper, as your correspondent distinctly implies that he does, but also from the use of the Word, and the Divine ordinances in general.

I trust that your readers will see that the incomplete quotation made by "Inquirer," and his comments thereon, are seriously misleading, and are also unjust to Mr. Meyer.—Yours faithfully,

Putney. W. M. Seaman.

Sir,—I am startled to find myself suspected by one of your correspondents of High Church tendencies, because I have said that "especially in the Lord's Supper the inner life becomes replenished and fulfilled with his grace and heavenly benediction."

I am thankful that this sentence has been thus brought out into fuller relief, and will perhaps attract the notice of many who might not otherwise have remarked it. For this is one of my most cherished convictions. I feel (if I may be forgiven the personal reference) that I owe more than I can tell to the practice of weekly communion, and I unhesitatingly recommend it to my fellow-believers.

It is impossible in this brief space to explain all the meaning with which the Lord's Supper seems to be invested. I have tried to expand it in the November number of The Christian Treasury. Suffice it to say that, in my opinion, it should be more than a symbol of confession or a service of commemoration, and should furnish an occasion on which the devout soul may expect, and prepare itself to receive, some special spiritual blessing, whilst it assumes the attitude of obedience to this solemn and blessed rite.

Of course I do not believe that the bread and wine can in themselves carry with them any spiritual gift whatever; but, whilst we obey Christ in partaking of them, and appropriate them as the sign and seal of his Covenant with us, He draws near and gives fresh and living pledges of his love and faithfulness. The material act and spiritual blessing are synchronous and simultaneous.

I do not feel much sympathy with your correspondent's mode of reasoning, that we are to judge of the relative importance of doctrine by the number of references on the pages of the New Testament. In that case, the Lord's Day would stand an even worse chance than, in his judgment, the Lord's Supper seems to do.

There seems little doubt that the practice of the early Church was frequent, and probably weekly, communion; and the Apostles did not need to allude to or urge a practice which was already taken for granted and universal.

It is hardly necessary to remind your readers that the words to which reference has been called, were suggested by the closing portions of the Communion Service of the English Church, which have always seemed to me as beautiful as they are appropriate.—Yours truly, F. B. Meyer.

Regent's-park Chapel.

"JOYFUL NEWS" MISSION.—A meeting was held in St. John's-square Chapel, Clerkenwell, a few days ago, to bid farewell to two of Rev. Thomas Champness's evangelists on the eve of their departure for China. Rousing addresses were delivered by Mr. and Mrs. Champness, Rev. J. E. Wakerley, and the two outgoing missionaries, Messrs. Argent and Cooper.

The Book World.

The Christian Course.

The Blessed Life: How to Find and Live it. By N. J. Hofmeyer. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. The author is senior professor in the Theological College of the Dutch Reformed Church, Stellenbosch, Cape Colony, and this, his first attempt at English authorship, does him great credit. Some time ago he delivered a series of addresses to the students under his care, on the subject of man's "Returning to the Father," "Surrendering to the Son," and "Walking by the Spirit." These were in due course published in Dutch, and are now embodied in a book for English readers. The teaching is sound throughout, and expressed in vigorous language. Considering the circumstances under which the theme was originally worked out, it is not surprising to find the book somewhat dialectical; doubtless, to certain minds this will render the work specially attractive and useful. Exact in definition, the author is at the same time Scriptural in substance; and the spiritual mind shows itself alike in argument and application. The chapters, thirty-four in number, are so many links in a chain of cogent reasoning, conducting the reader from "conversion explained," to "God's great purpose." We are sure the work will prove helpful to earnest seekers after "the blessed life."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Child's Picture Scrap Book. 1s. Sunday School Union. An attractive and cheap book, containing 200 illustrations, as well as many rhymes and other items for the entertainment of the young.

Short Talks for the Times. By Mark Guy Pearse. 1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly. This is a cheap edition of a book well worthy its distinguished author. The "talks" are twenty-six in number, and full of practical teaching presented with winning force.

Plain Proofs of the Great Facts of Christianity. By Rev. F. R. Wynne, D.D. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Designed to help such as are labouring under mental and spiritual difficulties, this little work has reached a third edition. It is unpretentious, but calculated to answer many a perplexing question, and to satisfy doubters as to the certainty of the warrant of faith in Christ.

An Exposition of Jude's Epistle of Apostasy. By Rev. D. Round. 1s. Partridge. These are thoughtful and practical pages. The Epistle is divided into twelve short portions, each of which is expounded at length. A very definite lesson for our own times is pointed by this shortest of Scripture documents, and the character and importance of the lesson is set forth with much clearness by the author of this instructive little volume.

Sunbeams on my Faith; or, Reminiscences of Christian Work in Various Lands. By Ebba J. D. Wright (née Almroth). 2s. 6d. Nisbet. The talented wife of Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright, of Dublin, here gives some chapters of her experiences—from early life in Stockholm to a quite recent visit to her northern fatherland. Two of Mrs. Wright's stories—one of them about a faithful deaf and dumb servant—appeared in our columns last year. Some excellent illustrations set off reminiscences which are beautiful in their simplicity and rendered specially charming by the vein of high motive and noble interest which runs all through them.

Nineteen Centuries of Drink in England. A history by Richard Valpy French, D.C.L., &c. 3s. 6d. National Temperance Publication Depôt. This is a revised and enlarged edition of a book of wide interest. The part which drink has played in the individual and national life of the people is shown in the course of an inquiry into the beverages which have been in use, the customs which have been associated with drinking, and the various efforts that have been made to control or prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of strong drink. The evils which flow from enslavement to a depraved appetite are vividly described; and the reader cannot but take warning in the sense of "taste not, touch not," as he learns of the baneful influence which intoxicating liquors have exerted over some of the strongest minds in the history of our land. The pages bear witness to much research, and are well worth reading.

A very excellent paper on "The Difference Between Bible Reading and Bible Study," by Mary L. G. Petrie, appears in The Girl's Own Paper for November, the first part of a new volume, as well as two very interesting contributions from Miss Emma Brewer.

The Countess of Meath contributes an article entitled, "A Woman's Thoughts on Travel," to the November part of The Quiver, which commences the new volume. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, Prebendary Harry Jones, and Rev. George Everard contribute papers for Sunday reading.

Books for Children.—Messrs. Partridge & Co. are publishing a series of very attractive illustrated books at sixpence each. Recent issues are: The Wanderings of a Bible, by Clara Lucas Balfour; Harry's Monkey: How it Helped the Missionaries, by Mrs. C. E. Bowen; No Work, No Bread, by the author of "Jessica's First Prayer"; and Herbert's First Year at Bramford, by Mrs. Bowen.

One Body, The Church. By John A. Savage, Tunbridge Wells. Broom & Rouse. An essay on the essentially spiritual nature of the Church of God. The author shows that one result of an unquestioning submission to Scripture teaching would be the manifestation of outward unity. His views on church order are very narrow, but he is not consciously uncharitable in his allusions to those with whom he does not agree.

They being Dead yet Speak. By E. M. Dewhurst. 1s. Marshall Brothers. This is a second series of addresses on "Women of the Old Testament." The object is to draw out lessons of a practical kind for women's Bible-classes and mothers' meetings. Every page is suggestive, warnings and counsels being enforced by a statement of the experiences of saints and sinners of whom we read in the Old Testament.

The Old Gospel ever New: The Story of Naaman; or, Sin and its Cure. By Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. 1s. 6d. "Home Words" Office. Ten very readable addresses on one of the most interesting and instructive pages of Old Testament history. The author shows that the Gospel is emphatically anticipated, illustrated, and commended to the heart and conscience by the striking incidents of Naaman's leprosy and its cure. The book is full of helpful truth, and we trust it will be widely read.

The Biblical Illustrator: Philippians and Colossians. Compiled by Rev. Joseph S. Exell, M.A. 7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. The industry of the editor of this work is most praiseworthy. Here are 700 unusually large pages full of expository matter, side lights, and homiletic notes, gathered from a wide range of readings. Preachers and teachers will find the volumes of the "Illustrator" series very useful, for any one of them supplies hundreds of "skeletons" of addresses, in addition to throwing light upon the meaning of the sacred text.

Our Father's Kingdom. Lectures on the Lord's Prayer. By Rev. Charles B. Ross, M.A., B.D. 2s. 6d. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. The author is minister of the Presbyterian Church, Lachine, Canada. There is nothing specially distinctive in his book, the purpose of which is to suggest ideas for meditation, rather than to exhaust lines of thought opened up by the pattern prayer. It is well shown that the prayer which our Lord taught his disciples reveals the true realm of prayer, as covering material needs as well as spiritual blessings.

Popular Natural History. Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has published some attractive books on popular natural history. Footprints, by Sarah Tytler, has reached a fourth edition; it is made up of chatty papers on nature superficially regarded, and the pages afford evidence of wide reading. There are many illustrations. Bedford Pollard's Everyday Miracles rehearses the story of nature's ways, in order not only to arouse the enthusiasm of young minds in scientific observation, but to point out the abounding evidences of Divine skill, forethought, and love. The author makes favourable reference to the theory of evolution. Speculation, which is so frequently associated with scepticism, ought to have been distinguished alike from science and religion. Alexis and his Flowers. By Beatrix F. Cresswell. Flower lore for boys and girls is presented in an eminently readable form in this book. The pages are bright with old-time sayings and tales of to-day about some of the most popular garden and wild flowers. (3s. 6d. each.)

FLOWER VOICES. By Harriet E. Colville. 1s. Nisbet. A choice little work, in which flowers are made to typify men and women, and to whisper important lessons regarding life and duty.

Messrs. Partridge have added to their series of illustrated books for children: PLAYTIME PICTURES AND STORIES, and SMILES AND DIMPLES; or, Happy Hours for Little Pets (1s. each), These books ought to be favourites with the juveniles.

THE WEEKLY PULPIT. Elliot Stock. Volume i. of the new series contains many very suggestive sermons and outlines, with notes of a homiletical and illustrative character. Preachers will find this a useful work, as the discourses cover a wide range of subjects.

"CALLS TO SURRENDER." 1s. 9d. per 100. Marshall Brothers. The first four numbers of a new and attractive series of tracts, published monthly. They are loud and earnest "calls," and we wish for them an extensive circulation. They emanate from the Faith Mission at Glasgow.

ALL THROUGH THE DAY. By Rev. George Everard, M.A. 1s. Nisbet. A precept from Holy Writ and a meditation for each day in the month, by the esteemed vicar of Christ Church, Dover. Essentially spiritual in tone, this little volume will prove helpful to many an earnest disciple.

CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN GOD AND THE SOUL. 1s. Nisbet. This is an adaptation of a work which has long been in use in Germany. Prayers and praises by the soul, and assurances and promises from God, brought together from Holy Writ, are ranged under ten heads, and the book is likely to exercise a comforting ministry to the suffering and sorrowful.

FIVE STONES FROM THE BROOK: Counsel and Comfort for the People of God. By Rev. George Everard, M.A. 2s. Nisbet. The opening chapter on five "one things" of the New Testament, gives the title to this volume, which contains ten very helpful papers on spiritual themes. The teaching is unexceptionable, and the expression always lucid. Rich in experimental truth, these pages will, we trust, have many readers.

LIFE'S PHASES. By James Stark. 2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. This is an attempt to present and deal with some of the salient experiences and needs of a human being from the cradle to the grave. The chapters are fourteen in number, and show a varied reading and a lively imagination, as well as a good knowledge of life and its interests. One of the charms of the book is that it presents in a striking light common experiences and truths and principles which the Christian judgment at once recognises and approves.

A HANDBOOK OF SCIENTIFIC AND LITERARY BIBLE DIFFICULTIES. Edited by Robert Tuck, B.A. 7s. 6d. Elliot Stock. This second volume of the "Difficulties" series contains a vast amount of information gathered from various sources with a view to the solution of historical and scientific questions that have been raised by friends and enemies of the Bible. The chapters showing the bearing of archæological research upon the elucidation of the Scriptures are valuable; those which deal with questions of criticism are, in our judgment, too much after the spirit of those at whose hands the Bible receives the most damaging treatment. Readers who can discriminate between ascertained truth and mere opinion will find the volume very useful in the study of many questions more or less recondite and obscure.

HYMNS OF CONSECRATION AND FAITH. Edited by Mrs. Evan H. Hopkins. Marshall Brothers, Paternoster-row. This is a new and considerably altered edition of a popular Hymn Book. In its own line it has long held, and still deserves to hold, the chief place. The alterations which have been made, however, are not all to the advantage of the book. We do not regret the substitution of other tunes for some of Mr. Mountain's in the older edition; but we think it a mistake to introduce so many that are entirely new. A few more well-known favourites from other books would have been an advantage. Some of the new tunes undoubtedly possess both melody and harmony; but in others there is a straining after unusual harmony which will prevent them from ever becoming popular. Of the changes in the words the most serious is the omission of Murray McCheyne's excellent hymn "Jehovah Tsidkenu." Surely this was an oversight. The addition of Missionary and After-Meeting hymns is a distinct advantage to the book, and will greatly increase its value.

FATHER MATHEW. The biography of this distinguished temperance reformer, by John Francis Maguire, M.P., has been abridged and re-edited by Miss Rosa Mulholland, and published by Messrs. Bagster & Sons. The sketch is eminently sympathetic, and accompanied by a portrait of "the Apostle of Temperance." 1s. 6d., cloth.

COTTAGE POLITICS. A series of papers by Mary E. Roper. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. Christian counsels are here presented in a form specially attractive to persons whose world is not much larger than a small home circle. The chapters are named after great political measures and catch words, and important instruction is conveyed by means of vivacious stories and dialogues enforcing great principles of life and action.

ADELAIDE CAPECE MINUTOLO. By Mrs. A. Craven. Dublin: G. Herbert, 117, Grafton-street. Short memoirs of a Roman Catholic of noble blood, who lived near Naples with her sister. Her accomplishments were many, her benevolence great, and her fortitude in bearing a painful illness remarkable. To these her biographer justly draws notice, but her religious views, though free from the grosser superstitions of the Roman Catholic Church, will not be of any help to enlightened Protestants.

DIVINE ENQUIRIES. By J. A. Winscombe. Seeley & Co. (profits for C.M.S.). A series of short discourses for the young on our Lord's questions, as recorded in the Gospels. While there is a good deal to stir thought and rouse interest, it seems to us that greater simplicity and directness is advisable in addressing the young. For instance, in the discourse on John iii. 10-12, the elaborate comparison between natural and spiritual birth is far above the comprehension even of older children. With this friendly criticism we recognise the evangelical spirit of the writer, and wish the book success.

LYRA CONSOLATIONIS. Selections from the poets of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, arranged by Claudia Frances Hernaman. 6s. Longmans & Co. These pages are designed to comfort mourners by pointing them to the cross and grave of the Vanquisher of death. The poems include many beautiful pieces, grouped under those clauses of the Apostles' Creed in which the Church confesses her belief in the Lord's crucifixion, death, and burial, in his resurrection, ascension, and coming again. A few French and German compositions are included in the selection, which we join the editor in hoping may strengthen some to wait in joyful expectation for the time when "sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

THREE LISTS OF BIBLE TRANSLATIONS ACTUALLY ACCOMPLISHED, corrected up to August, 1890. By R. N. Cust, LL.D. Elliot Stock. The lists here given are alphabetical, geographical, and linguistic, and they furnish a useful conspectus of what has been done to multiply versions of God's Word for the definite purpose of world-wide evangelisation. We might object to several statements in the introduction, complain that in some respects the compilation exhibits disregard for the principles laid down by the author, and point out defects in the list of translators, including the omission of the name of Tyndale. But Dr. Cust does not pretend to have attained perfection; and as we cannot accept the challenge he throws down to fault-finders, that they should compile a better work, we cheerfully say that persons interested in the harder facts and drier details of Bible translation will find the lists good reading, and useful for reference.

THE PSALMIST: CHANTS AND ANTHEMS. Edited by Ebenezer Prout, B.A. J. Haddon & Co., Bouverie-street. "The Psalmist" Tune Book is already well known. This collection of chants and anthems is published in order to complete the book. Concerning the Chants, the editor says, "No claim is laid to any novelty, either of design or arrangement; one object, and one only, has been kept in view, namely, practical utility." The best commendation that can be given to the book is the acknowledgment that this object has been attained. The words are carefully and wisely pointed, so that they will be easily sung; the tunes are well chosen, and are appropriate for the words, and as there are not less than 130 chant tunes used, there can be no lack of variety. There are over 100 anthems, among which are many Congregational favourites, while all are of such a character that an ordinary congregation could soon learn to sing them with enjoyment. We commend the book as one likely to be most useful in promoting congregational worship.

PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS. Recent publications from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, include two packets (6d. each) of useful booklets, by William Thomson, called the KNOWING JESUS Series.—Mr. John Kensit has issued: POPERY COMPLETELY AT VARIANCE WITH THE BIBLE (1d.), by Rev. James Gardner, M.A., M.D.—a crushing indictment of the Romish system; and THE CUI BONO OF HEREDITISM (3d.), a paper recently read before the British Association, by Rev. F. O. Morris, B.A.—a pungent exposure of the Darwinian theory of development.—From Mr. W. Wileman, 34, Bouverie-street, E.C., we have received a copy of a faithful sermon—THE LATE CARDINAL NEWMAN; OR, DECEIVING AND BEING DECEIVED (2 Tim. iii. 13), preached on August last in All Saints' Church, Hatcham, by Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, M.A. (2d.).—Mr. Thomas Hamblen, 16, The Higher Parade, Leamington Spa, has issued an evangelical booklet, by "Presbyter Senex," entitled, A DEFINITE CREED; OR, TWELVE THINGS OF WHICH I AM QUITE SURE (8d. per dozen).—Mrs. Harvey-Jellie has recently written two more booklets. A QUESTION FOR MOTHERS (1d. National Temperance Publication Depôt) is suitable for temperance workers; HAVE A PURPOSE (1d. T. O. Smith, 14, Paternoster-square) is specially intended for distribution among young people.

GOLDEN TEXT CALENDAR FOR 1891. Mr. Holness publishes this tablet almanac, specially designed for use in offices or places of business. Every day a fresh portion of God's Word is disclosed.

Messrs. Marshall Bros. are making up in packets, under the title of GRAPE SHOT, assorted leaflets on Christian evidences, from the pens of Messrs. H. L. Hastings and J. H. Mitchell (6d. upwards each packet). The leaflets are calculated to excite earnest thought on the part of such as call themselves Freethinkers.

CHRISTMAS LETTERS. The publications this year of the Christmas Letter Mission are good in substance and attractive in form. Such missives as these will be acceptable in most homes, and the cards are likely to be treasured for their artistic qualities as well as the inspiring legends which they display. Complete sample packets may be had for 5s., from Hazell, Watson & Viney, 1, Creed-lane, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

THE LATE JOHN PATTERSON, J.P. By Thos. A. Leigh. 6d. Philip, Son & Nephew, 49 and 51, South Castle-street, Liverpool. This is the biographical sketch which appeared in our issue of August 29, extended by the addition of new matter. The friends of the late "doughty champion of truth, purity, and righteousness" (to use the words of Rev. S. R. Macphail) will be glad to possess this memorial pamphlet.

MR. G. P. COHEN, a converted Jew from Russian Poland, and an unsectarian evangelist, is open to conduct special services and lecture on Jewish customs, &c. Mr. Cohen has recently conducted meetings at Northampton, Manchester, Nottingham, and Sheffield. Address, 6, Cripley-road, Oxford.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dean Lefroy has resumed the mission services in the nave of Norwich Cathedral on Sunday evenings.

A new mission church, with sittings for 200 people, has been opened at Barrow in connection with St. Mary's Church, Whalley.

Active steps are being taken towards the establishment of an order of deaconnesses in the Exeter diocese. A house has already been approved of, and is being put into repair.

The Bishop of St. Albans, on Thursday, dedicated the Mission Church of St. Albans, which has been built in the parish of St. Andrew's, Romford, to meet the wants of a thickly populated part of the parish.

The Bishop of Rochester, on Saturday afternoon, dedicated a new mission church in Canterbury-road, Camberwell, for the Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, Mission, which has been held for the past three years under a railway arch.

The Archbishop of Canterbury had arranged to deliver judgment in the Bishop of Lincoln's case to-day (Friday), but it has been necessarily postponed owing to the severe bereavement which he has suffered in the death of his elder daughter, Miss Mary Eleanor Benson, on Monday last.

At the Liverpool Diocesan Conference last week a resolution was passed declaring the practice of congregationalism—churches electing their own officers, and managing their affairs, to be irrespective to all authority save that of the Divine Head—to be opposed to the polity and principles of the National Church.

Rev. R. P. Ashe, who was the friend and co-worker of the late Alexander Mackay in Uganda during the reigns of King Mtesa and King Mwanga, has resolved to resign his curacy and go back to Uganda. He has been led to take this step by a letter from a native convert. This letter stated that since Mackay's death they had been left without a teacher, and the people were eager to hear the Gospel. Mr. Ashe is at present curate at Wareham, Dorset.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill desires us to state that he will continue to preach in his church at Regent-square on Sunday morning and evening, at least till the middle of November.

A very lively conference on the home mission work of the two London Presbyteries was held at Regent-square Church on Tuesday evening of last week. The attendance was very good, and though there was some clashing of opinion as to methods, a spirit of earnestness pervaded the whole. Dr. Dykes presided, and able contributions to the evening's speaking were made by Mr. McPhail, of Streatham, Mr. Jeffreys, of Stratford, and others.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. E. Roberts has been recognised as co-pastor with Dr. Maclaren, of Union Church, Manchester.

A new Baptist Chapel was opened at Street, Somerset, on Thursday, last week. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. E. Edwards, of Torquay.

At the autumnal meeting of the Surrey and Middlesex Baptist Association, on the suggestion of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, it was agreed to change the name to "The Home Counties Baptist Association."

At Hammersmith West-end Chapel Rev. E. J. Hewett, of Mount Carey, Jamaica, recently gave a most interesting account of his work in that island, and of the work of the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society in the Islands of the West Indies.

The Baptist "forward movement" in London is reported to be doing exceedingly well. Rev. F. C. Spurr, who recently resigned his pastorate at Cardiff in order to strengthen the London contingent, is proving a valuable helper in the movement. The Deaconesses' Home has become a busy centre of work.

At a meeting of the ministers and delegates of the Montgomeryshire and Radnorshire Old Baptist Association, held at Llanidloes last week, a resolution was adopted requesting the Prince of Wales to discountenance betting and gambling, and it was agreed that the resolution should be forwarded to His Royal Highness.

The foundation-stones of a building to be called the Surrey Gardens Memorial Hall, in commemoration of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's three years' ministry, from 1856 to 1859, in the Surrey-gardens Music Hall, were laid by Mr. Spurgeon on Monday afternoon, last week, in the presence of a large assembly. The building is situate in Penrose-street, Walworth, and will cost £3000.

On Wednesday evening, last week, the opening meeting was held of a Young People's Union, which has been formed in connection with South Parade Chapel, Leeds. Mr. John Barran, M.P., in opening the proceedings, delivered a helpful address to the young people. Rev. G. Hill said the main object of the Union was to win and train the young people for Christ. It would supply a bond of union for all the young people who were members of the church and congregation, and would help to keep with them their elder scholars, who were too apt to drift away.

Resignations.—Rev. H. B. Bardwell, Station-hill Church, Chippenham.—Rev. A. A. Cole, Goodall-street Church, Walsall.—Rev. W. E. Glanville, the pastorate at Wells, Somerset.—Rev. Lewis Bartlett, Carey Chapel, Moulton, Northants.

SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth declares himself satisfied on the whole with the reception which the press has given to his book.

The Queen for last week has a pleasing portrait and a sympathetic sketch of "La Maréchale" of France, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. C. A. Berry has declined the invitation to the pastorate of Brixton Congregational Church.

Rev. Bryan Dale reported at the autumnal meetings of the Leeds and York district Yorkshire Congregational Union, held last week at Knaresborough, that the sum of £1300 had been subscribed for the purpose of carrying on aggressive work in the towns of the county, and that earnest attention was being paid to the matter of grouping churches in the villages.

At the annual meeting of Clifton Church, Peckham, the secretary stated that during the year eighty-nine had been received into the church, making the number now on the church roll 591, and a total of 876 received during the thirteen years' pastorate of Rev. H. J. Perkins. A mission-room and a children's mission are connected with the church, also Bible-classes for men and women.

Calls Accepted.—Mr. Walter Lanceley, of Tattenhall, to the English Church, Holywell, Flintshire.—Mr. H. T. Andrews, of Mansfield College, to the James Spicer Memorial Church, Chingford.—Rev. W. J. Meek, Ashurst Wood, East Grinstead, to Wingham, Kent.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Frederick Sessions has given an Indian "Tamasha" at York, and there and elsewhere has been pressing the need of a High School at Hoshungabad. If Friends neglect the present opportunity, great loss to the cause of Christ may result.

The propagation of the Gospel in the district occupied the attention of last London and Middlesex Quarterly Meeting, and at the same time a certificate was read on behalf of Elijah Burgess Seale, of Indiana, who has come to labour for a time within its bounds.

Encouraging information comes from Theophilus Waldmeier, of Lebanon. He says:—"Many strangers, ladies and gentlemen, who come up here for the summer, are attending our meetings for worship. The Mission exercises a very powerful influence upon all classes of people here in the East. I am sure that there is a revival in store for Lebanon, and a spiritual harvest for our Heavenly Father's glory."

On Sunday last Benjamin I. Elsmere, of the Pales, Radnorshire, and William Hobson, Cardiff, concluded a brief series of meetings in Milford Haven. In the afternoon several warm desires were earnestly expressed that the meeting-house, now closed for years, should be re-opened, as great need is felt for such services as were held. Leave had very courteously been given by Mr. Oswald for temperance addresses to the men employed in the shipbuilding-yard, and Gospel temperance meetings were also addressed on Saturday and Sunday evenings in the Temperance Hall. There seems an open door for Friends in the district.

METHODIST.

Rev. Edward Smith, late of Clerkenwell, has entered upon his work in the Eastbrook Circuit, Bradford, with great promise of success. There have been large congregations at all the places where he has preached.

The work of the Clapton Mission of the Primitive Methodist Connexion continues to progress, under the superintendence of Rev. Thomas Jackson. The evangelistic and benevolent agencies of the mission are securing increased attention.

On Thursday next an iron hall for evangelistic work is to be opened at Bisley, Gloucestershire, in connection with Mr. Josiah Nix's Convalescent Home there, under the auspices of the West London Mission. The hall, with all necessary appurtenances, including a piano, was promised to Mr. Nix as a present by a friend.

Memorial stones have been laid of a new Wesleyan chapel at Westbury Park, Bristol. The building is to provide accommodation for 350 persons. For several years services have been conducted in this suburb of Bristol in a temporary iron structure, which, though twice enlarged, has been found inadequate to meet the requirements. It is the only place of worship in the immediate locality.

The Free Methodists are about to put forth vigorous efforts to rouse the churches to aggressive work. Arrangements are being made for holding a Home Mission Convention, which will last for two days. The convention will include all the circuits of the Bradford district of Yorkshire, and will extend as far as Sheffield, including some of the Lancashire churches. The meetings will take place during November.

The third annual meeting in connection with the Birmingham Wesleyan Mission was held on Wednesday evening last week. In the course of an address the Lord Mayor of York congratulated the Wesleyans of Birmingham on the progress they were making with the "forward movement," and urged all Christian people to diligence and full consecration to Christ and the work which He had appointed them to do.

In connection with Brunswick Chapel, Leeds, there is a large men's Bible-class. Founded two or three years ago, it has steadily grown, under the vigorous leadership of Mr. J. W. Campbell, and others, until it now numbers some six or seven hundred members. It is an impressive sight on some Sunday afternoon, when a favourite speaker is there, to see the great, wide-spreading body of the chapel full of eager Yorkshire workingmen, scores of them until but recently regular non-worshippers.

Some time since a scheme was suggested by which City-road Wesleyan Chapel, London, should be made a sort of "cathedral" for Methodists, the services on Sundays to be conducted by some of the foremost preachers of the denomination. The scheme was sanctioned by the last Wesleyan Conference, and came into operation on Sunday last, when Rev. Dr. Greeves, one of the ex-Presidents of the Conference, and Principal of Southlands College, Battersea, was the first preacher.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Convalescent Home for Children has been opened at Belfast.

The first branch in Ireland of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour has been formed under encouraging auspices in connection with Knock Methodist Church.

Mr. J. S. Smithson, of Chicago, who originated the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, and also the Free Breakfast Movement in that city, recently preached with much acceptance to large congregations in University-road Methodist Church, Belfast.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. R. J. Moffatt, late rector of Kilternan, co. Dublin.—Rev. N. B. Curry, late rector of Killaloan, Clonmel.—At Markethill, Mr. Alex. Small, J.P., for many years an elder in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and a devoted Christian.—Rev. Frederick Thatcher, prebendary of Lichfield, formerly a missionary at Auckland, New Zealand, under the first Bishop Selwyn.—Rev. J. C. Leigh, minister of the Baptist Church, Belvedere, Kent.—Mrs. Stephenson, wife of Rev. Dr. T. Bowman Stephenson, Principal of the Children's Home and Orphanage, Bonner-road, Victoria Park, London.—Rev. W. Smoldon, Baptist minister of Lochee, N.B.—Rev. E. A. Thomson, minister of Free St. Stephen's Church, Edinburgh. At Edinburgh on Friday last, Mrs. James Walker of Inverness.

Appeals.

Anti-Infidel Tracts.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise, 70, King's Cross-road, London, W.C., writes:—"We receive many appeals for free grants of literature from missionaries at home and abroad, and are anxious to respond to them. But we are already greatly indebted, and unless help is forthcoming we must close the year with a deficit of over £100."

Borough Market Mission.—The ladies who conduct the "mothers' meeting" at this Mission will be glad of second-hand garments, especially children's, which are disposed of to the mothers at a nominal sum; the proceeds enable them to meet the expenses of the meetings. Parcels should be sent carriage free to Mr. Morris, Mission Hall, 9, Park-street, Borough Market, S.E.

A Cemetery for Protestants in Spain.—Some time ago, a piece of ground in the Vega of Granada was secured, for a small sum of money, as a cemetery for Protestants. The burying-places in that district are in the hands of the priests, and they will not permit Protestants to be buried in them. When the school master of an evangelical school in Escornaz died, more than a year ago, the priest said that he would not allow the body of a "heretic" to be buried in consecrated ground. It had, therefore, to be laid in a field, guarded by night from wild beasts by three men. At last, permission was got to bury it in a piece of common ground. The ground referred to above was granted by the Governor of Granada, when he was appealed to about the matter, and several Protestants have since been buried in it. It requires, however, to be walled in, and the people of the district are too poor to do it, being only able for a few weeks in the year to earn more than about tenpence or a shilling a day. The cost will be some £31, towards which gifts will be thankfully received by Mrs. Robert Peddie, 8, Granville-terrace, Edinburgh, sec. and treas., Spanish Evangelisation Society; or by Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's Gate, London, S.W

AN OPENING FOR WORK AT CHATHAM.—Mr. J. Fletcher, hon. sec., Soldiers' and Seamen's Home, Military-road, Chatham, writes:—"Our Soldiers' and Seamen's Home has been at work for the last twelve years, with great and good results. We want two Christian ladies to come and work with us. For Christians of undoubted piety, earnest zeal, intense love for Christ and for souls, able to play and sing, ready to work for the spiritual, moral, and material well-being of the men and wives and families of the married men, there is work to do. Any such, especially if able to support themselves in whole or in part, would confer a favour by communicating with me."

MADAGASCAR.—In Madagascar there are at present 900 congregations, with 130,000 members and 161,000 adherents. These are superintended by 27 missionaries, who are assisted by 827 native pastors and 1,419 local preachers. The 300 Sabbath-schools are attended by 10,000 children; and the 860 day-schools by 28,478 boys and 30,419 girls. During the past year the natives have paid upwards of £733 in school fees, and contributed upwards of £3,667 for the maintenance and extension of Gospel ordinances. In addition to the ordinary means of grace, much is being done to promote the well-being of the people, spiritually, morally, and socially, by means of Bible-reading clubs, and temperance, white-cross, and anti-tobacco societies.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 2.—Proverbs XXVII.

1. To provide for to-morrow is necessary and wise, but do not presume upon it so as to neglect present duty. Compare James iv. 13, 14.

2. As did the centurion (Luke vii. 4, 6, 9). Of Cato, Sallust said, "He would rather be than seem to be a good man; so that the less he sought glory, the more he obtained it."

5, 6. That is not love which refuses to utter rebuke (Lev. xix. 17); yet how difficult it is to receive it (Gal. iv. 16).

7. "Hunger is the best sauce." This is true in spiritual things (Rev. iii. 17, 18). A sense of deep need makes palatable what would otherwise be bitter truths.

14. Ostentatious professions of love may be suspected. See 1 John iii. 18.

17. Compare Job iv. 3, 4. Paul was strengthened to testify for Christ by the presence of Silas and Timothy (Acts xviii. 5).

18. Compare 1 Cor. ix. 7, 13. See your work, "waiting on your Master" (Ps. cxxiii. 1, 2), and your reward (John xii. 26).

19. David's psalms, expressing his heart's experiences, are appropriate to every saint. Paul's description of his own conflict (Rom. vii. 14, 25) answers exactly to that of every believer.

20. The more "the lust of the eye" is gratified the more it demands (Ecc. i. 8). Yet there is satisfaction here (John iv. 14) and hereafter (Ps. xvii. 15) for the believer.

21. Praise is as severe a test to a man's character as is the fierce fire to metals. Reproach and blame and calumny have been less injurious than commendation. Dr. Payson mentions as among his trials "well meant but injudicious commendations."

23-27. Diligence in the occupations of this life is a religious duty. In a country where wealth consisted of flocks and herds this counsel was literally needed. But in every calling God may be glorified by faithful industry (Rom. xii. 11). God's bounty (25-27) is an encouragement to duty.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3.—Proverbs XXVIII.

1. "Like one that absconds for debt, who thinks everyone he meets a bailiff."—Matthew Henry. See Lev. xxvi. 17, 36; and contrast Elijah (1 Kings xviii. 18) and the three Hebrews (Dan. iii. 16). Remember Luther also at the Diet of Worms.

3. The poor when exalted to power are often most oppressive of those with whom they might be expected to sympathise. How different the administration of our once poor but now exalted Lord! (Ps. lxxii. 12-14).

6. Character is more than possessions. To be upright is better than to have much; to be perverse is worse than to be poor.

9. See xv. 8 and Ps. cix. 7. Wilful rejection of God's Word renders prayer impossible. Be deaf to God, and He will be deaf to you (i. 24-28).

13. The desire to cover sin entered into the world with sin itself (Gen. iii. 12, 13). By the same method of putting the blame on others, Aaron (Exod. xxxii. 22-24) and Saul (1 Sam. xv. 20, 21) tried it. See also 2 Kings v. 20-27. Such attempts must fail (Luke xii. 2). Uncover by confession, and God will cover effectually (Ps. xxxii. 1, 2).

17. Here we learn the inevitable result of the sin to which the young man was tempted (i. 11). Burdened with guilt (R.V.), lashed by his guilty conscience, he runs to his own doom. Comp. Judas (Matt. xxvii. 4, 5).

20. For "innocent," the R.V. reads "unpunished." See 22, and 1 Tim. vi. 10.

23. Compare xxvii. 5, 6. "He that cries out against his surgeon for hurting him when he is searching his wound will yet pay him well, and thank him too when he has cured it."—Matthew Henry.

26. Of this folly even saints have been guilty (Josh. ix. 14). All our life long we are tempted to it in some form (Hosea x. 13). The opposite of this folly is not simply trusting in the Lord (25), but the wise walk which results from it (Eph. v. 15).

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4.—Proverbs XXIX.

1. See here, God's mercy.—He does not destroy without frequent reproof. How many messengers He sent to Israel (2 Kings xvii. 13-18). Man's obstinacy in hardening his neck as Pharaoh (Exod. ix. 34), and Ahab (1 Kings xxi. 20), and Judas did. Man's doom.—If delayed, it is not less sure, and when it comes will be sudden and irremediable (Luke xix. 42-44).

5. As the flatterers of Darius ensnared him in their plot against Daniel (Dan. vi. 6-9). These frequent warnings suggest that this is a real danger.

10. This is the old enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent (Gen. iii. 15; 1 John iii. 12, 13). Expect it, and with it look for the sympathy and help of some of "the just."

12. The character of the ruler determines the character of the people. His example will corrupt them.

13. See R.V. Both are the subjects of God's providential goodness (Matt. v. 45), and both may be the subjects of the same grace.

15-17. Children may cause deepest "shame" or greatest "delight." Their training, in great measure, determines which. Try the "reproof," and, if that fails, use "the rod" (1 Sam. ii. 22-25, iii. 13). The rod without reproof is fruitless. The children of God need and receive both (Heb. xii. 10).

16. "Let not the righteous be discouraged, for the wickeder men are, the shorter is their reign." Comp. Ps. xci. 8, xcii. 11.

19. This is where the rod is required (15). When we cease to live as sons, we are dealt with as slaves. Refusing to hear God's Word, we are made to feel his chastening (Job xxxiii. 14-22).

21. The neglect of this caution brought Ishbosheth too much under Abner's influence (2 Sam. iii. 8); and gave Joab too great power over David (2 Sam. xx. 10).

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5.—Proverbs XXX.

1-3. Of Agur we cannot learn anything beyond that he was a wise man, and gave instruction to two scholars. Speculation would be profitless. If we know not the penman, we know the author (2 Pet. i. 21). Ithiel and Ucal are regarded by some as symbolical names. They mean "God with me" and "I am strong," and may indicate the moral character which Agur desires for himself and his scholars. His professed ignorance (2, 3) is not false modesty; he who is best taught of God is most ready to speak so. And is not this acknowledgment the only way to true wisdom? (1 Cor. iii. 18).

4. If this were the subject of his contemplation, there is little wonder that Agur should confess his ignorance. In this one verse he declares the majesty and the power of God, the mystery of the eternal Sonship, and the incarnation. Comp. John iii. 13; Rom. x. 6-8; Isa. xl. 12; Matt. xi. 27. If we take the position of lowly reverence before God we shall not fail to be instructed.

5, 6. According to our thought of God will be our reverence for his Word. It is perfect truth, so that addition is falsehood (6). By means of his Word He becomes our shield. While we reverence we may also trust (Ps. xii. 6, cxix. 14; Gen. xv. 1).

7-9. Agur's prayer expresses just what every man wants who is occupied with God and his Word (4-6). For the soul he asks deliverance from sin, described as "vanity and lies." For the body, not wealth, but convenient food (Matt. vi. 11). The reason for his prayer (9) recognises that he is not to be trusted either with great prosperity or with deep poverty. Comp. 2 with Ps. lxxiii. 22.

11-14. Four evil generations. Compare Deut. xxi. 18-21; Isa. lxv. 5, lxiv. 6; Ps. cxxxi. 1, and Ps. lvii. 4.

15, 16. The two words are called the two daughters of the horseleach. The contentment for which Agur prayed was the exact opposite of these insatiable things.

24-28. These little but wise creatures may teach us: (1) diligence in the use of present opportunities (25).—There is a coming winter of need, are you making preparation for that? (2) The need of shelter from danger (26).—"A cony is about the size of a rabbit, and lives in the clefts of the rocks." The fiercest lion cannot hurt them there. Have you found your refuge (Isa. xxxiii. 16)? (3) Unity (27).—Flying about in different directions, how powerless the locusts would be; but, united, what amazing results they can accomplish! (4) Faith (28).—R.V. renders this "lizard." The king's palace does not seem the right place for such a creature. Have you the hand of faith that can take hold?

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6.—Proverbs XXXI.

1, 2. We know nothing of King Lemuel beyond what is here recorded—that he had a wise and godly mother. The name Lemuel means "devoted to God," hence his mother calls him "the son of her vows" (2). Compare 1 Sam. i. 11.

3-7. From his mother's lips Lemuel heard warnings against vices which she could only mention with horror. How much better to hear them thus referred to by her than to have them presented afterwards in all their deceptive attractiveness. In these respects hundreds fall through lack of a faithful loving word of warning.

8, 9. The vice of intemperance leads to perversion of justice (Isa. xxviii. 7, 8). This is wise counsel for a king (xx. 28).

10-31. This is the description of a virtuous woman. The whole is a connected poem in acrostic form. The twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet commence the verses. The question denotes that such a woman is rarely found; perhaps this may be because she is not often sought for. As a rule, woman is what man's desires and preferences make her. She is here described as—

(1) A wife (11, 12).—Constant and unvarying in her attachment to her husband, and in her care for his welfare, she deserves and receives his unfailing confidence.

(2) A mistress (13-27).—Many of the details of this portrait need retouching now to adapt it to the present day. One striking feature is the absence of anything like the religious seclusion which is supposed to be necessary to true piety. In domestic duties, the virtuous woman's holiness is to be manifested.

(3) A mother (28-31).—The blessing of her children and her husband is her reward (xxxix. 17). "The fear of the Lord" with which this book began (i. 7) closes it also (30). Every virtue, for every station in life, for sacred as well as for secular duties, has its source in this. It is not only the beginning, but the consummation of all wisdom.

THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

The attacks of modern criticism upon the old Jewish and Christian belief that Solomon was the author of this Book have not shaken the grounds on which that belief mainly rests, and therefore they may be safely disregarded. A valuable summary of the controversy, giving details of the attacks of criticism, as well as what can be said in reply, is given in the introduction to this book in "The Speaker's Commentary." The conclusion to which the writer comes is that "the most reasonable course" is "to accept as a simple statement of fact the words with which Ecclesiastes begins, and in accordance with the voice of the Church from the beginning to regard Solomon as the author of this Book."

The word "preacher" hardly represents aright the word in the Hebrew, or its Greek equivalent, "Ecclesiastes." It means properly the caller, or convener, of an assembly, and as the form of the word is feminine, many have supposed that Divine Wisdom personified is regarded as the convener, or caller, of the assembly to be addressed, as in Prov. i. 20.

No very formal arrangement of matter can be traced throughout the Book, beyond a statement of the subject at the beginning. "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity"; and a repetition of the same nearly at the end (xii. 8). Between these two come a description of the writer's personal experience of the matter of which he treats (i., ii.), followed by the announcement of a law to which human affairs are subject, viz., the will of God, leading on to the final judgment of God (iii.). Some perplexities of life arising from man's will being in conflict with God's are glanced at (iv.), and from chap. v. onwards commences a view of personal "practical advice, followed by a mixture of reflections, maxims, and exhortations, in which the vanity of riches, the practical superiority of wisdom and patience, and the supreme power of God, are the prominent topics (vi., vii., viii.). In chap. ix. the writer's reflection, and in chap. x. his maxims are brought to an end; and in chap. xi., xii. we have a concluding exhortation to conduct most likely to alleviate the vanity of this life."

The relation of this exposure of the vanity and unsatisfying character of all below to the book which follows—the Song of Songs—which reveals the soul-satisfying portion of the Bride of Christ, is well worthy of note. As the Spirit's conviction of sin is needed to make the soul of the sinner desire the Saviour and his salvation, so is this book a needed preparation for that which succeeds it. Only the soul that can enter into the meaning of "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity," will be ready to say: "Let Him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, for thy love is better than wine."

"The work of man"—fatiguing toil—is sharply contrasted with "the work of God"—the great Originator—throughout the book. The ALL upon which the stamp of vanity and emptiness is impressed, includes every work which man undertakes as man, and which does not harmonise and fit in with the irresistible work of God. The following sentences from "The Imperial Bible Dictionary" are in point: "Man's work necessarily issues in vanity and disappointment in all cases in which it is not subordinated to, and made to form part of, God's work. When man's work comes into collision with God's work, it is inevitably dashed to pieces. And it is because man, partly from ignorance, and partly from subjection to the sinful tendencies of his nature, does not usually work alongside with but against, though not always consciously against, God, that his most anxious toil issues in the attainment of no permanent good. But what then? Does the sacred writer stop here? By no means. There is a positive as well as a negative element in his teaching. His view of the contrasted works of God and man not only discloses the source of man's failures and disappointments, but likewise suggests the course which man must take in order that failure may, as far as possible, be avoided, and success attained. He must renounce the independency to which he aspires, and be content to subordinate his own work to God's work. He must become a God-fearing man—that is the necessary condition of the attainment of permanent good. 'Fear God, and keep his commandments;' all labour, disjoined from the fear of God, is utter vanity, and however successful it may for a time appear, will be seen to be vanity in the end: 'for God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or bad'" (xii. 13, 14).

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7.—Ecclesiastes I.

2. The words "vanity of vanities" express by a common Hebrew idiom (comp. "holy of holies") the utmost or superlative degree of the state denoted by vanity. This word "vanity" first occurs as the name given by Eve to her second son "Abel," and is generally taken to be an expression on her part of her experience even then of the vanity of all below. It may have been prophetic, also, of a life soon to pass away beneath his brother's murderous hand. This latter aspect of the vanity of this life (comp. James iv. 14) appears in ver. 3-5, where the abiding of the earth is contrasted with the passing away of the generations on it. The true escape from this aspect of vanity is to possess the abiding portion of those who are in Christ. The contrast, then, becomes that between the passing away of the earth and their abiding portion. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever" (1 John ii. 17).

12. The experience of one in such a position as Solomon enjoyed is of the utmost value in estimating the vanity of things below; for, if ever there might seem to be one whose testimony would run counter to the general experience of mankind it would be his. King over a united Israel, in the day of the utmost extension of the borders of their land, specially gifted with wisdom, and surrounded with material comforts and luxuries, for such a one to find "all vanity and vexation of spirit" is indeed a humbling proof of there being no exception to the principle which is the burden of the book—"Vanity of vanities, all is vanity."

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8.—Ecclesiastes II.

1. The whole of this chapter is occupied by the relation of the efforts the king made to solve the problem (3): "What was that good for the sons of men which they should do under the heaven all the days of their life?" It would appear from this that Solomon plunged into worldly pleasures, not in a spirit of self-indulgence, but as a seeker after knowledge, and the result of his experience, he relates that others may be warned to avoid the vanity and vexation of spirit which he found attaching to everything which seemed to promise pleasure and gratification.

12. What can the man do that cometh after the King?—This points the moral of the tale. Who else can expect to occupy such a vantage ground for solving the problem of what is good for man as he did whom God thus permitted to test for himself and for others, the hopeless vanity and vexation of all earthly pleasures.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, November 9.

BEFORE PILATE AND HEROD.—LUKE xxiii. 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT: VERSE 4.

THE appearance of Jesus before Pilate was necessary in order that the sentence of death already passed upon Him might be confirmed. The extreme punishment which the Sanhedrim could inflict was excommunication and scourging. Without Pilate's consent they cannot put Jesus to death (John xviii. 31).

Pilate represented the authority of the Roman Emperor in Judea and Samaria. He was the fifth who had held the office of Procurator, and was never popular. In consenting to this legal murder of Jesus he made his own name infamous, and complicated Gentiles equally with Jews in the great guilt in putting Jesus to death. The prætorium, where Pilate resided when in Jerusalem, was "either in the adjoining Castle of Antonia, or on Mount Zion, where Herod's palace was situated."—Morison. The distance between this and the council chamber, where the Sanhedrim met, was but a little way. The presence of Pilate in Jerusalem is explained by the fact that at the Passover, when people congregated from all parts of Palestine, riots were not unlikely to break out; and the power of the Roman soldiers might be necessary to quell them.

It would appear that the whole Council in a body (1) accompanied Jesus, in order to give greater weight to their charge. Matt. (xxvii. 2) tells us He was "bound," or handcuffed, probably "chained by the wrist to officers on either side."—Morison. John (xviii. 28) tells us that the rulers themselves did not enter the judgment-hall. While perpetrating an act of murder of the most horrible character, they are yet rigorously exact in this bit of ritualism (Matt. xxiii. 24-28). The zealous priests of Rome, who have put to the torture and to death hundreds of the saints of God, are worthy successors of these religious murderers. For the commencement of the trial see John xviii. 29-32.

Three charges were urged against Him (2). Compare them with what passed at the Council (xxii. 67-71). The charge of blasphemy on which the Sanhedrim condemned Him will not avail them before Pilate; hence their accusations are of a political character. Each of the three charges is false. With the second contrast Matt. xvii. 27, xxii. 21; and though He was a King, yet not in the sense in which they urged it, that of a rival to Cæsar. In this sense the people had desired to make Him King (John vi. 15). Such charges from their lips were blackest hypocrisy. Their enthusiastic loyalty to Rome was a mere pretence, assumed only for the purpose of accomplishing the death of Jesus.

"Thou sayest it" (3) is equivalent to I am. This was our Lord's good confession before Pilate (1 Tim. vi. 13). It is given more fully in John xviii. 33-38. Jesus made it, not in self-defence, but for the instruction of Pilate. He shall know not only that He is King, but what kind of a King He is. He could not remain silent to Pilate's question without seeming to deny that He was King; but a simple affirmation without explanation would have seemed to admit the charge of his enemies. He did this the more readily with Pilate because He recognised in him a desire to do justly.

"I find no fault in Him" (4).—Pilate saw through the hypocrisy of the rulers (Matt. xxvii. 18), and refused at first to help them to this judicial murder. Well had it been for his memory if he had maintained this position. Let us be thankful for his declaration. Testimony to the innocence of Jesus from the man who committed Him to death is doubly valuable. His enemies, being witnesses, He is manifestly the "Lamb without blemish and without spot."

Fearing the failure of their plot, the rulers become "more urgent" (5, R.V.). This repetition of the charge recalls the triumphal entry (xix. 37-40). It appears from Mark xv. 3 that other things were urged against Him, to all which Jesus maintained a dignified silence.

The mention of Galilee suggests to Pilate an expedient for getting rid of a very troublesome duty (6, 7). Possibly he may have hoped by this recognition of Herod's jurisdiction to do something towards healing the breach between them (12). Perhaps, too, he thought that Herod's examination might result in further proof of the Saviour's innocence, and so make it more possible to release Him (15). Herod, like Pilate, was in Jerusalem on account of the Passover Feast.

This Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great, was tetrarch of Galilee and Perea. He was a vile and despicable character; had dishonoured his elder brother Philip, and had added to his crimes that of the murder of John the Baptist (Matt. xiv. 1-10). Yet he had been deeply moved under the preaching of John, and may at one time have been regarded as a hopeful hearer (Mark vi. 20). But his repeated crimes had hardened his heart, and seared his conscience. Proof of this appears in his treatment of Jesus (8). He expected sport out of Him. His conscience was more easily touched a year before (Matt. xiv. 1, 2). He is an awful example of "hardening through the deceitfulness of sin."

The silence of Jesus is the strongest condemnation of this wicked man (9, 10). Neither to his own questions (9) nor to the accusations of the priests (10) does our Lord answer a word. The actual position of the two seems to be reversed. It is not so much Jesus before Herod, as Herod, the guilty criminal, before Jesus, the holy and righteous judge. A man's condition is desperate indeed when the Lord is silent to him (1 Sam. xxviii. 15; Hos. iv. 17).

Disappointed and exasperated, Herod seeks revenge by cruel mockery of Jesus (11). The "gorgeous robe" was not purple, but "brilliantly white, like that worn by Jewish kings and Roman grandees on high occasions." This was part of "the shame" which our Lord "despised" (Heb. xii. 2). The cross was painful, and needed to be "endured," but He could despise the shame. His example should make it easy for us to bear shame for his sake. When Jerome of Prague was led out to martyrdom, a paper cap, painted with red devils, was put on his head. The martyr said, "Our Lord Jesus Christ, when he suffered death for me, did wear a crown of thorns upon his head; and I, for his sake, will wear this cap."

APPLICATION.

(1) Three classes of persons in contact with Jesus.—Rulers—implacable enemies, bent upon his death, possessed by the spirit of envy and hatred, rejecting all light, and yet rigorously exact in their ceremonialism. Their utter defeat, following their apparent success, warns their successors to-day. Herod—at one time a hopeful hearer of the word, but now hardened beyond the possibility of being impressed. Beware how you treat religious impressions. And Pilate—knowing what is right, desirous of doing it, yet too much influenced by the fear of man. There are many imitators of him. Dare to act according to your conviction.

(2) Jesus in contrast with his enemies.—Before them all He is more like the judge than the criminal. Imitate his meekness in suffering wrong. One reason for his silence was that He bore our guilt (2 Cor. v. 21). Look forward to the time when He shall appear as the judge. How are you treating Him now? How will you meet Him then?

POPERY IN THE UNITED STATES.—Rev. N. C. Alger, of Chatham, Mass., describing Rome's tactics in America, to secure State aid for the carrying on of denominational education, says: "Rome is fighting for her very existence; for if her children and youth are to be educated much longer in American schools, her influence upon them will wane, as certainly as it already has waned in Italy, France, Spain, Mexico, and South America. New England to-day is not the New England of twenty years ago. Her cities have already their miniature Italy, France, and Ireland carrying the Papal banner. Protestants of Massachusetts alone should remember that sixty-eight villages and cities are controlled by Roman Catholic majorities."

"MOROCCO: ITS PLACES, PEOPLE, AND CUSTOMS."—Mr. J. E. Budgett Meakin, for some time editor of The Times of Morocco, hopes to arrive in England about the end of November, and, during a stay of four months, to deliver a series of popular lectures on this very attractive subject. Mr. Meakin's thorough knowledge of the country is well known, and he proposes to tell much about the "Sunset Land" that will be quite new to English ears. Dissolving views, native costumes, and collections of curiosities will be exhibited, and the syllabus gives promise of much that cannot but send forward missionary sympathy. Arrangements may be made with Mr. W. Harvie, Leadenhall-buildings, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

Help Wanted for the Annual Sale

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for DESTITUTE CHILDREN,"

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 3,500 poor WAIFS and STRAYS.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

Friends willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they will be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Gymnasium of the Boys' Home in Stepney, E.

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (Prepaid), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to LABRADOR.—Captain Pike, of the steamship Vanguard, recently arrived at Montreal from Labrador, reports that the people are on the verge of starvation. If they are not speedily relieved, shocking results must ensue. The herring fishery, upon which the inhabitants mostly depend for a living, has been almost a total failure, especially along the Straits of Belle Isle. The Canadian Government is expected to take immediate measures for the relief of the inhabitants.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1890.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O.Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss of same.

"PERE HYACINTHE" is about to make a tour in France. Stating his purpose to an interviewer, he said: "The great majority of French Catholics do not believe in the infallibility of the Pope, nor in the utility of confession; but the resistance of Roman Catholic priests to any change is stronger than ever." He observes a tendency on the part of the French Government to incline towards the clerical element. On that account his campaign will be partly political.

ROMISH AGGRESSION IN HUNGARY.—A curious custom in Hungary called "christening away" is the subject of a serious controversy between Catholics and Protestants in Hungary. On either parent of a child in a nominally Protestant family expressing a wish that it should be christened according to the Roman Catholic rite, a priest has hitherto undertaken to perform the ceremony without further preliminaries, and the child has been considered lost to the Protestant community. The Hungarian Minister of Public Worship published a decree lately providing that, before any such baptism can take place, the Romish priest must give notice to the Protestant clerical authorities of the place. The priests simply refused to do this, and the Pope has approved the refusal.

Guy's Tonic

FOR

Indigestion & Nervousness.

THESE troublesome complaints are cured more speedily by Guy's Tonic than by any known remedy, a few doses invariably accomplishing more than a prolonged course of any other treatment. Despairing invalids, suffering from the most obstinate forms, must not lose hope until they have given this excellent vegetable Tonic a fair trial.

"A CHARMING PRESCRIPTION"

For loss of appetite, pain after eating, and sluggish liver, Guy's Tonic is superior and preferable to all other preparations. For restoring nervous and debilitated constitutions, removing brain weariness, nerve waste, languor, and despondency, the most implicit confidence can be placed in this simple, safe, and efficient remedy.

IMPORTANT LETTERS.

Mr. WM. HAYES writes, under date of September 15th, 1890:—

"To Guy's Tonic Co., Ludgate Circus, London.

"GENTLEMEN,—I have much pleasure in informing you of the great improvement visible in my wife's case. The pain between the shoulders has nearly disappeared, the tongue, which was very much coated, has become clear, and she is lighter-hearted and more cheerful altogether.

"Yours faithfully, WM. HAYES."

Mr. WM. HAYES again writes on October 16th, 1890:—

"GENTLEMEN,—Please forward me three bottles of Guy's Tonic, and three boxes of Fruit Pills, in three separate parcels, one bottle of Tonic and a box of Pills for my wife, and like parcels for two of my neighbours, who are afflicted similarly as my wife was. I am happy to tell you that my wife has found great benefit from your Tonic and Pills, and scarcely ever feels any of the ailments that so much troubled her a few weeks ago. Please give this your prompt attention, and send me the medicine as soon as possible, and oblige yours faithfully, WM. HAYES."

The Proprietors will be pleased at any time to show the originals to persons interested.

Should you have failing health, no matter from what cause, don't hesitate, but procure Guy's Tonic at once. The most obstinate, chronic, and complicated maladies are yielding daily to this matchless medicine.

GUY'S TONIC is sold by all Chemists at 2s. 9d. per Bottle. If you cannot obtain it promptly, send the amount (2s. 9d.) to GUY'S TONIC CO., 4, Ludgate-circus, London, and it will be sent by return, post paid. Insist upon having GUY'S TONIC. No substitute whatever should be accepted.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

LETTER from the BAPTIST COLLEGE, PONTYPOOL.

Feb. 25th, 1890.—"A young student" writes me:—"Having heard that you are so good as to reduce the charges for your medicine and treatment in the cases of ministers and students, I shall feel very grateful for your help. I have a very weak chest, especially I feel it after preaching, and lose my voice. I am now suffering also from a severe and protracted cold. I believe that a course of your valuable medicine will benefit me."

April 8th.—Another young student, writing me on his own account, and referring to the above case says:—"I may tell you that Mr. —— has been completely restored. I also hope for the same benefit."

LETTER from the ELIZABETH FRY REFUGE.

Miss Emily Smith (then of Union-road, Holloway) was a patient of mine, three years ago, and an account of her recovery appeared in my 28th series of cases (Dec., 1888).

If any reader has the opportunity of referring thereto he will see that this was a very interesting and remarkable case. The patient had suffered from cough for years, in the winter only, but now it had become constant, summer and winter both. For twelve weeks blood had been occasionally brought up, mixed with her expectoration. The cough had become worse, the breathing very short, pains in both sides, she had begun to lose flesh fast, but feet and legs were swollen. She had lost a brother with Consumption, and her father suffered from asthma.

The reader will also see that after some months' correspondence with me, and several visits, the patient became thoroughly well.

I was pleased to receive a letter recently from Miss Smith, in which she says:—"You will be glad to hear that I still remain well and strong. I shall always feel very grateful to you. I read all your weekly cases with much interest—ELIZABETH FRY REFUGE, Mare-street, HACKNEY, June 6th, 1890."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

Is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE ON BEHALF OF "Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 3,500 POOR WAIFS AND STRAYS.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., WOULD KINDLY MARK ON THEM THEIR VALUE, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

Friends willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

SPECIAL LOCAL BAZAARS

IN THEIR OWN HOUSES, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they will be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Gymnasium of the Boys' Home in Stepney, E.

DR. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. GORDON CALTHROP, of Highbury.

In the Divisional Court of Queen's Bench on Tuesday the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mathew gave judgment in the case of the boy Roddy, whom Dr. Barnardo declined to give up to the Romish priests acting on his mother's behalf. The judgment was adverse to Dr. Barnardo, who has, however, given notice of appeal. At this crisis in his struggle with the Romanists we earnestly commend Dr. Barnardo and his work to the prayerful sympathy of our readers.

We give in this issue the greater part of an extended report of the National Protestant Congress, held last week at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W. The Congress was timely, for Romanism and Ritualism are stealthily advancing in our midst. The papers and addresses were both stimulating and instructive, and will, we trust, be widely read. If unscriptural doctrine and ignorant superstition were exposed, it was in order that those who are jealous for Gospel light and purity might be stimulated to more vigorous testimony and a higher sense of duty. We hope next week to give an abstract of General Hutchinson's paper showing the havoc wrought by Romish priests on the foreign mission field, and a bird's eye view, by Rev. Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, of the Romish propaganda, as carried on throughout the world. This last paper, the result of much research, has unique value and importance from the fact that Protestants are, for the most part, unacquainted with the extent to which Papists undo evangelical work, and impress the seal of a disfigured Christianity upon heathen systems throughout the world.

The Jewish World pays a high tribute to the Salvation Army and to the labours of the late Mrs. Booth, whose faith, enthusiasm, and devotion, says our contemporary, "formed the standard of conduct for the whole Army." Disagreeing in part with the theology of the movement, The Record recognises "the great value of its work among the poor, and the enormous success which has attended its operations." The writer adds that "the Salvation Army has proved a real civilising force among a section of the population where civilising work was most required."

For some time the annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has been anxiously expected. There has been great friction and alienation; not so much as was alleged from doctrinal differences, as from the manner these were dealt with. So far, after the meeting at Minneapolis, the strife appears likely to be healed, and without compromise. That the unadulterated truth should be taken to the heathen has been the demand of men like Mr. Joseph Cook, and of ministers on the Board. To this end the method of examining and testing the fitness of applicants for mission work has been changed, and a promising solution of questions at stake has been arrived at. If faithful men are firm the work of the Board will be continued without further hindrance.

A point in another direction, but of marked importance, came up for consideration. As missionaries to China from England are finding embarrassment through the opium traffic, so those from the United States are apprehensive of serious difficulties by reason of the American treatment of Chinese residents. The Congress at Washington, and our own Parliament at Westminster, are bringing upon the world very grave complications. Punishment always eventually follows wrong, and these words of the Mission Board are timely in their warning:—

> As Christian citizens, let the friends of this Board and of missions raise their voices in protest against proceedings which disgrace us as a powerful Christian nation, and which may provoke retaliation, to the serious harm of our missionaries, and, indeed, of all American citizens in China.

The persecution and annoyance to which the Protestants of Arklow have for some time been subjected furnish a very real illustration of that Popish intolerance from which Ireland has suffered for generations past. Romish priests are notoriously ready at asserting their own rights and liberties; and they are not behind at times in denying similar civil privileges to persons outside their religious communion. Those who think Rome has become tolerant, had better go to Arklow, and see how earnest Protestants are treated if they dare to preach the Gospel in the open air.

The Council of the Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance, in a "Statement of Facts," says:—

> Nothing has at any time been said by the clergymen, or those present at the services, of the nature of an attack upon any other religion, or which could be regarded as insulting to those belonging to other denominations. The Protestant worshippers have nevertheless been systematically exposed to attacks by their Roman Catholic neighbours. The voices of the speakers have been drowned by the hideous noises created by the mob, blowing fog-horns, ringing ship bells, beating cans, &c., mingled with incessant yelling and hooting. Those attending the services have been assailed with the foulest and most abusive language. Notwithstanding all this there has been no retaliation on the part of the Protestants.

We trust our friends in Arklow will not be discouraged. These proceedings abundantly show how much the Gospel is needed by their neighbours; for if, as appears to be the case, the Romanists regard the Protestants as their enemies, they quite fail to realise the great duty of love which Christ has enjoined. Let not the Protestants lose the joy of obedience to the command, "Pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

Mr. Mitchell Henry's letter in The Times affords much serious food for reflection. He states that in an Irish village, with a population of over 700 persons, there are 45 public-houses, and that applications were recently made for seven more licences; so that there would then be a public-house to every two families. Unfortunately, such a state of things is by no means uncommon in Ireland, from districts in the metropolis downwards to the chronic famine districts. As drink and distress are so nearly allied, the figures are only too painfully eloquent. Some day we shall have a statesman courageous enough to deal boldly with the question, whether it is wise to develop a revenue which has afterwards to be expended upon the relief of the distress upon which it is built up.

The Church Missionary Society, it is stated, is about to make an urgent appeal for helpers for foreign work from the ranks of professional men of ability. There is much to be said in favour of a movement like this; in too many cases, perhaps, inexperienced men have been sent to undertake work which, even under the most favourable circumstances, must be of a difficult and trying nature. At the same time, no amount of intellect will make up for the absence of the missionary spirit, which has invariably characterised successful missionaries.

The London County Council may be congratulated upon its contemplated action with respect to one of the moral and physical plague-spots of the metropolis. The project of demolishing a batch of noisome "rookeries" in Bethnal Green, in which more than five thousand persons are now huddled together in filth, wretchedness, and vice, and of substituting blocks of improved dwellings, is a practical attempt to grapple with the vital question of the housing of the poor. We hope it will be attended with such success as to warrant the extension of the experiment to other equally miserable areas in London. It is well to remember at the same time that mere material improvement will not effect a moral transformation. The social amelioration of "the masses" must not be confounded with the spiritual regeneration of the individual, and in this latter direction there is still on every hand unlimited scope for Christian effort.

We are accustomed to hear of high-handed action on the part of British officials in the far East, but nothing that has happened of late years has amazed us or awakened our indignation so much as this announcement, which we extract from The Bombay Guardian of October 11:—

> After full deliberation the Viceroy in Council has just dismissed William McGrath Drysdale, a nephew of the revered Dr. Duff, from his position of District Superintendent of Police at Hissar, in the Punjab. With an unblemished character and universally beloved by the natives of his district, after twenty years of faithful service he is discharged, without compensation and pensionless, because after office hours he has obeyed his Master's command, and, with the love of God in his heart, has proclaimed the unsearchable riches of Christ to his native brethren.

This occurrence we can only regard as scandalous in the last degree, and we cannot believe that the home Government will endorse the action of the Indian authorities. We hope some of our Bishops or other Christian members of Parliament will take the matter in hand when the session opens, and will press on the Government the necessity of redress being granted to this godly man, who has only maintained his natural and inalienable rights. If an act of such flagrant official wrong-doing as this is condoned by the English people, it must exercise a most hurtful influence on the cause of Christianity in India. Our Bombay contemporary, in commenting on the affair, says :—

The decision of the Viceroy in Council, dated September 19, 1890, the official copy of which we have forwarded to England, distinctly states the fact that it is for preaching in public that Mr. Drysdale has been discharged. Meanwhile, with the full knowledge of the Viceroy and his Council, there are numbers of officials sinning in public with impunity.

Mr. Gladstone on the Old Testament.

MR. GLADSTONE has concluded, in this month's Good Words, his series of Old Testament studies. With obvious timeliness he addresses himself to the moral causes which have mainly contributed to the sceptical tendencies that mark our period. In Bishop Butler's time a similar negative movement came in, yet it disappeared. During the third quarter of this century it set in again, with a subtle power and an overweening self-assertion. Such movements of unbelief, however, are not without their use. They dispel the lethargy of believers, stimulate zeal, and rebuke Christians for their intolerance and pride.

In relation to scientific and critical investigation, Mr. Gladstone ventures upon a reply to a recent paper of Professor Huxley's on the Old Testament story of the Deluge. With his usual self-satisfaction, the Professor described that account as being utterly unscientific. Mr. Gladstone, aided by the calculations of a practical engineer, disputes the Professor's dictum respecting the rate at which a body of water would probably flow off the Mesopotamian plain.* With the same forcefulness the paper replies to Dr. Huxley's contention that in the case of the swine of the Gadarenes our Lord was a law-breaker; and sums up considerations on this incident with an answer absolutely crushing.

Nevertheless, the growth of present negation, Mr. Gladstone argues, may come not from causes intellectual but moral :—

We have altered the standard of wants; we have multiplied the demands of appetite; we have established a new social tradition; we have created a new atmosphere, by breathing which our composition is modified unawares, and our powers of reflection and control become subject to the environment of these new and fashionable standards.

The negative tendencies of the day are not, then, owing to a pretended scientific precision which contradicts religion, nor to the weakening of that cumulative evidence which witnesses for revelation, but to the effects of a materialism, not indeed formulated, but which is unavowedly, and unconsciously operating upon society. Wealth and enjoyment are being multiplied; wants and appetites are growing; worldly attractions are disturbing the balance of human condition; unworldly motives and ideas, through the apprehension of an unseen world, are more dimly and feebly appreciated; and a creeping palsy is silently coming over the inward life of the age. Moreover, as the sensuous and worldly become increasing forces, they become at the same time unseen allies to sceptical arguments, whether such arguments are good, bad, or indifferent.

And this must be noted. The life and essence of religion are at stake; for when, through the increasing dominion of the things seen over the unseen, belief in the supernatural goes, the idea of God will go, and the obligations of the God-given SELF will go likewise.

* Besides, who dare affirm that there are not topographical facts which at this date are outside our knowledge, and which, if known, would remove all difficulties?

"In Darkest England."

WAYS AND MEANS.

THE kind, and in some quarters almost flattering, reception given to the proposals set forth in my book, "In Darkest England," have encouraged me not only to hope, but boldly to expect, that co-operation for which I ask, and which is indispensable to success. It is, I think, all but universally admitted that the subject is important, that the methods proposed are practicable, that the realisation of a large measure of the results aimed at is probable, and that the plan as a whole ought at least to have a fair and immediate trial.

These friendly criticisms have tended to raise the most sanguine expectations, and inquiries are being made on every hand as to the date when the scheme will come into operation. The tidings of hope have gone down to the depths of the sea of destitution, and the poor creatures are looking to us for the promised deliverance. The winter is upon us. I cannot myself gather much comfort from the fact that the number of "out of works" will not be greater this year than it was last. The distress of the "submerged tenth" is always too harrowing to contemplate.

I want to get to work at once. To do so, properties must be secured for the labour factories, for the food depôts, for the night and day shelters; land must be purchased and got into order, and other arrangements, all alike involving monetary responsibilities. It has ever been a rule with me "to cut my coat according to my cloth." No one would advise me to depart from it in this case. To act upon it I must know how much "cloth" I have to cut.

With all the demands upon my time and energy arising out of the care of the great organisation at the head of which I find myself, it will be impossible for me to undertake any further serious labour in connection with raising money for this new departure. I hardly imagine this will be asked from me. This feeling I think justifies me in adhering to my position, that unless the money necessary is furnished, I cannot consider myself responsible for the carrying out of the scheme.

It therefore appears only reasonable that my friends should say how far they are prepared to afford me practical assistance. There are various methods, in addition to the ordinary plan of contributing by donation and subscription, which are peculiarly applicable in this case. I am bold enough to think churches and chapels could take collections, or aim at raising a definite sum, while we shall be happy to furnish collecting books for those willing to use them. Every particular will be supplied on application by letter.

I think I may be excused having a little fear lest the favour so generally extended to the effort should lead to the unfortunate result of everybody supposing that everybody else is doing financially what everybody is leaving undone. In order, therefore, to ascertain how the matter stands in this respect, it has been decided to hold a meeting in Exeter Hall on the evening of Monday, the 17th inst., at which the response of the country up to that date can be announced. Having ascertained which, I shall be able to judge of my further responsibility.

In pressing this scheme upon the notice of the Christian Churches, I may be excused quoting a sentence or two from the Preface of "In Darkest England":—"I have no intention to depart in the smallest degree from the main principles on which I have acted in the past. My only hope for the permanent deliverance of mankind from misery, either in this world or the next, is the regeneration or remaking of the individual by the power of the Holy Ghost through Jesus Christ. But in providing for the relief of temporal misery I reckon that I am only making it easy where it is now difficult, and possible where it is now all but impossible for men and women to find their way to the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

WHATSOEVER.

"Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do."
JOHN xiv. 13.

JESUS, we ask a thousand
For China's myriad race!
To tell the story, olden,
Of free and sovereign grace:

A thousand Christian warriors,
Loyal of heart, and brave,
To wrest from Satan's thraldom
Each sin-enfetter'd slave.

And patient hearts, and tender,
We need, dear Lord, to go
To tend the springtide blossoms,
And solace earthly woe.

And, oh! we ask a thousand
To wrestle hard in prayer,
One for each one who toileth
'Mid sin's gloom over there.

Oh! who will go for Jesus?
Christians, dare ye withhold
The costliest of your treasures,
Your loved ones, or your gold?

Dear Master, whisper, "Go ye,"
To every halting soul;
Watch o'er each one thou choosest,
And point him to his goal.

Thy people shall be willing
In this thy day of power;
Redeemer, claim thy thousand
In this the world's last hour.

LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

THREE MEMORABLE DAYS.—I.

JOHN I. 19-37.

BETHABARA lay beyond the Jordan from Jerusalem. The river there has a breadth of one hundred feet, and, except at the time of the winter floods, a depth of three to seven feet. It would, therefore, exactly suit the purposes of the great preacher, with his baptism of repentance. The almost tropical luxuriance of the valley is in striking contrast to the wilderness of sand and hill around.

The attention of the nation was as much arrested by his look as by his words. The spare form attenuated by fasting and austerity; the flashing eye, full of living energy; the unshorn Nazarite locks; the rough haircloth garment; the independence of so much that other men hold needful; the thrilling herald voice, piercing like a two-edged sword to divide and discern soul and spirit. It is no matter for wonder, then, that the whole community was stirred, and that crowds poured forth to him from the neighbouring metropolis, as well as from the towns and villages clustering at the foot of the Lebanon.

This time of success and fame lasted for, perhaps, twelve or eighteen months. And then there happened the memorable events described in this paragraph, and which transpired on three following days (29, 35).

The greater number of those that flocked to hear the Baptist returned to their homes to discuss his words or to live out their new vows; but several of the flower of Israel attached themselves to Jesus permanently. Amongst them was the writer of this Gospel, and he was, without doubt, a witness of the events which he describes, the crisis of his own life, and the culminating point of the ministry of his earliest teacher.

I. THE FIRST DAY; SELF-ABNEGATION (19-28).—As the influence of John's preaching spread, it became impossible for the religious authorities to ignore it. The Sanhedrim especially, which is constantly referred to in this Gospel as the Jews, and which held itself entrusted with the religious interests of the nation, was compelled to take action. A deputation of priests and Levites, principally derived from the Pharisee party (24), was therefore arranged to go to the Jordan, make inquiries, and report. Their inquiries were to be twofold: first, who he was; secondly, why he baptized. The former question interested the whole council; the latter, the Pharisees, who were the ritualists of their day.

Imagine a vast circle. On the one side stands the herald of the new age, surrounded by the chivalry of a noble youth; on the other the grey-beards, representing an order of things old and ready to vanish away. How breathless was the silence which followed the first inquiry! "Who art thou? Art thou the Christ?"

Thousands would have been glad to believe he was, and at a word would have unfurled the old standard of the Maccabees, and rallied to rid the land of the usurper. They had not, however, long to wait. Without a moment's vacillation he confessed, and denied not, but confessed:

"I am not the Christ."

"Who art thou, then? Malachi told us in his closing words, which have lit our path through the gloom of four hundred years, that the great prophet of Horeb should announce the Messianic day. Art thou Elijah?"

Had they asked if he preceded the Messiah in the spirit and power of Elijah, he must have answered in the affirmative; but to the question as they put it there was only one reply:

"I am not."

There was yet another suggestion. "Moses said that God would raise up a prophet like unto himself. The prophet art Thou?" "The abruptness of the question," says Bishop Westcott, "is remarkable."

And again, amid the hushed suspense, the Baptist, with increasing brevity, answered, "No."

Each response must have been followed by the murmur of many voices discussing it. And the ardent disciples of the great preacher would have felt some little disappointment and chagrin. It seemed as if he were deliberately spurning the nation's homage, and missing the greatest opportunity of his career.

The suppositions furnished by the generally received Messianic programme were now exhausted, and it only remained to put some general question which should force the Baptist to define his own position. "Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?"

Then came an utterance, sublime in its humility: "I am only a voice crying amid the uninhabited places of the wilderness, Prepare a way for the King."

And this humility was characteristic of John, though he was the greatest of woman-born. He knew that he was not the Light, but sent to bear witness of it; not the Sun, but the star that announces the dawn, and wanes in the growing light; not the Bridegroom, but the Bridegroom's friend; not the Shepherd, but the porter to open the door into the fold (iii. 27-30, x. 3

This humility is as rare as it is fascinating. We are all so apt to use our relationship to Christ as a means of enhancing our own importance, and attracting attention. Though we formally ascribe the supremacy to our Lord, we are elated when our name is on every lip, and our work in every thought, even though we should never have been heard of, had it not been for Him. But there was nothing of this in John. He had the lowest possible conception of himself. Whilst all men mused in their hearts whether he were the Christ, he was ever heralding the Coming One. As they magnified the worth of his baptism, he declared that it was inferior to the Messiah's, as water is to fire in cleansing properties. When they trembled before his searching words, He spoke of the great Husbandman, who, fan in hand, was about thoroughly to purge his floor. The motto of his inner life seems to have been, "I must decrease." Repeatedly he avowed himself unfit even to loose the sandal-thong of Him whose herald he was.

Two things led him to this blessed condition.—In the first place, he realised that a man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven, and that therefore all popularity, gifts, and influence are precious talents to be administered with the best possible stewardship (iii. 27). And in the second place, he had seen the Lord, as was clear from the answer he gave to the further inquiry of the deputation concerning his right to baptize.

"It is quite true," said he, in effect, "that I am not the Christ, nor Elijah, nor that prophet; but listen! Though ye know it not, the Messiah is already come, and I have seen Him. He has stood on these banks. He has mingled with these crowds. He has descended into these waters. He is standing amongst you now. The new era has dawned. And therefore I administer baptism, the sign and initiation of that long-expected time."

What awe must have settled down on the people! How they must have looked on each other, wondering of whom he spake! Could it be that at last the day had come of which kings and prophets and righteous men had spoken, but died without seeing! And can we wonder at the humility of the speaker?

We need to cultivate more of this lovely spirit, content to stand in the shade and cast a light on the blessed Lord; to be voices witnessing for Him, whilst the speaker's form is draped in gloom. But probably nothing but close friendship with the Bridegroom of souls will ever bring this about. We must live nearer to Him, catching the glow of his love, baptized into its furnace heat. Oh, to love Him, to listen for his footfall with a lover's hushed spirit, to find our heaven only in his love, and in the thought that He is loved! Then we shall be timid of attracting a single thought to ourselves which might have found its way to Him. Then we shall be eager to hoard up all the love and devotion which men give us, that we may cast them as crowns at his feet. Then we shall be willing to be pedestals from which his beams shine the farther, as the slender, graceful curves of the lighthouse tower are unseen, whilst from its lantern the reflectors flash beams of light far out to sea. It is only to those thus humble as little children that God reveals the true character of his Son. So it was with John.

GIRLS' ORPHAN HOME, CROYDON.—The family at Burgos House numbered forty-five in June, including the staff. Two children had left during the year, and eight had been admitted. One of these is from a family of nine fatherless children; she was taken in, and the superintendent would gladly relieve the poor mother of another if funds and room would permit. Another was sent by her father to save her from the violence of a drunken step-mother. Eight girls are now in service and doing well. The vicar of the parish speaks of the excellent way in which the work of educating, training, and tending the little ones is carried on, that they are well-behaved, and that their bright and happy faces testify to the kindness and loving care of those in charge of them. All communications should be sent to the Secretary, Dalkeith Cottage, Wellesley-road, Croydon.

THE BIBLE IN ROME.—DEAR SIR,—During the first six months of 1890 the sales from the Roman Depôt of the British and Foreign Bible Society, including those effected by three colporteurs in the provinces, were twenty-one thousand copies, exceeding the sales of any previous half-year by six thousand copies. The schools for teaching foreign languages for the benefit of Italians in Rome adopt the New Testament as a reading-book in the second course classics, both French and English. The great depôt of the Romish Propaganda provides no Gospel or any Scripture portions for the use of the people. But the fact that so many copies of the Word of God have been sent out this year is an immense encouragement to all Protestant work, and to the Bible Society.

"My Life is Lost."

BY REV. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.

THERE are two kinds of life—that of the unconverted, and the life of those who are converted to God. The one is lost when it remains in its natural state, and is given up to the world; the other is lost when it is not yielded entirely to God.

I have a story, which I think will illustrate my meaning.

A very dashing and worldly young lady came, simply out of curiosity, to a meeting where the Gospel was being preached. It was preached not merely for the sake of preaching; but with the definite purpose of awakening sinners, and bringing them to God. She, among others, was told that true religion consists not in hearing the word only, but in doing it. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." She was arrested by this, for it had been her idea, if she had one, that she had fulfilled all that was required of her, if she attended church services and heard sermons. Truly, too many sermons are only intended to be heard; for they do not propose anything to be done.

With all her worldliness and dissipation in various assemblies of pleasure she was in the habit of frequenting, this young lady seldom forsook her church on Sunday; but it never occurred to her mind that she had anything else to do, her young life was being lost in the frivolities of the world. At times, like many more, she was weary of it, and said to herself, Is this life worth living? Her weary heart of sin could find no rest in worldliness.

At this meeting she heard of the folly of a wasted life—how suicidal toward self and sinful toward God. Alarmed and awakened, she began to seek mercy and a change of heart. Soon afterwards she found it, to the joy of her soul. Once saved, she wondered how she could possibly have spent her time in the dry and empty chase after pleasure, as she had done. With her opened eyes she began to see the terrible danger she had been in, and also to feel for the number of others around her who were going on their way to certain destruction.

What are preachers thinking about, and what are believers doing amongst the vast multitudes who are on their way to hell! This thought came upon her with such power now and then that she knew not what to do. She longed for a trumpet-voice to warn the people as to what they were doing, and to alarm them as to where they were going. But what could she do—a mere worldling, just released from danger herself, and very ignorant of the way and means of Christian work?

However, God, who had created in this newborn soul a longing desire to serve Him, soon opened a path of usefulness to her. He laid it upon her mind to tell her own family of the change in herself, and the absolute necessity of such a change in them under penalty of damnation. They were startled, and at first dismayed; but, recovering from their fears, they began to laugh at her, and tried all in their power to dissuade her from what they called her extraordinary and extravagant thoughts.

Unawakened people cannot see spiritual things. This young lady, not knowing or thinking of this, was the more amazed at the heedlessness and folly of her aged parents and relatives all pressing on without fear to perdition. She could now see this clearly enough, but they could not; and therefore in her helplessness she was driven to prayer for them.

One night, unexpectedly, she was called out of her bed to come to her father who thought he was dying. In great alarm about himself, he asked her to pray for him and tell him the way of salvation. It was her turn now to be dismayed, for she did not know how to direct him. It so happened that she had read a tract a few days before upon the subject of salvation. Remembering this, she immediately went off to her room to fetch it. Reading this to her father, she was the means of pointing him to God for forgiveness. By this, she also gained for herself the knowledge how to work in order to win souls.

Her father did not die, but recovered; and from this time stood by her, and supported her efforts to do good. Her soul was bent on awakening worldlings to see the danger and sin of wasting their lives in this world, and perishing at last.

Oh, what a loss every way! It was like a nightmare to her waking dreams, to see souls passing on their way to hell, without being able to speak a word of warning to them; or, if she did speak, to stop them. Wherever she went, this was the burden of her soul; she could think of nothing else, and speak of nothing else. It was a blessed service, and she was absorbed in it with her whole heart. For want of better teaching, however, there was more soul than spirit in her work; for she was working in the energy of her own enthusiasm. The solemn facts of the case by a natural effect stirred her soul. She did not know that the work was not hers, but God's; and that it should be done in the power and leading of his Spirit.

One mistake led into another. She happened to fall in with a devoted and ecclesiastical worker, who did not labour as she did, in the energy of natural enthusiasm, but in the power of some grace which he believed he received from sacraments. He had the advantage of superior knowledge, though he was not a winner of souls. Unhappily she yielded to his arguments, and soon left off caring for perishing sinners. From this time she went headlong into sacerdotal bondage. Her enthusiasm came into play in another form, and she was brought to think that there could be no grace or power without the priest and sacraments. In this legal state of mind she became a captive to the commandments of men. She looked down upon her old work, and regarded it as a great mistake, and upon her old companions as still under a mistake. Moreover, she was forbidden to speak with them, or to hold any controversy. Thus was her poor soul shut up in a prison of unfruitfulness.

The Lord, however, interposed, and after a few years of this blind bigotry she was laid on a bed of sickness. This illness was brought on entirely by her manner of life, and the austerities she was taught to practise. Poor child, she verily believed that these religious acts of fasting and self-denial were meritorious, and for the glory of God. Now her eyes were opened to see the mistake she had been under in leaving the happy work of seeking to win souls in which she had been engaged. God also showed her that her present life was not being spent for Him, but for "the Church"; that her obedience was not given to Him, but to the priest. Oh, how different it used to be, when she rejoiced in the Lord, and was happy in rescuing souls from sin and its consequences.

She sent for me to visit her. On my arrival, what a spectacle was before me! a wreck of what used to be. Looking sorrowfully at me, she said, "I am ashamed to see you, after having forsaken you and the Lord's work; but God knows that I did not mean to leave Him. I thought I was right. Oh, how I have been misled! Will you forgive me, and pray the Lord to bring me out of this bondage in which I am?"

I answered, "My dear young friend, I think the Lord has brought you out already, in showing you your mistake. Now, be as bold to testify for Him as before. Once for all refuse and renounce legal teaching, and you will come again into the liberty of God's children."

She did this, and, as a matter of course, was regarded as a heretic and schismatic by those who knew no better; but she was restored again to joy and peace by believing in the Lord.

But, though her soul was safe and happy now, she could not help sorrowing that her health was gone, and that she was no longer able to work for God as in days past. She lamented the years she had spent in this path of bondage. During all that period her time was wasted and her work unprofitable. She said, "I might have spent my time for God; but, alas! it is gone—my life is lost!"

THE MANCHESTER FORWARD MOVEMENT.

THE fourth anniversary of the Manchester Mission was recently celebrated. In the afternoon Rev. Hugh Price Hughes preached to a large congregation in the Free Trade Hall, and in the evening a crowded public meeting was held in the same building. Mr. R. W. Perks presided. A report, setting forth the work of the Mission, was presented, after which the meeting was addressed by the chairman and Dr. Maclaren.

Mr. Hugh Price Hughes, in the course of a forcible speech, said that every humanitarian work attempted on other than a Christian basis had failed to succeed. It was the duty of Christian men to protest against every evil. It was as much a Christian duty to protest against the wickedness and the waste of war and the horrors of the liquor trade as to endeavour to save souls. Christianity had much to do also in order to terminate that most disastrous war between capital and labour which was one of the perils of our time. The time had come when every Christian man must recognise that it was as much a duty to take part in municipal and Parliamentary affairs as it was to pray. He did not believe he could pray successfully if he neglected any of those duties. All Acts of Parliament should be Christian Acts, and how could they be Christian if Christian men did not do their duty in the making of them? They should never cease to force home upon the people that, although nearly 2000 years had passed since Christ rose victorious from the dead, and although the Gospel had been preached for centuries in this country, at the present moment the great majority of the English people went to no place of worship. That was true of Manchester and all the large cities, and especially of London, which was the most heathen city in the Empire. Despite discouragements, however, he believed the prospects of the Forward Movement, of which they were advocates, were never so bright as to-day; the old-fashioned Gospel was never more potent.

Rev. J. H. Hopkins, of the Southwark Mission, and other speakers addressed the meeting.

A SEASIDE HOME OF REST.—For several years past Rev. W. Darlow Sergeant (now of the West London Wesleyan Mission) has been promoting Homes of Rest at Littlehampton. He has now secured a third Home, which was formally opened and consecrated by prayer last week in the presence of a number of interested friends. In the course of his statement Mr. Sergeant said these were not convalescent Homes; such places were to be found all over the kingdom, and it was easy for those who could declare their poverty to gain admittance to them. But it was his experience that these were not the people who suffered most. They had been the means of relieving cases of the greatest possible poverty amongst those who were in such a position that they could not make their circumstances known. The Homes are quite unsectarian. This third Home has been opened free of debt.

TELEGRAPH MESSENGERS.—The Western District Branch of the Postal Telegraph Messengers' Christian Association has taken new premises at Middlesex House, 25a, Chapel-street, Edgware-road, and its workers are seeking to bring the simple Gospel message home to the lads of the Marylebone, Paddington, and Notting-hill District. At the formal opening of the premises on Thursday, October 23, Sir Arthur Blackwood gave an earnest address to the lads; he dwelt specially upon the help and blessing to be derived from cultivating the habit of true prayer. Miss Edmonstone, one of the originators of the Association, said she hoped the object of the Association might be fulfilled in the Western District, by the gathering in of a multitude for the Saviour. Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, showed what a conquering life of happiness and power each lad might enjoy if he would only yield his heart to Christ, and let Christ dwell in him.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

A Glasgow Home Mission.

ALMOST everywhere throughout Scotland I found traces and memorials of the work of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. One of those that came specially under my notice was in Glasgow; and it is only one of the many to be met with in that city. A young Scotchman, Mr. D. J. FINDLAY, was converted in 1874, under Mr. Moody's rousing preaching. His conversion was sound and thorough; for he straightway began to try and get other people converted. He started kitchen meetings, and such varied forms of work as could be accomplished in the evening hours by one who had to labour for his daily bread. This went on for a couple of years or so, and then Mr. Findlay developed into a regular mission-hall preacher. For some years now he has been the moving spirit in a solid and aggressive work at Garscube Hall, situated in the western division of the city, and surrounded by a population that is largely sunken in poverty and vice. There are plenty of home heathen in Glasgow, and Mr. Findlay's parish has its full share of them.

Whether his gifts and qualities are inherited or acquired, I know not; but in my intercourse with Mr. Findlay I have been struck with the extent to which he has imbibed the spirit of his spiritual father, Mr. Moody. He seems positively to revel in his Christian work; it is his pet hobby. He has a singularly happy and lively temperament; in his methods of conducting a meeting he is thoroughly natural and free from the conventional formalism that stifles so much well-meant endeavour. One would set him down as a sort of sublimated Salvationist, if it were not that he was working in his own peculiar way years before the Salvation Army, as such, was heard of. He tells me that he went in for regular street processions long before he knew there was such a person as William Booth.

Such homely and earnest work must always attract the so-called "unchurched" masses; and many of them are drawn within the sweep of the Gospel net that is let down week by week at Garscube Hall. In the course of years an organised mission church has been planted there, and the members enjoy all the ordinances of the sanctuary; though I have no notion that Mr. Findlay has ever been "ordained" by bishop or presbyter. That he has been separated and anointed for his work by the Holy Ghost there is no manner of doubt. A diligent business man, he is equally devoted to evangelism, but he gathers round him capable and Spirit-taught helpers; believing that there is virtue in a fresh voice and in a varied way of presenting the Gospel message. All the work is cemented by prayer and faith, and, of course, there is continued fruit found. In order to reach some who will not come of their own accord to hear the Gospel, the Garscube Hall people go to the courts and alleys—the slums—of the district, and preach to the people while they lean out of the windows and listen.

For more than ten years the winter's work at Garscube Hall has been rounded off by a ten weeks' tent mission at St. George's Cross—a capital site for such an effort. Mr. Findlay is continually on the spot infusing his restless energy and happy geniality into the nightly meetings. He acts as special preacher himself for several of these summer weeks, and gets tried friends to take the lead during the rest. For several years past Mr. and Mrs. Webster, Wesleyan evangelists, whose headquarters are at Rochdale, have been among his helpers, and their labours have been greatly blessed. It was my privilege to meet these friends at Mr. Findlay's house some weeks ago, and I was greatly interested to learn that Mrs. Webster is a niece of that evangelist and man of God, of revered and blessed memory to multitudes in the North-east of Scotland, the late James Turner, of Peterhead. That the mantle of Mr. Turner has in large measure descended on his niece must be confessed by any who have heard him, and have also heard Mrs. Webster pray or preach.

The work at Garscube Hall, and also at the tent, is in close touch with the foreign missionary spirit. The aim is not only to get the people properly saved, but to have them fully consecrated; so the Mission has proved a nursery for earnest workers in the far-off fields of heathendom. The tent summer campaign is always closed by a two days' conference; the meetings held this year I had the privilege of reporting briefly in these columns, and a highly enjoyable time it was. I greatly rejoiced to hear that there are now some six workers in China, mainly as the fruit of these conferences, besides two in or on the way to Morocco.

The growth of the work has made the workers greatly feel the pinch of straitened accommodation at Garscube Hall, and Mr. Findlay's annual brief letter to his friends for a year or two back has made mention of the need of an enlarged hall. Rather, however, than stoop to doubtful methods of raising the money, he prefers to work away in his present "cathedral." He gives his own services year in and year out, without stint and without reward; and the ordinary collections, with some few gifts of friends, defray the necessary expenses of the work. Mr. Findlay says, with pardonable satisfaction, that he never begs a penny of anybody, and the balance is always on the right side. He believes that if the Master of the vineyard means him to get a bigger hall, He will prompt some steward of his wealth to furnish the means; anyhow, he won't go into debt.

It gives me great pleasure to add to this inadequate notice of a quiet but splendid work, that in Mrs. Findlay (a daughter of the well-known Mr. Wm. Quarrier) this servant of God has an excellent wife, and a hearty, sympathising helper in his zealous labours for the good of those around him.

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. M. Macaskill, of Dingwall, has written to the Scotch papers calling on the friends of the integrity and purity of Divine revelation throughout the land to lose no time in signifying their adherence to the "Statement" on the Dods-Bruce controversy, recently issued by Dr. Andrew Bonar and others.

On the other hand, Professor W. G. Blaikie, of New College, Edinburgh, has written to Dr. Bonar, arguing against the position adopted in the Statement that the Scriptures, as originally given, were absolutely free from error. He says the facts of Scripture, as we have them, are not consistent with this position, and he protests against its being thrust upon him. "We have no right," he says, "to commence this inquiry with any such presumption."

A lively discussion is going on in the Aberdeen papers as to the claims of total abstinence on ministers of the Gospel.

Some of the Free Church ministers in Glasgow are organising "forward movements" in connection with their congregations, so as to reach non-church-goers.

Rev. W. J. Dawson, Wesleyan Church, Glasgow, has resumed his Sabbath evening special addresses to young men.

At a well-attended Conference of the leading Scottish Sabbath Observance Societies and Church Sabbath Observance Committees in the National Bible Society's Rooms, Edinburgh, last week, it was resolved to petition Parliament to discontinue the collection and delivery of letters and parcels in post-offices throughout the country on Sabbaths.

There is a movement in the Free Church to increase the resources of the "Sustentation Fund," so as to enable a minimum stipend of £200 to be divided.

A new congregation has been formed in Leith on evangelical and temperance lines. The Freemason's Hall has been secured, and services were commenced on Sunday last. The promoters believe that the new cause is founded on right principles, and points to the direction in which the church of the future must work if it means to succeed in reclaiming the lapsed and lapsing masses.

The congregation of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, have again resolved, by 296 to 60 votes, to give a call to Rev. George A. Smith, Aberdeen, to be colleague and successor to Dr. Alex. Whyte.

The annual meeting of Carrubber's Close Mission, Edinburgh, was held last week. It was stated that during the year there had been 922 public meetings (including Gospel temperance), 1148 open-air meetings, 910 indoor meetings, 796 meetings for Bible study, 236 meetings of the Band of Hope and other juvenile agencies, making an average of 80 meetings each week. There are 600 workers enrolled, drawn from various denominations. All the workers' services are gratuitous, and the work is undenominational.

Rev. Dr. Hately Waddell, who for many years has ministered to a congregation in the Trades Hall, Glasgow, formerly undenominational, but latterly connected with the Church of Scotland, has retired from the ministry owing to advancing years and failing health.

The Scottish Mission of the Latter-Day Saints met in conference in Glasgow last week. Mr. Brigham Young and seventeen elders from Utah were present, and delivered short addresses on the position and prospects of the Mormon Church. It was reported that thirteen new members had joined in Scotland during the past three months.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier, Glasgow, has been again dragged into court by the Romish priests in connection with some rescued children.

Mr. Alex. MacKeith, 19, West Howard-street, Glasgow, convener of Committee of the Children's Day Refuges, writes that they are commencing the winter's work in the city among poor children. The Day Refuges are open five days in the week, and provide breakfast, dinner, and supper; and the dinner every Sabbath supplies a meal to a thousand. For this work about £20 is required weekly.

At a meeting of the Free Presbytery of Lorn, in Oban, a petition was submitted from the kirk session of Kilbrandon Church, complaining that their minister, Rev. Donald Macdonald, had countenanced and associated with certain itinerant preachers calling themselves "Pilgrims," and generally known by the name of "Perfectionists," whose doctrines were "opposed to the Word of God and to the Confession of Faith," and that he had allowed them to conduct public worship in Kilbrandon Free Church, besides holding preaching meetings with them in different parts of the parish.

Miss C. F. Gordon-Cumming last week addressed a large audience at North Berwick on Mr. Murray's mission to the blind in China.

The Free Presbytery of Glasgow have ordained Rev. D. D. Stormont as a missionary to Africa.

THE LAFAYETTE-AVENUE CHURCH, BROOKLYN, has given a hearty call to Rev. David Gregg, D.D., now of the old Park-street Church, Boston, to become their pastor, and the successor of Dr. Cuyler. It is understood that the latter is most heartily in sympathy with this action of his late charge.

INFANT ORPHAN ASYLUM, WANSTEAD.—Through various epidemics, the past year has been a trying one for this institution; but, by divine mercy, there has been but one death among 600 children. A satisfactory educational standard has been maintained. A much-needed work is efficiently performed. The expenditure is a regular and constantly recurring demand which must be met. The rigid audit and examination of supplies show that there is no extravagance; while the healthy appearance of the children, and the air of comfort which pervades the place, show that there is no parsimony. The secretary is Mr. Henry W. Green, 100, Fleet-street, E.C.

ROBIN DINNERS.—During the past fourteen years the readers of Home Words publications have supplied the "Robin" Fund, which has made hundreds of thousands of hungry little ones happy for an evening. Last year alone £750 was raised, and in fifty or sixty London centres between thirty and forty thousand guests were fed and amused. The founder of the dinners, Rev. Charles Bullock, has now come to the conclusion that it would be well to relieve himself of the responsibilities of future management by enlisting the aid of a committee. The hon. secs. and treasurers are Messrs. C. Ashton Bullock and John Kirk, and the offices are at 7, Paternoster-square, E.C.

BELFAST TOWN MISSION.—In addition to indoor and outdoor Gospel meetings, 46,730 families have been visited during the past year by the agents of this Mission, and some 130 have been induced to join various churches, although, from extreme poverty, there is much reluctance to enter churches attended by well-dressed persons. Most cheering testimonies have been given of the power of the Gospel in the home and by the sick bed. One agent has paid 706 visits to ships entering this port. The number of missionaries is much less than it should be to meet the spiritual wants of an increasing population. The Mission regards the Gospel as the grand remedy for all social evils, and seeks to bring the truth into every street and home of this large and prosperous city. Mr. Wm. Maxwell, 12, May-street, Belfast, is secretary.

For the Young.

TWO NEW HEBRIDES CHIEFS.

In a recent letter to a friend in England, Rev. John G. Paton, the well-known missionary to the New Hebrides tells the following affecting story:—

A noble young chief on Malo embraced the Gospel and learned to read and write. On account of the hatred and persecution of his father, he had to leave the church and school for a time, but returned as soon as possible. In April last his father made a great feast, at which he killed one hundred hogs and prepared much food for it. All the people and chiefs met to raise the young chief to be a Moli, the highest rank a chief on the island can rise to. Out of respect to his father "Antas" (the young chief) was at the feast, but refused to take any part in the heathen ceremonies, or to partake of "food offered to idols."

At the close of the feast he left and went to the mission-house and sat down with the teachers and common servants at their fire,* and ate of their food prepared on that fire! On seeing this, his wife left him, and returned to her father's house.

The chiefs anathematised him and degraded him to the rank of a common man in his tribe! When the young men mocked and ridiculed him and refused to speak to him, he bore it all for Jesus' sake. At last he came to the missionary for advice. The missionary pointed out to him Christ's words in Matt. x., "He that loveth father or mother more than Me, is not worthy of Me," and prayed God to sustain and comfort him. The young chief rose from prayer, and declared to all that he had the authority of God for what he was doing.

The trying persecution he went through led many of the waverers and young people to leave off attending school and church, but we hope they will soon return when the storm passes. His father tried to take his life; but he folded his arms and said: "Well, father, shoot me and have done with it, for you make my life miserable. I am not afraid of death, I will go to Jesus." His father could not carry out his purpose; God restrained him. This good young man makes steady progress, and sets a noble example to others as a Christian and is a great comfort and help to the missionary in his mission work there.

Another young chief named "Bani," at a meeting with his father and his people, informed them all that he had become a Christian, that the words of Jesus had lodged firmly in his heart, and that henceforth he was going to worship and obey Jesus. His father was much opposed to his leaving the gods and practices of his fathers, and wrought himself into such a passion at his son that he threatened his life. As the lad could not be shaken in his purpose, the father ran at him to kill him. The son avoided the blow, when the father in his fury fell and gave himself a severe scalp wound. He lay some time on the ground for dead, but recovered.

The dear lad ran to the mission-house, cast in his lot with Antas, and declared himself also a Christian. The two are now living at the mission-house and receiving Christian instruction, and doing all they can to bring in others.

* A young sacred chief of Antas's rank would not sit at a fire with the common people, nor eat of food cooked on a common fire, but on one on which nothing else was cooked, and by a man sacred to that purpose; and when he was going to eat alone, the attendant gave a cry very loud, to let all who heard it know to be quiet and look away whilst the chief was eating; so the action of Antas after his father's feast was to proclaim that he had broken all caste, and given all up for Jesus Christ, and left all consequences to Him.

THE BROKEN ANGEL.

It stands upon the mantel-shelf—
A little piece of common delf,
An angel with a broken wing,
To all intents a worthless thing.
But Chelsea, Sèvres, or Worcester prize,
As this small piece of common delf,
That stands upon the mantel-shelf,
Has no such value in my eyes.

I had a little daughter fair,
With sunny waves of golden hair,
With rosy cheeks and brow of snow,
And merry chatter's ceaseless flow,
And little feet that came and went;
The azure of her laughing eyes
Reminded one of summer skies—
A sunbeam to our household sent.

And often in her baby way
With this toy angel would she play—
Would put it in her cradle-bed,
"To make it go to sleep," she said.
Till one day in the early spring,
Being in a careless, playful mood,
She dropped the angel where she stood,
Then cried about its broken wing.

Ah me, 'tis past and over now,
Closed are the eyes, and cold the brow;
And daisies grow upon the sod,
My little girl has gone to God.
And, when I see upon the shelf
The angel with its broken wing,
To me it is a precious thing,
Although 'tis only common delf.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Nov. 9, Exod. xxv. 1—16; Mon., Nov. 10, Exod. xxv. 17—30; Tues., Nov. 11, Exod. xxvi. 30—37; Wed., Nov. 12, Exod. xxviii. 1—12; Thurs., Nov. 13, Exod. xxix. 38—46; Fri., Nov 14, Exod. xxxii. 1—14; Sat., Nov. 15, Exod. xxxii. 15—24.

MR. E. ARROWSMITH (of the Children's Special Service Mission) visited Leominster last week, and held a series of very successful meetings on Wednesday and Thursday. This is Mr. Arrowsmith's third visit to Leominster, a town in which he is greatly esteemed, and where his work for the Master has been much blessed, many young men and women, through his earnest exhortations, having given their hearts to the Lord, and become sincere and active workers.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—A mission was held at Taunton by Rev. Martin J. Hall, of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, from Oct. 19 to 23. There were two special meetings held in the week for private schools and colleges. After-meetings were held, many children staying behind for a little talk. A striking feature in the mission was a meeting for parents and friends of children. This was much appreciated. Since the meetings, members have been added to the Scripture Union branches. The seed sown in many hearts, we believe, will one day bring forth fruit.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Woolwich, Nov. 7; Town Hall, Chester, Nov. 8—19; Waterloo, Liverpool, Nov. 23 to Dec. 3. Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Clement's, Nechells, Birmingham, 9—14; Sheldon, Nov. 15, 16; Gorton, Manchester, Nov. 23—28. Mr. James S. Tyler, Preston, Nov. 2—8; Kirby Lonsdale, Nov. 8—14; St. George's, Bolton, Nov. 16—20; Coupland-street, Manchester, Nov. 23—28. Mr. T. Lewes Sawyer, St. Andrew's, Barnsbury, to Nov. 7; Havering, Nov. 16; Public Hall, Romford, Nov. 16—25. Mr. Herbert Pewtress, Union Chapel, Luton, to Nov. 8. Mr. J. M. Wigner, West Greenwich Ragged School, Bridge-street, Nov. 9—14. Mr. H. Lidstone, Baptist Church, Brondesbury, to Nov. 7.

MARYLAND POINT MISSION.—For forty years a good work has been done in this Mission at Stratford. The adult and the young have been instructed in Divine truth, the destitute poor have been relieved, and sufficient evidence has been manifested that the efforts put forth have been much needed. The continual migration of the people in these poor neighbourhoods makes Christian effort very necessary. It is only by constant visitation to their houses that many of them ever hear a word about the way of salvation and peace here and a heavenly home hereafter. Mr. John Stabb, 6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington, N., will gladly furnish details to those who may be interested about the work.

EXPLORATION ON THE CONGO.

Since returning to the Congo my opinion regarding the valuable work rendered by Rev. G. Grenfell, of the Baptist Missionary Society, to the cause of missions in Central Africa, has been greatly strengthened. The more I know of the Upper Congo and its Equatorial tributaries, the more deeply I am impressed with the extent and importance of his explorations. It would be difficult to express the indebtedness that we, as a mission, owe to Mr. Grenfell; indeed, I may add that his geographical researches have been of great use to other missions beside our own in the furtherance of the Gospel among the tribes of the Upper Congo.

The comparative vocabulary which he prepared of the dialects spoken by the people living on the rivers which drain the country, gave us for the first time some idea of the value and importance of the far-reaching Balolo tongue. Though on some of the rivers the people are called Bankundu, and on others Balolo, Lofembe, or Mongo, the language spoken is one, and is the medium of communication over an area of some 245,000 miles or more. We now add the Lofale, or Lappore, to the list of Balolo rivers. We thank God for friendly people and open doors on this river.

We have great reason for thankfulness that the Upper Congo has been thrown open. This is due in great measure to the indefatigable efforts of Mr. Grenfell.

J. McKittrick, Congo-Balolo Mission.

In a private letter Mr. McKittrick gives some interesting particulars of journeys he has himself recently taken. He says:—

"During our late trip we saw thousands of people who have never had a single opportunity of being other than heathen. At Bongandanga, a district about 120 miles beyond our Ikan station, we reached high land. We remained a day with the people, and found them very friendly and interesting. We visited the town of the leading chief, which is built on the summit of the ridge, about 400 yards back from the river. The people seemed in a very unsettled state, owing, they said, to recent war palavers with Boza Ukusu people.

"From the hill-top I gained a good view of the country in every direction. The sight that met my gaze I shall never forget. Stretching far away to the N. and N.W. lay a vast plain, covered with the densest tropical forest, and traversed here and there by gentle elevations, running N.E. and S.W., untrodden by the foot of European. Nor hut nor town was visible; nothing that seemed to indicate the existence of a human being, save the curling smoke that rose from a thousand clearings in that great wilderness.

"Strange to say, notwithstanding the degraded condition of the people, they are everywhere ready to receive the messenger, though at first they despise his message. We consider Bongandanga a splendid mission centre from which to carry on the work, and trust by the blessing of God to build there soon."

DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.—A series of winter meetings commences on the 14th inst. in Portman Rooms, 32, Dorset-street, Portman-square. Rev. Hubert Brooke will give a Bible-reading at 11.30 a.m., and Rev. Charles A. Fox will deliver an address at 3.30 p.m. The subsequent meetings are to be held on successive Friday afternoons, with but one address, so as to afford time for prayer and meditation.

VALEDICTORY MISSIONARY MEETING.—A farewell service in connection with the departure for India of seven lady missionaries of the Church of Scotland Ladies' Association for Foreign Missions was recently held in St. George's Church, Edinburgh. Five of the ladies were present—viz., Miss Cameron and Miss Parker, going to Calcutta; Miss Light and Miss M'Arthur, to Poonah; and Miss Stephenson, to Gujerat in the Punjab; Miss Emily Bernard and Miss Scroggie had already sailed.

NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS

A NATIONAL Protestant Congress was held last week, October 27-29, at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W. The object was to unite in closer bonds of Christian fellowship and effort the various sections of Christ's Church, for the maintenance of evangelical truth and work, and exposing and resisting sacerdotalism and other forms of error. On the evening of Oct. 27, a devotional meeting was held, at which the oneness of the Church was considered—"One Body and One Spirit." The two following days were devoted to the reading of papers, three sessions being held daily.

TUESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 28.

Union of Protestant Churches.

SIR S. A. BLACKWOOD, who presided, delivered an opening address full of timely warnings and wise counsels. He said: I desire that we should remind ourselves very clearly of the extreme gravity of the crisis which is at present occurring with regard to the maintenance and the defence and spread of the truths of the Gospel in this country. Many of us are conscious of the alarming rapidity with which the encroachments and advances of Rome have lately been proceeding. We see on all sides—in the Metropolis, in university cities, and in places throughout the country—evidences of the fact to which I allude. Romish cathedrals are rising in great magnificence; churches are multiplying; priests are increasing in number; colleges and nunneries are being established on all sides; and efforts are being made in the most insidious as well as open manner again to bring into our midst the errors of Rome. Anyone who has eyes to see, anyone who can take intelligent notice of what is going on, cannot help being struck with these facts.

At the same time we have within the Church of England a company of those who, by the highest authorities in the Church itself, have been termed nothing less than conspirators against her constitution and against Protestant principles. We have these men working by means of secret societies, praying for and seeking to compass re-union with Rome. We have all sorts of confraternities and associations in the most active operation, seeking for nothing less than that. On all sides we are seeing the ritual in our parish churches brought into conformity with Romish models. So we are confronted, both within and without by a state of things which, I believe, has hitherto been

UNPARALLELED IN THE HISTORY OF OUR COUNTRY.

I do not believe I am overstating the facts—at any rate I express my own conviction—when I say that, notwithstanding all the agencies for the propagation of the truth in Christ that exist in our country—notwithstanding the vast multitudes of earnest, active Christians at work in the highways and byways of the various sections of the Church preaching the Gospel, there has never been a time of more serious danger to the Protestant religion and the liberties of our country than the present.

What is incumbent upon us? The clergy of the Church of England, with but few exceptions—noble exceptions they are, for whose faithful testimony we thank God sincerely—do not realise the gravity of the occasion. They do not preach Protestant truth in its fulness; it is kept in the background, and churches which a year ago were evangelical and Protestant are now adopting a high ritual, and becoming ashamed to be called Protestant. In the Nonconformist Churches there is not at the present moment such active effort in this direction as we should like to see. Perhaps it does not seem to our Nonconformist friends that the matter concerns them very much. They have not realised that "when your neighbour's house is on fire you had better look to your own." They do not realise that large numbers of their own people are in danger of being attracted by the sensuous ritual and the worldly doctrine of the Romish and Ritualistic churches; nor that the civil and religious liberties of England, for which they stood up so boldly in times gone by, are in grave peril. We thank God for those of our Nonconformist brethren who have come to our rescue, and to serve, as we believe, the true interests of their country. But we want to increase their numbers. We thankfully remember that it was by the outspoken and hearty sympathy of Nonconformists two hundred years ago that our liberties were maintained; and we believe that, by the exhibition of true fraternal sympathy on the part of those who feel that they are in the same ship as their distressed brethren of the Church of England, we shall, by God's blessing, be delivered from the troubles which now press upon us.

I cannot help thinking that the laity of England are apathetic and supine. This is not because they are not Protestant at heart; for I believe there is a strong, deep feeling in this sense throughout the nation. In the middle and working classes we have a great power, but it is not yet awakened, though there are signs of its awakening. We call this a National Protestant Congress, because we believe that is needed at this time. This is not a new society; we work in cordial harmony with the Protestant Alliance, the Evangelical Alliance, and other organisations, and endeavour to bring together the friends and supporters of all. Nothing short of a close and more persistent and more manifested union of all who love the truth as it is in Jesus will suffice to meet impending dangers, and the exigences of the time.

Thus we consider, first of all, how this union may be promoted. The great secret of the successful advance and encroachment of Rome and Romanism is that there is unity. Their plans, methods, and objects are definite, and the result of united action. On the other hand, the great failure and want of success which has attended our Protestant movements is owing to the fact that we are so disunited. So many of our churches have their own objects to accomplish that this great subject has been left, as it were, outside, as a thing concerning everybody in general and nobody in particular. If our Reformation blessings are to be preserved, and the liberties of our country are to be saved, we must stand shoulder to shoulder on the very broadest platform that can be conceived. It may be that the dangers which we see shall come to a head further on; and, because we have broken down the fences which our wise forefathers raised, God will visit us and bring us into deeper waters; and that by the pressure of severer calamities the Protestant heart of England will be brought to beat with enthusiasm. People may call us bigots, fanatics, and narrow-minded; but our duty and privilege is to go straight forward. We regard the prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ in his office of High Priest as assailed by the insidious efforts of the great Babylon of the Apocalypse; and we believe the value and glory of his finished work to be depreciated and dishonoured. Therefore, if not for the liberty of our country or the salvation of our fellow creatures, we are bound, by love and allegiance to our Lord and King, to stand up for that which we believe to be his truth.

Common Grounds of Union.

REV. PROF. J. RADFORD THOMSON, M.A.

We are not seeking more unity merely with the view of gratifying a sentiment, however beautiful. Nor are we urged by a mere motive of expediency, although we acknowledge that dissensions are disastrous, and that in the presence of ignorance and infidelity, of vice and crime, Christians are called upon to stand shoulder to shoulder in a battle which only through united effort can issue in success. In our endeavours towards union we are actuated by reverence for the authority of the Divine and Mediatorial Head of the Church. It is not in order to express an emotion of the human heart, or that we may follow the counsels of human wisdom that we wish to be one; it is in order that we may obey our rightful Lord. He has given us his new commandment, that we love one another; it is He who has declared that One is our Master, and all we are brethren; it is He who has prayed that we all may be one, even as He is one with the Father; and it is his Apostle who has described the Church as one body, with many members, but all in subjection to one Head.

We cannot, as Christians, unite upon the basis of mere sympathy with our common humanity, and co-operation in benevolent effort for the improvement of the condition of the people. We believe in a supernatural system, by which our humanity is redeemed and renewed; we believe in the reality of sin, and in the reality of salvation. Accordingly, for us, religious union means something altogether different from association for beneficent ends with our Positivist and Atheistic fellow-countrymen. Further, we cannot accept, as a basis of union, a general

CONFORMITY TO ANY OUTWARD ORGANISATION.

We cannot but think that those of our friends are mistaken who require, as a term of unity and fellowship, that all should incorporate themselves in an earthly and visible organisation, which they are in danger of confusing with the true Church of Christ. Follow out their suggestion—often made in a sincerely brotherly spirit—and what will be the consequence? You will be led into organic unity with the Roman, Greek, and other corrupt communions. Whether or not you will gain anything by yielding to such terms, it is plain what you will lose. You will break off from the fellowship of the non-episcopal communities, whose labours and services to mankind God Himself is, in both hemispheres, stamping with the seal of his own approval. We cannot confine our conception of the Church of Jesus to any one class of Christian communities; and, consequently, we cannot obtain union upon such terms as would unchurch multitudes whom God Himself accepts and blesses.

We cannot found our Christian unity upon mere Protestantism. We do protest against the errors and superstitions of the Roman Church, and against any reversion to those errors and superstitions on the part of members of the Reformed Churches. But we must do something more than protest; unbelievers may, and do, protest—as well as we. A merely negative attitude is no bond of religious unity;

Germany and Holland have taught us so much. We must move, like the planets, under combined centrifugal and centripetal forces. It is not enough to fly from what we reject; we must fly towards what we approve and love. Our basis is not only Protestant; it is evangelical. We are drawn by the Gospel towards fellowship with the Lord Christ; and it is our common participation in Him which is the bond of union among ourselves. A cold repudiation of false doctrine, and of unjust authority, is of little value; at all events, it is consistent with little love and little labour.

It is not for us to invent and propound terms of union; we have to accept and to maintain the terms which have been dictated by the Head of the spiritual body. If we are to attain something better than a merely sentimental union, we must have an actual, objective basis. We find this in common and submissive of truth and duty. An ordinary human institution, a university, a guild, a club, settles for itself upon what conditions it shall receive members into its fellowship, and into the enjoyment of its privileges. We have no right, and no wish, to do anything of the kind, in our endeavour to bring about Christian unity. A valued minister of the Lord Jesus once observed to me: "I can work with any man who will start from the same centre as myself, although the circumference of our beliefs may suffer." There may be men who think themselves able to construct a scheme of human salvation, to invent means for regenerating mankind. Let them make the attempt; time tries all. But for ourselves, we are one in holding that God has visited and redeemed his people, and has raised up a mighty salvation for us. We are one in the determination to make Divine truth the bread of our souls, and Divine precepts the chart of our life-voyage.

But a merely intellectual bond of union is not sufficient. There must be personal loyalty to the one Divine Head. This is the distinctive note of true Protestantism. Those who are acquainted with the religion of the nations which form the Roman communion are aware to how large an extent this prerogative of our Divine Saviour is invaded, and to how large an extent such invasion is encouraged by the Roman priesthood. The confidence, reverence, and affection which are due to the Son of God are transferred to the mother of our Lord's humanity, to Joseph, to saints, varying, as every traveller knows, with the nationality of the worshippers. Such a practice is not merely a condescension to human weakness; it is an infraction of the just claims of our Divine Redeemer. There cannot be cordial union between those for whom Christ is all and those who practically establish or admit created beings, however holy and honourable, as rivals to our Lord. There must be, in order to union, a loyal submission and devotion, a loving and supreme attachment, to

THE ONE MEDIATOR AND SOVEREIGN.

It is upon this common relation to Christ that there must rest the mutual relation of brotherly love, confidence, and co-operation. The spirit of charity, forbearance, and mutual aid is so decidedly opposed to the sinful tendencies of human nature that it can be evoked only by a common possession by a Divine agency. The Holy Spirit, ever present, both in the individual believer's heart, and in the Christian society at large, must be sought and obeyed, in order that this subjective condition of unity may be present, and may be of sufficient strength. Where this gracious Spirit works, there the faith of Christians will be one, though verbal creeds may differ; their worship will be one, though forms may vary; and their work will be one, although methods may be multiform and diverse.

The grounds of union which have been mentioned may be considered as theoretical. But we do not lose sight of the fact that man is a practical being, and that Christianity is a practical religion. God in Christ calls us to work; and

WE ARE CONSECRATED TO WORK.

This common calling, this common consecration is a mighty bond of union. It is sometimes, and justly, said, Let us together get to work, and we shall forget and sink our minor differences. The Church, when animated by the Divine Spirit, is the perpetuation of the Saviour's presence upon earth. If we aim at spreading the light, at banishing the darkness of error, ignorance, vice, crime, sin, and misery, we shall surely feel that we cannot but be allies and brethren in so holy a war.

We, in this Congress, unite upon a common apprehension of the nature of the true Church of Christ. For us, the spiritual Church is composed of all the pardoned, renewed, purified, and saved, whether in earth or in heaven. In order to take this view, we are not constrained to disparage any actually organised associations of Christians. Some of us may attach great importance to such institutions, and may endeavour to bring them into conformity with what we regard as the New Testament model. But none of us, for one moment, supposes that these societies are identical with the Church, which is the majestic temple of the living God, the body informed and governed by Christ, the mystical spouse of the Divine Redeemer. The true Church, doubtless, includes many who are outside all our communities, and excludes, alas! not a few whom we recognise as having a place within them. It is the which extends through all lands, and endures throughout all time, but is yet beyond and above all limits of time and space. It seems to us that, early in the history of Christianity, a confusion was introduced between what the Reformers of the sixteenth century termed the visible and the invisible Church, and that much which was only true of the latter was asserted of, and claimed for, the former. A unity of outward organisation was substituted for a unity of faith, of spirit, of life. From this error, as from their source, flowed many errors relating to the ministry and the sacraments, errors from which large portions of Christendom are not yet free, and which are perhaps the most serious obstacles in the way of the true reunion of Christian people.

It seems to me that we cannot possibly be too High Church in our conceptions of the dignity, spiritual beauty, and majesty of that Church which our Saviour purchased with his blood, and which He guides and governs by his Spirit. But, on the other hand, we cannot be too careful not to identify with this great and spiritual society our imperfect human organisations—be they Episcopal, Presbyterian, Methodist, or Congregational. Even the addition of these does not yield as a sum the ideal and imperishable society of God's own elect.

It only remains to ask, What kind of union and unity is to be sought and hoped for, if we proceed upon the basis which has been outlined? I frankly acknowledge that it will not of necessity follow that Christian people, accepting this basis, will therefore be combined in one external ecclesiastical organisation, under the same church government, with a unity which shall be manifest to the world. It is to some minds very questionable whether such an outward connection and conformity is to be desired. I myself am of opinion that there might, with advantage, be than now exists; but many whose judgment may be wiser than my own, consider such unity of little moment; whilst none of us, I presume, deem it of vital and primary importance. But even if we all retain our several Church systems, our own forms of worship, our own methods of promoting spiritual life and progress, and of evangelising our unbelieving fellow countrymen, and the heathen in distant lands; even upon this supposition, it seems to me that those who hold the same truth, reverence the same Lord, and seek the same spiritual ends, may, by a more affectionate and open union than now exists, secure very precious results. Apparent rivalry may be prevented; waste of power may be avoided, especially in rural districts, where two or three societies are often found attempting work which might be undertaken by one, whilst other fields of labour are neglected; and mutual advantage might be gained by frequent intercommunion, which advantage is largely forfeited where party spirit or misunderstanding keeps Christians separate, and even mutually suspicious. Union, acceptable to Christ, and profitable to his people, may be realised and expressed in the spirit and language of fellow Christians, in more common worship, in interchange of ministry where practicable, in conference and consultation regarding the kingdom of Christ, and in concerted and conjoint efforts for the promotion of missionary enterprise at home and abroad.

Some earnest advocates of union may be disappointed with expectations which they may deem so very moderate. But I would suggest that we should clear our minds of all worldly aims, such as the presentation of an imposing front to the world; such as consolidation of an organisation which might claim, on secular grounds, the respect of the Press, and the consideration of the State. If our social life, as Christians, is in harmony with the mind of Christ Himself, and if our work in the world really and growingly promotes the spiritual kingdom of truth and righteousness, we shall probably meet with all the recognition and support which is good for us. And we shall be animated by the assurance that, sooner or later, —though in what way we may not know—the Church of Christ shall conquer every enemy, and shall be itself the new humanity, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

Hindrances to Union.

REV. TALBOT GREAVES, M.A.,

preferred to say "Hindrances to Unity," for the "union" of all believers in Christ is a fact. We have to aim at the cultivation and manifestation of the union by unity of feeling and action. The existence of many organisations in religious effort should be acknowledged as a good and not an evil; and there may be unity without uniformity. Why should there not be fraternal co-operation among evangelical believers? Rome presents a united front, and so grave is the crisis that all the faithful should combine, and, by God's blessing, the battle will yet be turned in the gate. Protestant Churchmen are in far closer accord with Nonconformists than with High and Broad Churchmen.

The first hindrance is selfishness. We are so absorbed in our own organisations, our individualism is so predominant, that we say one to another "What is that to us? See thou to that." Ministers seem to think that their duty simply lies in the charge of their flocks. Many are afraid of controversy, and many hide their heads in the privacy of ministerial life, as if they owed nothing to their country. The command stands, however, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Another hindrance is social separation—Churchmen and Nonconformists move too much in separate orbits. An interchange of hospitality would do more than would an interchange of pulpits to promote a good understanding. Another great hindrance, almost the greatest, is the surprising ignorance which prevails as to the real progress of error in our land. Very few believe that Rome is making any progress towards recovering supremacy, and there is a widespread impression that Popery is no longer the persecuting Popery of the past. The greatest hindrance of all is that we lose sight too much of the one grand truth which should unite all believers, and, at the same time, separate them from all other people. This is not Episcopacy, Presbyterianism, or Congregationalism. If we did but see the crimson line of the blood of Jesus drawn by the Divine hand round the believing Church, there would be fraternisation, federation, and almost fusion within the charmed and blessed circle; this realisation would prove a munition of rocks through which the hosts of error should never penetrate.

Suggestions as to Union.

Mr. L. Liesching suggested federation as affording many of the advantages of intercommunion. The "historic episcopate" has been put forward as a basis of union between Churchmen and Nonconformists. But why should Church government and not doctrine be made the standard? Believers are members of one body, animated by one Spirit, and united to one Head, even Christ.

REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,

said: When many branches of the one Church are seeking union with each other, we may be sure that there is some thought in the mind of Christ our Head which is about to be expressed. Though we may not be able to-day to concert a scheme which will consolidate all our desires, yet we are feeling after the idea which is in the mind of God, and shall shortly be revealed to us. If we want to rally enthusiasm, we must have more than a negation to present; we must give forth something positive if men are to be stirred to action. I think the only way to meet error is to put forward truth. You can only destroy the wrong by maintaining the right.

If Roman Catholicism exerts so great a power in our country, because of the unity it assumes, we must increasingly emphasise the spiritual unity of the Church of Jesus Christ our Lord. God has made that unity; we have only to reveal one of the thoughts of God, and our great aim and purpose surely should be, not only to hold it ourselves, but to teach with increasing emphasis that all those who are one with Jesus Christ are one with each other, in all communions, in all countries, in all ages, one in Christ. But there must be some manifestation of this unity, because our Lord asked "that they all may be one, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." There must be of this spiritual unity, in order that the world of men who have no sympathy with spiritual conceptions may be led to believe in Jesus Christ our Lord.

There are, however, two or three things which must be insisted upon. One of these is, that our religious basis must not be drawn from the fourth century, but from the first. We are not prepared to meet any body of men who stop short at the fourth century with its creeds. We must go back to the age of the Apostles and the New Testament. Secondly, we must meet on perfectly equal terms. Those who have never knelt beneath a bishop's hand cannot enter into manifested unity with other men unless they are prepared to recognise us as brothers in Christ Jesus, and equally ministers of the New Testament. This is not demanded for ourselves—for what is that?—but for the sake of truth, and what is right in the sight of God. Thirdly, we must not be called upon to abate one jot or tittle of the special truth which God has given us to witness for in the world.

In conclusion, after expressing a hope that Christ will lead his people in their coming close together, Mr. Meyer suggested a reduction of the present clashing of workers, and a more frequent assemblage of believers in conference and worship.

Rev. James Neil, M.A., remarked that one way of showing unity would be for Church clergymen to preach in Nonconformist pulpits when possible. This is legal, although the bishops have requested clergymen not to avail themselves of such opportunities. Personally, he had for some time been accepting such invitations.

Rev. Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens exposed the folly of certain High Churchmen, who in their special catechisms have declared attendance at Nonconformist places of worship to be displeasing to God.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Public Worship of God.

Col. James Griffin presided, and in some opening remarks said: Before we can engage in public worship—before we can share the joys of the common service of God—we must have some realising sense of Him who demands our adoration. It is only as we come into close relation to the Divine Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, and are subject to the influences of the Holy Spirit, that we can engage in worship, either private or public. Worship should be solemn, sincere, and simple. It may at the same time be cheerful, by the blending of gladness with holy fear.

REV. A. A. ISAACS, M.A.,

dealt with the true nature of worship. He said: True worship is devout and reverential communion with God. It is not dependent upon localities. It is not dependent upon the condition and circumstances of our daily life. It may be equally full and experimental amidst the busy throng of the world as in the solitude of the desert, as intense in meaning and power in the assembly of the faithful as in the stillness and isolation of the dark and sleepless night. Under the Mosaic dispensation the directions on the subject were strictly regulated by that which was arranged and appointed in connection with the tabernacle of the wilderness. The whole of this originated with the Divine will, and was to be conducted according to a Divine pattern. The erection of the Temple at Jerusalem was first conceived by the mind of man, although it afterwards received the authorisation and direction of God. But it cannot be too distinctly understood that the original design of Jehovah was that of a tent capable of being easily removed, passing onward with the people as they journeyed day by day, and bearing upon every feature of its construction and accompaniments the evidence that it was only to serve a temporary purpose, and was only a shadow of good things to come.

When He came who was the great Antitype, in whom was perfectly fulfilled every purpose and promise of God, ceremonial appointments, which were like faint and glimmering lights, giving only a limited measure of guidance amidst the gloom of spiritual night, passed away before the full beams of the Sun of Righteousness. To restore that which had ceased to have any significance could amount to nothing short of an insult to that Divine Redeemer, who combines in his own person the High Priesthood and the Sacrifice—the Offerer and the Propitiation for sin. It would be as reasonable and as allowable to reinstate the sacrifice of the Levitical dispensation, as to burn incense; to employ the ashes of the heifer for the cleansing from defilement, as to impute some intrinsic value to the consecrated wafer. The ministry of our Lord and the Apostles was unaccompanied by ceremonial observances. It seemed as if by one touch of his own gracious and omnipotent hand the edifice of types and shadows crumbled into dust.

The speaker described several recent movements in the direction of Rome in the Church of England, and concluded: A wave of pagan superstition is sweeping over the land. Its blighting influence is felt among Nonconformists as well as Episcopalians. In its train must inevitably follow the sore judgments of God. This may in his gracious purposes be accompanied by such an annihilation of these powers of darkness as may lead to the restoration of the pure and simple worship, which alone is worthy of the name of our Great Master. Or it may be the precursor of the coming of our Lord, before whose brightness every cloud shall be dispersed, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

REV. CHARLES ASTLEY, M.A.,

showed that to worship any but the Triune Jehovah is not only useless because unwarranted, but it is irrational, idolatrous, and infidel. It is infidel, because it indicates unbelief in Him who has revealed Himself to us as a jealous God. It is said that we must seek guidance of the early Church. Well, but not of the fourth, third, or second century, but of the first; we must go to the New Testament. At the first, the place of worship was a matter of positive indifference, as is clear from the early chapters of the Acts of the Apostles. The company, not the place, was the thing of importance, according to the gracious promise of the Lord: "Where (that is, wheresoever) two or three are met together in My name there am I in the midst." A church may at any moment be constituted by two or three believers meeting together, without priest, or even minister, being present.

The early Christians engaged in prayer and praise, exposition of the Scriptures and attention to doctrine. The rites were baptism (when required) and the Lord's Supper. Contrast this simplicity with worship such as is too common to-day. Worship is becoming more and more a matter of music, decorations, paintings, vestments, processions, banners, attitudinisings, and various external exhibitions, rather than the outpouring of grateful hearts in prayer and praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God. It is said that things that are not forbidden are permissible; but these practices are all forbidden by implication, and are against the genius of Christianity. They form a traitorous departure from the blessed Gospel. Worship must not only be Scriptural, but spiritual: "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Whatever beliefs or practices tend to make worship superstitious, mechanical, or idolatrous ought to be guarded against by every man and woman, and driven out as blasphemous and dangerous.

Worship should also be intelligent and hearty. That, as the Romanists have said, ignorance is the mother of devotion is one of the lies of the devil, intended to deceive men. The worship of God must not be regarded as ending in itself. Did Christ come to establish a great system of ritual? Can those clergymen who think that the essence of Christianity is worship ever have studied their Bible? Christ came to fulfil in all its completeness the ritualism that was already existing, and to glorify God by saving lost sinners.

Rev. Lancelot Holland, M.A., spoke on the helps and hindrances of public worship. The first help was the Holy Spirit's presence in the hearts of God's people, all of whom are priests. Whatever of a material kind is introduced to take the place of the Holy Spirit is a hindrance; the perfume of literal incense must be an abomination to the Lord. Music to please the senses is an end, and not a means; rather let the services be rendered bright by melody in the heart. Again, Christ must ever be the Master of Assemblies; whatever and whoever obscures Christ's presence in gatherings of believers is a distinct hindrance. Among other helps, the speaker specified: the felt presence of the Lord's people, short and definite prayers, congregational singing of Scriptural hymns, and a faithful proclamation of the word of God. The contraries of these are hindrances. What so puts the mind in a Godly frame as the preaching of the Word in the Spirit by a God-sent minister?

Rev. James Neil indicated the bearing of John iv. 23 on the subject. By the figure known as hendiadys the true spirituality of worship is declared by our Lord: "True worshippers of the Father shall worship the Father in true spirituality." Worship must be truly spiritual. The speaker remarked that harvest festivals look very like wilful return to the rejected worship of Cain; and said that since they have been popular the agricultural and pastoral interests of our country had been suffering in a remarkable manner.

Rev. Dr. W. J. ADAMS asked for the sympathy of evangelical Christians with the country clergy. The temptations which beset earnest men are very many. On the one hand pressure comes from the bishop, and on the other from parishioners disposed towards ritualistic practices.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Instruction in Reformation Principles.

Colonel T. MYLES SANDYS, M.P., who presided, remarked upon the great present need for a dissemination of Reformation principles and Scripture teachings. How is it, and why is it, that the doctrines which, in the times of the Reformation, were accepted by almost an overwhelming majority of the people of this country as the vital points of their religion—as essential for the well-being not only of the individual but also of the State—should have been pushed on one side, and allowed to fall into abeyance in the way they have? At the Reformation, England leaped into the foremost place among the nations of the earth, and now the principles which made this possible are being forgotten. The Protestant history of England is taught in scarcely any schools; excepting in a very few instances, nothing is said on the subject in the churches throughout the land. Moreover, the Press is largely closed against correspondence of this kind. The very name of Protestant has become more or less of a reproach, and this reproach comparatively few venture to bear. In the case of clergymen it carries certain well-understood penalties; those who stand forth to teach Protestant truth incur an amount of social odium, but they are worthy of all honour.

The great want at the present time is that the teaching agencies of the land should be utilised in their proper and legitimate way to place Reformation principles and Scripture doctrines before the young. The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge are swarming with Jesuits, who are teaching the doctrines of Rome. One of the school inspectors in Wales found during a tour that a very large number of Roman Catholic schools were mainly attended by the children of nominally Protestant parents. Speaking roughly, considerably over half the scholars in various Roman Catholic schools were discovered to be children of such parentage. This is a most glaring evil, and much more widespread than is generally supposed. If there is one service which Protestants can render to the community it is to caution parents, generally of the poorer classes, telling them that they can do their children no greater injury than by sending them to Roman Catholic schools. No doubt, with regard to the subjects generally taught in schools, the children are well and cheaply taught. But mixed up with that teaching there is a certain amount of garbled history and of the dangerous doctrines of the Church of Rome. A computation based on an official return made in 1888 gives the number of children of nominally Protestant parents now receiving education in Roman Catholic schools as amounting to 40,000. What is likely to be the result?

The Poison and the Antidote.

BY REV. G. D. HOOPER.

The first principle we are called upon to consider is the plenary inspiration and sole authority of Holy Scripture. Rome's rule of faith is tradition, supplemented by Scripture, but only as interpreted by the Church, and in harmony with Catholic tradition. The creed of Pope Pius IV., which is her authentic avowal of belief, runs, "I most steadfastly admit and embrace Apostolical and Ecclesiastical Traditions, and all other observances and constitutions of the same Church. I also admit the Holy Scriptures, according to that sense which our Holy Mother the Church has held [and does hold, to which it belongs to judge of the true sense and interpretation of the Scripture]: neither will I ever take and interpret them otherwise than according to the unanimous consent of the Fathers."

Here, we note, tradition holds the first place, not even nominally equal, but virtually and practically superior to Scripture. When Rome can adduce one fact or doctrine needful or helpful to salvation, not recorded in Holy Writ, but handed down by tradition, it will be time to examine the worth of such a fact or doctrine. Meantime we have never heard of such; and the main effect of this part of her rule is to supersede the plain commands of God by the teachings of men. Look at any country really under Papal sway! The Word of God is all but unknown. The priesthood reigns supreme. The Church is exalted, her laws enforced in preference to God's, her coffers filled from her devotees and dupes; but real religion is almost unknown. Spain and Italy both testify to this, as well as many a mission settlement.

Again, the limiting of Scripture to her special interpretation, where, by favour or by force of circumstances, the people are allowed to read it, virtually nullifies its precious truths. Where, in all the words of Christ or his inspired Apostles, can we find trace of any charge only to listen to his teaching filtered through a human or ecclesiastical sieve?

ON ROME'S OWN SHOWING,

she cannot hold one leading truth of revelation: because, first, she has never promulgated her own interpretation of Scripture; and, next, the unanimous consent of the fathers is a sheer ecclesiastical fiction. Father differs from father on every leading point, and there is not a solitary doctrine of moment on which they are unanimous.

"What saith the Scripture?" In testifying of itself and the Saviour it so graciously reveals, has it any voice as to its plenary inspiration and sole sufficiency suited to the training of the young? Emphatically, yes! Continually through its sacred pages run the trumpet tones, "Thus saith the Lord!" To the Old Testament canon extant in Christ's day under Jewish custody our Divine Lord gave the seal of his own approval and reiterated appeal. Be it noted, this was not the Vulgate of Jerome, nor did it include the Apocryphal Books. We prefer the Scriptures sanctioned, used, and hallowed by our Lord to those. The New Testament writers claim to be inspired. They, by the promised Paraclete, take of the things of Christ and reveal them to young and old alike: they speak in language still pregnant with Divine power, and fragrant with the very breath of Heaven. Placed like a fort around the Rock of Ages, to guard his person and his truth, these Scriptures stand four-square in perfect symmetry and completeness, alike forbidding tradition to be added, or rival power to stand beside them: our sole

AUTHORITY IN THE THINGS OF GOD.

Beginning with the Pentateuch, first of the great books of the Old Testament, it is written (Deut. iv. 2): "Ye shall not add to the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it." On through the Word, like a golden thread, runs the same jealousy of its own authority, which is in truth the authority of God Himself. Leaping on to the closing words, as though by prophetic anticipation to guard God's people from one cause of apostasy, we read, "I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book" (Rev. xxii. 18, 19).

Thus are the God of Truth and the Truth of God identified; and these living oracles to Christendom and the world to-day, are what they were to the early Christians of the martyr age, and to our fathers at the Reformation, the unerring, final standard of appeal, the one Divine authority unshaken and undimmed by the lapse of ages or the powers of evil.

The right of private judgment, the next point for consideration, is held, by Protestants at least, to be the inalienable privilege of every man. Without it even the young can never realise their accountability. It were easy to prove that the votaries of Rome or other traditionalists themselves both hold and exercise this right, though denying it in express terms. When passages from Holy Writ are presented to them, whose plain grammatical sense is opposed to such elements of the Romish system as Mariolatry, idolatry, a sacrificing priesthood, and the Mass, &c., it is by the exercise of their personal, i.e., their private judgment, that they refuse the plain statements of Scripture for the tortuous wrestings of their own churches. Every man who thinks and is appealed to does in fact judge. The difference is that Romanists and Ritualists use their judgment in taking one set of interpretations, and hand over reason and conscience alike to a set of their fellow mortals in hope of safety; whereas evangelical Protestants, believing "every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. xiv. 12), desire to know and obey his Word for themselves. Such hold that, even did we hand ourselves over, as our opponents do, to a system or a set of men, if we are thereby lost for ever, they will not, cannot suffer for us.

Seeing that God has given his Word to man, bidden his prophets "Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it" (Hab. ii. 4), and that by this Word we shall be judged in the last day (John xii. 48), it is of supremest moment we should for ourselves individually. Only so are men free to hear the Spirit's voice as He speaks by the Word. Rob us of this right of private judgment, command us to hear the Church, tradition, the christianised conscience of Christendom, or any other abstraction or authority, and the soul's ear is turned from God to listen to another voice. Hence our loyalty to God constrains us in our contention for this right. With it is bound up our whole civil and religious liberty.

The third point, Justification by Faith only, was Luther's test of a standing or a falling Church. It is one of the hall-marks of evangelical Christianity. "Being justified by faith," we are exhorted to have "peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. v. i.). The Epistle to the Romans is the Magna Charta of this doctrine, just as the Epistle of James is the practical commentary on it, never teaching salvation by works, or exalting creature righteousness; but showing that genuine faith has vital force, that it works by love, and bears credentials of its own Divine character by its perennial fruit.

Either Christ is a perfect Saviour, bestowing salvation on the penitent sinner as his own free gift on the basis of his finished sacrificial work—requiring only faith to apprehend and appropriate the blessing—or, if man's work; are required for make-weight or any part of his salvation, Christ is no more the perfect Saviour; salvation ceases to be his free gifts and man would be in part his own redeemer. Earnestly and continuously would we urge good works on those who by faith have received the Saviour and become the sons of God. Of such we read (Eph. ii. 10): "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

If these doctrines on the lips of the Reformers made the Papal fabric tremble to its base aid broad and deep anew the foundations of our Christian liberty, and brought salvation to multitudes trained in Romish darkness and superstition, why has the process ceased so largely, and why do we not see similar causes produce similar effects to-day?

Two things emphatically I would speak of now. (1) The Laodicean spirit of present-day Protestantism, which so largely seeks to "rest and be thankful," which, in the name of charity, would wink at error, which condones the past history and the present absolute apostasy of Rome and its Greek and Anglican imitators, because of zeal, culture, and a show of piety. Protestantism has largely CEASED TO BE AGGRESSIVE.

This is its doom. It is true in the realm of eternal truth, as in the lower plane of daily work: "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty" (Prov. xi. 24). In love for the souls of the perishing, in honour of the Gospel which saves us, and in loyalty to our great King, we must be aggressive—"Earnestly contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints" (Jude 3).

(2) The almost utter neglect of united definite teaching upon the principles of Protestantism. Rightly and most appropriately does this Congress urge "systematic instruction in Reformation principles." While many plans may be suggested, I would name the encouragement of thoroughgoing Protestant literature, vigilance that such works are included in our public libraries, chosen as prizes in our public schools, duly noticed in the press, and wisely recommended in our social life; the drawing up of a list of reliable and accredited books suitable for this purpose, easy of reference for busy ministers and Christian workers; the utilisation of the great Protestant anniversaries for special teaching on the themes involved; so that, though November 5 lose all the glory of its Guys, the solemn and the splendid lessons of the two national deliverances God gave us may be well understood and remembered.

Let the Scripture itself declare God's own estimate of the great ecclesiastical confederacy, whose head resides in Rome, but whose votaries cover the earth. Let it be seen that what men call a Church—the Mother Church, if you will, of Christendom—God calls "the mother of harlots and the abominations of the earth." Show that Rev. xvii. discloses the real character and doom of the whole system. Side by side with this, let us unceasingly exalt Christ the only Saviour, the sinner's Friend, the saint's Delight; and, amid all our outward differences of sect, or name, or worship, show we are the one spiritual Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. Let us who are of the same faith love the same Lord and each other for his sake, not be content with praying and working here together. Let us recognise right loyally and lovingly each other in our several local spheres, and, as far as we legitimately can, prove to a gainsaying world we are one in Christ, and these Christians do love one another. Above all, let us look, not so much to courts and statesmen and Parliaments as to the Court of Heaven, the Holy Spirit, and the Word of God; and so, in humble, prayerful faith, go forth for Christ to work, to witness, and, if need should be, to die.

Importance of Controversial Teaching.

REV. DR. C. H. H. WRIGHT.

It is not enough to teach the truth, and to leave prevalent errors alone, to preach the Gospel and to be silent with respect to all doctrines opposed to that blessed truth. While we have been slumbering, the enemy has been busy sowing tares which are springing up on all sides; and while we have been flattering ourselves that we have been telling "the old, old story," softly, gently, persuasively, again and again, our opponents, while pretending to set forth the same truths, have been administering small doses of poison, until there has been spread among us to an enormous extent a "spirit of slumber" or "of stupor," like that of which St. Paul so bitterly complains.

Against the absurdity of seeking to preach the truth and to avoid controversy, I venture to raise a solemn protest. What is so absurd as to profess to be guided by the Holy Scriptures, and to seek to do the work commanded in Holy Writ in a manner contrary to that taught by Prophets and illustrated by the Psalmists; in a way contrary to the tenor of our Lord's example and to that of the Apostles in their inspired Epistles.

Avoid controversy! Isaiah did not avoid it; Jeremiah constantly made use of it; Ezekiel earnestly recommended it. Which prophet was not in his day and generation a controversialist? The grand old Hebrew prophets, whenever under the influence of the Holy Ghost they opened their lips,

THUNDERED FORTH FIRES OF CONTROVERSY.

The Lord Himself depicts the prophets of old and their work among his people Israel in the terms used in Hosea vi. 5: "I have hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of my mouth."

What grand controversial Epistles are those of St. Paul to the Romans, to the Corinthians, to the Galatians? Indeed, which Epistle of St. Paul does not deal with controversy? What a controversial Epistle is the Epistle to the Hebrews? Most, too, of the other Epistles, whether written by St. Peter, St. James, or St. John, glow, too, with the fires of controversy.

No truth can be taught correctly without contrasting it with the error to which it is opposed. When we teach the unity of the Godhead, we necessarily emphasise the truth that "there are no other gods than He." And if we were living in a land of idolaters, it would be necessary ever to point out the truth that "they be no gods which are made by hands." Our children ought to be taught, not only to repeat by rote their belief in the great doctrine of the Trinity in unity, but to observe how constantly that doctrine is set forth in Scripture. We ought carefully to point out to them that whatever attribute is affirmed of the Father is likewise affirmed of the Son, and also of the Holy Spirit. Our youth ought to be led to understand that the doctrine of the Trinity underlies the whole of the New Testament revelation, and is in full agreement with the statements of the Old. The Divinity of the Lord Jesus is not a doctrine which depends for its support on a few isolated passages in the New Testament, but one which, like a golden thread, runs through every chapter of the same.

But if, in order to teach the young the doctrines laid down in the Creed, which are generally accepted by all Christians, it be necessary in some degree to controvert error, it is specially important at the present crisis to seek to imbue the young with a sound knowledge of the fundamental doctrines of the Reformation. In spite of all that has been written about an advancing infidelity, the more serious struggle for the present is with an advancing Romanism. It may be confessed to be a difficult task to instruct the young how to meet the infidel, but it must not be forgotten that infidelity is like a violent hurricane, fearful while it lasts, and awful in its ravages, but whose strength is quickly overpast; while the errors of Romanism are, on the other hand, more which hangs over a land, and which, though less fatal for the moment, sweeps away more thousands than are ever swept away by the most awful and desolating tempest.

The best preparative, even for the contest with infidelity, is to learn how to prove from the Word of God the great doctrines of the Reformation. If we take our stand on Scripture (which Rome admits to be authoritative), and refuse to enter into discussions as to the opinions of the fathers, it is comparatively easy to prove the falsehood of the doctrines of the Church of Rome. And, when our youths have been duly trained how to wield that "sword of the Spirit," the knowledge and the habit of controversy will, undoubtedly, serve them in good stead upon the more difficult field of conflict.

The question of the present day is, shall we permit our children to be taught, in place of a full and free salvation, grasped hold of by faith in the merits of a Crucified Redeemer, that salvation is to be obtained through the channels of Church ordinances, by means of grace-imparting sacraments administered by the hands of validly consecrated priests?

Shall our children not be trained in Scripture, so as to understand the difference between justification by faith, and justification by faith and works? Are they to be unable to comprehend how St. Paul teaches that the sinner is justified and "accounted righteous before God only by the merits of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by faith, and not for our own works or deservings," and that "good works are the fruits of faith, and follow after justification." They ought to be taught that the doctrines of St. Paul and St. James are really the same. Justification in the sight of God is the glorious theme of the Gospel, so often dwelt upon in the Epistles of St. Paul; justification in the sight of man is that which St. James speaks of, as essential to prove the reality of religion.

Around us on every side are those who are exerting themselves to the uttermost to bring about what they term a "Catholic Revival." Such "revival" is the revival anew of the mediæval sacordotalism. The Lord's Supper has been in many places transformed into the Mass, and "the Sacrifice of the Mass," repudiated by our Reformers, is again offered up on so-called "altars" of the Church of England. These "altars" are duly decked and trimmed for that awful parody of the Last Supper. Numbers of English clergymen now proclaim the blasphemous doctrine that Christ in very deed descends upon these "altars;" that, therefore, due veneration and "reverences" must be made to them as the throne of the Invisible King. These false priests assert that Christ, at their word, descends from above, and that the Blessed One enters corporeally under the roof of each communicant's mouth, to abide for a while (how long they do not like to define) within the bodies of all communicants, good or bad alike.

In the face of such teaching which has already conducted so many to Rome, and will conduct many more to that awful abyss, what are we to do? Are we not bound to teach our children that it is to assert that, before Christ died on the cross, He was eaten and swallowed by his disciples in the upper chamber in Jerusalem? We must put the truth forward in the plainest language, so as to prevent all mistake, and to point out distinctly, the absurdity of the idea that our blessed Lord changed the loaf or loaves, at the close of the Passover Feast, into his own body. It is utterly impossible that our Lord's words, "This is my body," conveyed any such meaning to the disciples. Christ simply pointed to the loaf as a lively picture of Himself as the "bread of life;" to that loaf when broken as depicting his body, which was so soon afterwards to be nailed to the cross. The ruddy wine as "the cup of blessing," was a vivid picture of the blood which had not then been shed, but which was soon to be poured forth around the cross, like the blood of the victims round the Jewish altar in the temple.

Our children must be instructed in controversy, if they are to be "valiant for the truth upon the earth"; if they are to be preserved from the idolatry of worshipping consecrated bread and wine, as if it were the Blessed Christ Himself. They must be trained to discern evil from good if they are to be preserved from the awful denial of "Christ come in the flesh," which St. John so solemnly warns the Church against.

Here, then, is another point on which we must be prepared to defend the faith by a proper knowledge of controversy. It will not do to assert that our Ordinal is unscriptural, and that the Prayer Book must be reformed.

Many young people are now being taught to believe in the power of the priest to forgive sins. It must not be forgotten that words of like import were used by our Lord, when He appeared on the Easter evening for the first time to the Disciples assembled together: "Peace be unto you; as the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and saith unto them, whose soever sins ye forgive, they are forgiven unto them: whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

"RECEIVE YE THE HOLY GHOST:

Our children ought to be able to interpret these words. They were not addressed to the Apostles alone. The Apostles were not then ordained or newly commissioned. Thomas, called Didymus, was not present on that occasion. Several who were not Apostles were in the assembly—Cleophas and his companion were there, who had just returned from their walk to Emmaus, and in all human probability the holy women (last at the cross and first at the tomb), who had been honoured in the morning by the sight of the angel watchers, and of their Risen Lord Himself. That Easter evening meeting is spoken of by three of, the Evangelists —St. Mark mentions only "the eleven" as present. "The eleven" were, in his eyes, the representatives of the whole band of Disciples. Be it remembered that St. John distinctly states that all of the "eleven" were not actually present. The more precise and detailed statement explains the more vague and general.

St. Mark's condensed account of the words spoken on the Easter evening by the Risen Master, gives, as follows, the sum and substance of the commission then bestowed on the Church: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned" (Mark xvi. 15, 16). A similar summary is given in St. Luke's Gospel: "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer and rise again for the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem. Ye are witnesses of these things. And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high." The commission then bestowed was, therefore, one to be witnesses for a Risen Redeemer, crucified on the cross, slain by the combined action of Jew and Gentile, condemned by the one as guilty of treason against the Roman Emperor, by the other as guilty of blasphemy against the God of heaven.

The Son of Man and the Son of God on the very evening of his resurrection published "Peace, peace to those who were far off and to those who were nigh." Like Joseph in Egypt, in making Himself known to his brethren, the Greater than Joseph consoled those who had denied and forsaken Him by the thought that the blood shed on Calvary "spoke better things than that of Abel." And, as Joseph exclaimed to his brethren who had sold him into Egypt, "It was not you that sent me hither, but God," so the second Joseph exclaimed: "Thus it is written that the Christ should suffer."

The whole Church were to be "witnesses;" witnesses to the fact of the Resurrection, witnesses to the exhibition of love manifested thereby. All were to be clothed with power from on high; all its members, not only the Apostles, were then baptized with the Holy Ghost. This is the plain statement of Acts ii., though often strangely misrepresented. The Spirit came down on all gathered in the upper room; the "sons and daughters" streamed forth from that chamber to "prophesy" in the streets of Jerusalem, and to speak in various tongues "the wonderful works of God." Peter, the Apostle of the circumcision (specially honoured to open by his sermon on that day the kingdom of heaven to the wondering crowd) explained the meaning of the strange sight, unfolded the grand commission: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." That commission was shortly afterwards expressed in other words by the same Apostle: "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12.

Such a commission, on such an occasion (after a deed had been done at which the sun withdrew its light), was far grander than those fictitious powers claimed by fictitious priests who, when driven to the last ditch, often affirm that their absolution is conditional, i.e., is an absolution pronounced on condition of true repentance, or, in other words, that they have really no power at all. But if the explanation we have given be correct, why, then, it may be asked, was such phraseology made use of? Why was not the language used in St. Luke and St. Mark retained on the page of St. John? Let it be noted St. John's Gospel reflects the spirit and phraseology of the Hebrew prophets. His Revelation is, as it were, the Christianised edition, enlarged by the Holy Ghost, of Daniel the prophet. Is it surprising, then, that the usage of the Hebrew prophets should be found in his pages; and that the Great Prophet should then give forth his commission to his Church in terms that remind one of the commission given, may we not say by Him also, to Jeremiah as the prophet of the nations, "See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to pluck up and to break down, and to destroy and to overthrow, to build and to plant" (Jer. i. 10).

But as Jeremiah never was a universal emperor, and never sat on a throne, but was more conversant with the interior of a dungeon, so our Blessed Lord never gave to Apostles or to their successors any such power as is vainly dreamed of by Romish priests or their Ritualistic imitators.

At the risk of explaining what is clear by what is confessedly more obscure, I venture to assert that a fitting parallel to the passage we have been considering is to be found in the description given by St. John of the two witnesses, the Jewish and Gentile, who prophesy all along during the dark times of the 1260 mystical days, the half of the great "Seven Times of the Gentiles," which span the period which elapses between the first and the second advent of the Redeemer. Persecuted as they are, by the beast that cometh up out of the abyss, and ultimately slain, like their Lord, those witnesses are represented as breathing forth fire out of their mouths, which devours their enemies, and as having power, like Elijah of old, to shut heaven that it rain not in the days of their prophecy, and to smite the earth with plagues as often as they will (Rev. xi. 4-6).

The passage illustrates the principle that in the Scripture

INSPIRED MEN ARE SAID TO DO that which they only announce. The prophecy has often been fulfilled which was spoken by the Lord to Jeremiah (v. 13): "Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them." And wherever forgiveness of sins is proclaimed through Christ's finished work by the feeblest member of Christ's flock, and accepted by a penitent sinner; wherever the voice of the tiniest child bids a poor dying one "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world," there, if the message be accepted, it is "verily and indeed" true "whose soever sins ye remit they are remitted." But whenever the message of the Word, by whomsoever spoken, be rejected, and the sinner refuses to look unto Christ and be saved, the awful statement is fulfilled: "Whose soever sins ye retain they are retained."

The Inspiration of the Bible.

REV. DR. SINCLAIR PATERSON

affirmed the inspiration and authority of Scripture in a vigorous address. He said: The Reformation began in the study of the Scriptures by Wyclif; Luther came to the light by reading the Bible in the monastery at Erfurt. It is by the maintenance of this light and truth that we shall preserve our Protestantism. Yet thousands of people are doing their utmost to destroy our faith in the Holy Scriptures. The objections are all old; they were all pressed upon attention for a hundred years or more, by infidel writers. The novelty is that they are now put forward by Christian ministers. The serious element in our present experience is, that pulpits placed for the defence of the truth are devoted to teaching us that the Scriptures are not inspired.

We may choose between three authorities in these matters: God in the Word; the Pope in Rome; or ourselves individually. This last authority is in great favour at the present time. I do not believe in the authority of the Pope; his church is corrupt. There are about him certain trained theologians who, after examining a doctrine that has been bandied backward and forward for a hundred years, give a decision and declare the matter De Fide. Formerly it was only an opinion; now it becomes authoritative. They do the thing thoroughly, weighing all things. But here we have all around us little Popes, each speaking from his little knowledge—or misknowledge. I stand on the faith of our fathers, because it has proved itself divine. I admit there are many difficulties in the Bible, but if you look at them carefully, some of them disappear, and others change into evidences. All the difficulties are but trifles, and cannot invalidate the Book; if we knew all the circumstances, our questionings would all be solved.

If the Old Testament were such a jumble as the critics have alleged, how is it that the fact was not found out before? It is said that Scripture is not in accordance with science. I am very glad of that. The science of to-day is not final. Reconcile Sir Charles Lyell's last edition with his first, if you can. The first proved that Darwinism was impossible, because species could not be changed; yet in the last the writer professed himself a convert to Darwinism. I was an evolutionist twenty-five years ago: but the Infinite came to me in the person of Jesus Christ, and found me out. When I read Darwin's "Origin of Species," I gave up evolution.

REV. DR. BULLINGER.

The inspiration of Holy Scripture, therefore its Divine authorship and authority, lies at the very foundation of Christianity—not only in its relation to infidelity, but also in its relation to the Romish controversy. The inspiration of the Scriptures was the one question which underlay all others at the Reformation. For what was the Reformation in its essence? Was it not the abandonment of human authority for Divine authority? The abandonment of "The Church" for the Word of God? Hence we find that the Reformers diligently studied, translated, and established the Scriptures, while the Church of Rome, having for centuries hidden the Word of God, endeavoured to stamp it out, first by the tortures of the Inquisition, then by authorising a Bible of her own, of which it sent forth translations which it called the "antidote" to the "poison" of the versions made by the Reformers. This gave rise to the two great questions of the canon and inspiration of Scripture. The teaching of Luther and Erasmus was met by the Jesuits in 1586, and the dispute which followed was terminated by an Apostolical Brief, dated April 15, 1588, in which Pope Sixtus V. enjoined silence on all parties until the affair should be decided by the Holy See. That is just where the question remains to-day. Rome has never broken the silence. She has claimed to interpret the Scriptures, and would not let the people have them for themselves. She refused to take the Scriptures as final, putting the Pope in that position. She said the Scriptures were incomplete without the traditions, of which the Church was the sole depository. Rome hates the Bible above everything, and there is nothing she fears more. She can burn or print, and alternately condemn or praise, as it suits her purpose.

Coming to the positive aspect of things, Dr. Bullinger declared all theories as to inspiration useless, if not mischievous. There is only one thing necessary for us to know, and that is what God has Himself said on the point. What does the Word claim for itself? From 2 Pet. i. 20, 21, it was shown that no prophecy of Holy Scripture originated of the prophet's own interpretation; and from 2 Tim. iii. 16 that all Scripture has been divinely inspired. Moses wrote "by commandment of the Lord." The spirit of Christ testified in the prophets (1 Pet. i. 11). The New Testament quotations from the Old were shown to be very instructive. In Mark xii. 36, "David said by the Holy Ghost"; in Matt. i. 22, "All this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet"; in Acts iii. 18, "Those things which God before had shown by the mouth of all his prophets"; in 1 Cor. ii. 13 "Words which the Holy Ghost teacheth"; 1 Cor. xiv. 37, "The things that I write are the commandments of the Lord." Other similar quotations were: Matt. xv. 4; Heb. iii. 7, ix. 8, x. 15; Acts i. 16, xxviii. 25; 1 Thess. ii. 13; Heb. i. 1. The inspiration of the Scriptures lies at the root of all true Protestantism. We are witnesses for God and his Word. It has been said that we must have infallibility somewhere, either in the Pope, the Church, or our own reason. We have found it in the Word, and maintain that the Bible, and the Bible alone. is the religion of Protestants.

Justification by Faith.

REV. DR. H. EVANS

read a thoughtful paper on justification by faith. He said: The doctrine of justification by faith, that is, of salvation personally received from God by each sinner individually the moment he believes in Christ, antagonises Romanism at every point over the entire field of theology. It demolishes utterly the impious teaching of salvation by works, and, therefore, is fatal to the pretended virtue of penances, austerities, or other substitutes for God's free gift of pardoning grace. It kills to the very roots the theory of sacramental salvation. For if each sinner for himself may come to Christ and personally receive Him by present faith, as the malefactor on the cross did, then sacramental salvation vanishes into the azure of dried mists; for not upon the substitute, but upon the very Lord Himself, does the sinner rely for salvation, and the attestation of its royal charity in the witness of the Holy Spirit.

The evangelical doctrine of justification completely antagonises the blasphemous pretension that there is on earth a sacrificing priesthood. If faith in the Great Sacrifice offered once for all on Calvary bring instant salvation to every individual believer, then, not only are all other sacrifices unnecessary, they are an imposture and a blasphemy, and those who pretend to offer again the Lord in sacrifice are the worst enemies of the Son of God. For He, after the offering of Himself once for all, for ever sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. The atonement was complete, the reconciliation perfect, therefore at the right hand of God—the seat of all authority, where all the lines of influence converge—there, in virtue of the completeness of his work, He is enthroned God over all blessed for ever. So, again, this doctrine of justification by faith impugns and abolishes the intrusion of other mediators than the one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus. If each one for himself can come and, by faith, lay his hand on the Great Sacrifice, and there realise personal forgiveness and incorporation into God's family, no other mediator is requisite. "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."

WEDNESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 29.

Conventual and Monastic Systems.

Mr. THOMAS DENCE, who presided, remarked that the Church of Christ needs more and more to be stimulated, so as to evangelise the masses; but the Lord's example, and the practice of the early Christians was to go among the people, as dying men to dying men. The work must not be left to ministers or any special class of men, but all believers must do their part to present to the hungering and thirsting multitudes Him who is the food and drink of everlasting life.

REV. J. LAWSON FORSTER, LL.B., read a paper full of hard facts and strong arguments. He said: Remembering the terrible and ghastly revelations that attended the visitation and overthrow of religious houses in England 350 years ago, one might have supposed that the spirit of monasticism was for ever crushed in our country. But, alas! it is not so. After hiding its face in shame and contempt for more than three centuries, the dark spirit is again manifesting itself in our midst, and presenting its claim to a position of prominence and power among our Christian institutions. But the saddest feature connected with the reappearance of this evil is the fact that it is being welcomed by one of the leading champions of Christendom, a consecrated orator, a peerless writer, a man whom we all have learned to love and respect.

It is difficult to deduce from the utterances of their learned and eloquent advocate what these brotherhoods are to be. He tells us what they are not to be. We are told that their "conditions" are not the revival of monasticism. But, surely, to every thoughtful person, the very life and existence of a brotherhood must embrace most of the essential elements of monasticism. A brotherhood, e.g., must have vows—at least those of self-denial and obedience—otherwise it would be as weak and powerless as a rope of sand; its members must be celibates—forbidden to marry—for matrimony would be fatal to the solidarity of such a fraternity; it must have a religious house or monastery, where the brothers would live together, and incite one another to study and good works; it must have a peculiar ecclesiastical garb, in order that its members may be distinguished from ordinary mortals in their life of self-abnegation; it would also need a rigidly prescribed dietary scale, stating what is lawful and what unlawful for fasts and festivals; and, to manage the wayward and weak of such a fraternity, certain rules of government, with "pains, laws, and penalties" attached, would require to be instituted. Now, all these simple essentials of a true brotherhood would cause it to appear, at least to many of us, alarmingly like

A REVIVAL OF MONASTICISM.

Take, e.g., the vow of celibacy, which must of necessity, be taken by every member of such a fraternity. Who can forget the terrible and damning reproach which this vow has always brought upon Christendom ever since it was instituted in the Church. True, not every man is called upon to embrace the marriage state. But, on the other hand, only a very limited number can afford to dispense with its privileges, and its purifying and elevating influences. The general tendency of marriage is to ennoble and refine human nature. "Each creature finds its highest perfection in being blent with another." Matrimony is one of the best remedies that God has provided against selfishness, spiritual conceit, and despondency; and it is an unfailing antidote to the mystical fooleries of a mooning and priestly temperament. A proscription of marriage to qualify man for Christian service is a reflection on this honoured and sacred institution, and is also an insult to the Almighty, who designed and instituted this state as adapted to man's moral and spiritual nature in every age of the world. The sacredness of marriage was never doubted; celibacy was never exalted as a virtue, until the Church had bowed to Paganism, flirted with worldly wealth and power, and had become wedded to mysticism and priestcraft.

Let not the Reformed Churches give place, for a moment, to the idea of an order of enforced celibates. Such an institution would surely become our plague and confusion; and, instead of elevating the masses, would in the end bring the very name of Jesus of Nazareth into reproach and contempt. If we are to have a brotherhood at all, let it be so constituted that every member may carry out the Apostolic injunction, "A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife." With the vow of celibacy, a brotherhood also implies the sacrifice of home and family life on the part of its members. In the past history of these institutions it has always been so. Father, mother, brother, sister—such relationships are scarcely recognised in religious fraternities. But who will say that this is right in the sight of God and not a terrible evil and injustice to its victims? No man with social instincts and a true heart has ever attained to such an exalted state of piety that he can afford to dispense with the good old institution of home, and with the wealth of affection and high moral influence that centre there.

Picture, for a moment, life in one of these religious houses set apart for a brotherhood. How strained! how unnatural! how dispiriting! is existence in such a place. Think of a community of men living together entirely beyond all family influences. Here is no maternal voice to echo through the dim corridors of their cloistered dwelling; no childish prattle to soften and sweeten their distorted existence; and no womanly tenderness and care to brighten and beautify the cold and cheerless surroundings. In such institutions and under such circumstances, with so much of the gentle and tender taken out of life, is it any wonder that the government should often become rigorous even to cruelty; that the devotions should often become strained until they descend to a mere round of formal duties; that sadness and depression should often relapse into sourness and ill-temper; that pleasantry and hilarity should often degenerate into coarseness and obscenity; and that eating and drinking should often descend to gluttony and drunkenness? In such an abnormal mode of existence, the possibilities of evil are immense. Human nature unduly restrained and hampered will often become a very lion in fierceness and a demon in debasement.

THE TENDENCY OF BROTHERHOODS

has always been to spiritual pride and intolerance. No matter how purely established, their influence has always been in this direction. Monks and friars, with the vow upon them, and arrayed in the habiliments of poverty and debasement, have always been noted for their religious intolerance and spiritual conceit. Nor is there any reason to suppose that an Anglican brotherhood of the nineteenth century would be any different. To wear a peculiar garb, coarse and sepulchral in its appearance; to be one of an isolated community, honoured by the patronage of wealth and churchly authority; to pose on the crowded thoroughfares as a brother, a man of extraordinary piety and rigorous self-denial, who has sacrificed home and fortune and all his prospects in life in the cause of Christ and suffering humanity—all this would naturally tend to make a man "proud of his humility," and to lift his head to "thank God that he is not as other men are."

Yes, the tendency of a brotherhood would be to raise up another order of Pharisees. When men forsake the natural channels of life, and in the name of God and his Christ pose as regenerators of society and rectifiers of human ills, and especially if their unique position carries with it the wearing of broad phylacteries, or any other distinguishing mark of religion, there is always a tendency to spiritual pride, and this pious conceit naturally engenders a spirit of intolerance and persecution.

Priestism and uncharitableness have always gone hand in hand. They do so to-day; they will ever do so. An Anglican brotherhood would simply give strength and impetus to these twin evils that have so long plagued the Church and the world. The tendency of brotherhoods has always been to vice and corruption. The truth is that the existence and success of such institutions demand a higher order of manhood than the world possesses. True, there have been many isolated cases of noble manliness, genuine piety, and earnest consecration among the inmates of these institutions; but, alas! we have reason to fear that by far the largest number of monks and friars have been men of dwarfed intellects, indolent habits, and blemished characters.

The history of brotherhoods is "a history of fanaticism, avaricious greed, fierce sensuality, horrible cruelty, wild religious delusions, and the most shameful impositions and deceptions." The eloquent advocate of these institutions tells us, in his speech delivered at the recent Church Congress, that "the brotherhoods of hermits in the third century saved the Church from lethargy"; but he did not tell us how they debased her by their

WILD FANATICISM AND CRUEL INTOLERANCE.

He also tells us that "in the sixth century brotherhoods of Benedictines prevented her from being overwhelmed by the deluge of barbarians"; but he did not tell us that has been a source of hissing and a reproach to Christianity. So utterly debased had they become, even in the early centuries of their history, that bishops were frequently compelled to pray the Pope to dissolve houses of this order in their dioceses. There is a very interesting letter, written in the twelfth century, from Arnulf, Bishop of Lisieux, to Pope Alexander III., asking him to dissolve the Benedictine Abbey of Grestain in that diocese. In this he charges the monks with "lack of charity and hospitality, in that they reserved even the broken scraps from the common table as perquisites for their private friends; that they habitually quarrelled, and wounded one another with knives, being prevented from homicide only by the knife blades having no point; that one monk had actually murdered the cook; that the abbot did not provide for the daily wants of the community, but allowed the monks to roam abroad, picking up food for themselves as best they might; that some of them had caused the death of a sick woman by plunging her into ice-cold water under pretext of working a miraculous cure; that the deputy abbot, when drunk, had wounded two of the monks, who thereupon murdered him; so that the house was practically past reformation, and ought to be dissolved."

SO COMPLETELY DEBASED

had the brotherhoods of England become in the middle of the sixteenth century that no fewer than 616 houses were suppressed, with only very little said in their favour or defence. The French Revolution swept away eight hundred and twenty abbeys of men and two hundred and fifty-five of women, the greater number of which had, by general consent, degenerated into abodes of indolence and vice. In Spain, the very heart of Romanism, brotherhoods were held in such utter contempt at the beginning of the present century, that nine hundred monasteries were closed by law in the year 1835. In Portugal, after having exhausted the patience of the authorities, all such houses were suppressed by law in the year 1834. In Italy, the last nursery of religious fraternities, an Act was passed in the year 1873, suppressing all the monasteries and declaring the houses national property. So entirely beyond all hope of reform had many of these religious houses become that even the Pope, Pius IX., could say but very little against their spoliation. Speaking to an English Roman Catholic bishop on the matter, he said, "It was the devil's work; but the good God will turn it into a blessing, since their destruction was the only reform possible to them."

Surely, with these facts before us, no one will say that brotherhoods are not condemned by the voice of history, and that it would not be the very height of blindness and folly for the Reformed Churches of our country to give place again to such institutions.

We have no warrant from Christ's teachings or from the lives of the early Christians for enforced celibacy or renunciation of home and kindred. Our Saviour did not come to destroy family ties, but to strengthen and brighten them. Our religion consists in the simple devotion of the heart, and this will always inspire and beautify our lives, making us a blessing and an inspiration to others.

The "Religious" Life.

REV. J. B. DALY,

from the United States, spoke from personal knowledge. He said: I was for eighteen years a Roman Catholic priest, for ten years confessor in a convent. I spent a good deal of time inside monasteries, making what are called "retreats." As you know, it is the way of Roman Catholics, priests and laymen alike, to get filled with sin. When the layman can hold no more, he goes to the priest and delivers himself, afterwards going off and filling up again. The priests, when in this condition, go to a monastery, and during the retreat they are supposed to speak to nobody, but to fast and generally mortify the flesh. On one occasion, when thus full of sin, I went to a monastery to undergo expurgation. A big brother showed me into a sitting-room about twelve feet square, on the walls of which were pictures of different saints and all kinds of agonies. In a few moments the Father Superior came, and he was fatter still. These men were "mortifying" themselves, but my observation was that the monks of the house grew very fat on austerity. I told the father that I was going to remain a couple of weeks, and he said, "What will you have to drink,

WHISKY OR BEER?"

I thought that was a singular way of being austere, for the truth is I rather wanted relief from drink. In due course my supper came in, and a very healthy one it was for a man bent upon fasting.

In that building there were some twenty or thirty monks, who had any quantity of the best of food, and their own brewery as well. They never worked; they studied very little; they had four meals a day; and, by way of religious duty, had merely to go to chapel and chant the Breviary. They were living in idleness, doing nothing for mankind and nothing for God; poor people were supporting them the while. They were living a worse than useless life. In the evening the Father Superior said to me: "If you hear any rapping at your door during the night, pay no attention." About midnight there was some violent knocking at the door, and although at first much alarmed, I said nothing. After two or three minutes the noise ceased. Next morning I asked the monks what the noise meant, and I heard that two of the priests were subject to epileptic fits, and were accustomed to go round knocking at the bedroom doors. What was the cause? It was the unnatural life the men were leading—a life contrary to the laws of nature and of Almighty God. I heard men during the night beating themselves across the shoulders with short chains; it was a discipline, and one of them said that they did it "to mortify themselves, and keep down the flesh." Would it not be better for such men to go to work, enter upon family life, and take less beer?

Do any of the immoralities that existed during the Dark Ages exist now? They do. These monks are confessors, and have a church at which they get acquainted with the people. It is frequently the case that they call on individuals in the town, and they are generally very welcome. The priest sits down and drinks; and now and then a scandal arises. The monk is "brother" Somebody, and, as no surname is known, it is not easy to get at him. No sooner, however, is a word of complaint uttered by an injured husband or father than to a distant place. Nothing more is heard of the matter. This is the system which Ritualists view with favour. I hear them talk very little about the cause of Christ, or the souls of the unreached masses. They turn the spiritual kingdom of Christ into a mere machine. Now, as to the convents. For ten years I heard confessions in convents, saying Mass every morning. In one of these there were about twenty sisters—old and young, virgins and widows, good-looking and bad-looking. I found them much like other women, jealous, given to quarrelling, used to falling in love, and so forth. I was there only a few weeks when I found that six of the sisters would not speak to one another. I was called upon to investigate the matter, and found that they had all been professing love for myself, and had fallen out through one declaring that the Father took more notice of her than of the rest, and so on. Now, if I had been a dishonourable man, and without conscience—and while I was a priest I was a gentleman—what villainy could I not have perpetrated? In the Roman Catholic priesthood, where there is one honourable man there are ninety-nine dishonourable, and the reason why immorality is not so widespread to-day as once it was is that a little decency is observed for prudence' sake. The monastic system is the same now as it ever has been; and you will find that as monasteries are established, so rotten ulcers will be multiplied in this country.

REV. LANCELOT HOLLAND

maintained that in opposing the conventual system the Congress was working for God and humanity. The proposed brotherhoods will help the Romeward tendency. They are not only proposed, but already being established in London. During the last fifty years there has been an increase of monastries in our country to the number of 200, and of convents to between 300 and 400.

REV. JAMES NEIL

not only claimed the right of private judgment, but maintained that the right is a positive duty. Rome has given us the Church and tradition in place of the Scriptures; she places the Virgin, the Queen of Heaven and Mother of God, in the place of the Almighty, saying "Ave Maria" a hundred times to "Pater noster" ten. Priests and sacraments have been put in the place of Christ, and the Pope in the place of the Holy Spirit, for he has been made the infallible teacher, and styled "His Holiness."

Rev. Dr. GRATTAN GUINNESS remarked upon the fact that the inmates of these institutions are practically prisoners. Speaking of what he had witnessed in Spain, he said: I have seen monastery after monastery, convent after convent, that have been pulled down by the action of an exasperated Government and people. One of those enormous structures was capable of accommodating some thousands of inmates. In Mexico recently, going over ground where the Inquisition had raged, I saw the bodies of many persons who had been walled up alive in monasteries. Men and women stiffened in death, standing on tip-toe, and in several cases with their mouths opened wide. I shall never forget what I have seen of the cruelties of Rome.

[Reports of the two remaining sessions will be given next week.]

MRS. R. B. LYTH,

South Sea Missionary.

AT the New-street Chapel, York, on September 18, a large company gathered at the funeral of a missionary heroine. Miss Hardy, the sister of the late Rev. Robert Spence Hardy, the well-known Indian missionary, became the wife of Rev. R. B. Lyth, M.R.C S., in 1836. Mr. Lyth was one of the pioneer missionaries of the South Seas, and the first medical missionary sent out by the Wesleyan Missionary Society. At the time of the marriage few would have ventured to prophesy that the cultured and gentle bride would develop the fine qualities which have made her record one of noble daring and wonderful success. She combined the intrepidity of the heroine with the fortitude of the martyr. She shared the perils of her husband on sea and on land, travelling with him in frail canoes and living in the midst of the wildest cannibalism, ever strong in faith, that God would put between them and every danger his own broadest shield.

The first three years of her mission life were spent in Tonga, where she got a correct knowledge of the Tonguese language, which proved of great service to her in other parts of Polynesia. At that time a wave of spiritual power swept over Tonga and thousands were soundly converted to God. One of the first expressions of that new life, was in missionary fervour, and a desire to send the Gospel to the Fijians.

Thus the Fijian Mission commenced as an extension of the Friendly Islands Mission; and Mr. and Mrs. Lyth were sent to Somosomo, always the most trying and difficult station in Fiji. She acquired now a most accurate knowledge of the Fijian language. Dr. Lyth's mission was to care for the bodies of the Fijians, and thus seek to win them for Christ. The sick were brought to him from every quarter. In the house given by the chief as a temporary hospital, patients requiring nursing and careful dieting were under the special care of Mrs. Lyth She modified suffering, and prolonged and saved life by care for the sick, and thus she was ever preaching a gospel which the cannibal could not gainsay or resist. She was also teaching the natives how to nurse the sick, and training them for similar service. Many repeated her lessons, and became skilful nurses.

All the while tribal wars were raging around, and the quiet of the hospital was broken by the cannibal death drum. The bodies were dragged in front of the mission house, to be offered in sacrifice before they were put into the ovens. Yet no word about hardship or sacrifice ever escaped her lips. We have the testimony of another about her patient endurance. Commodore Wilkes, of the United States exploring expedition, visited Somosomo, and he writes of Mrs. Lyth and Mrs. Hunt:—

> There are few situations in which so much physical and moral courage is required as those in which these devoted and pious women are placed; and nothing but a deep sense of duty and a strong determination to perform it could induce civilised persons to subject themselves to the sight of such horrid scenes as they are called upon almost daily to witness. I know no situation so trying as this for ladies to live in, particularly when pleasing and well-informed, as we found at Somosomo.

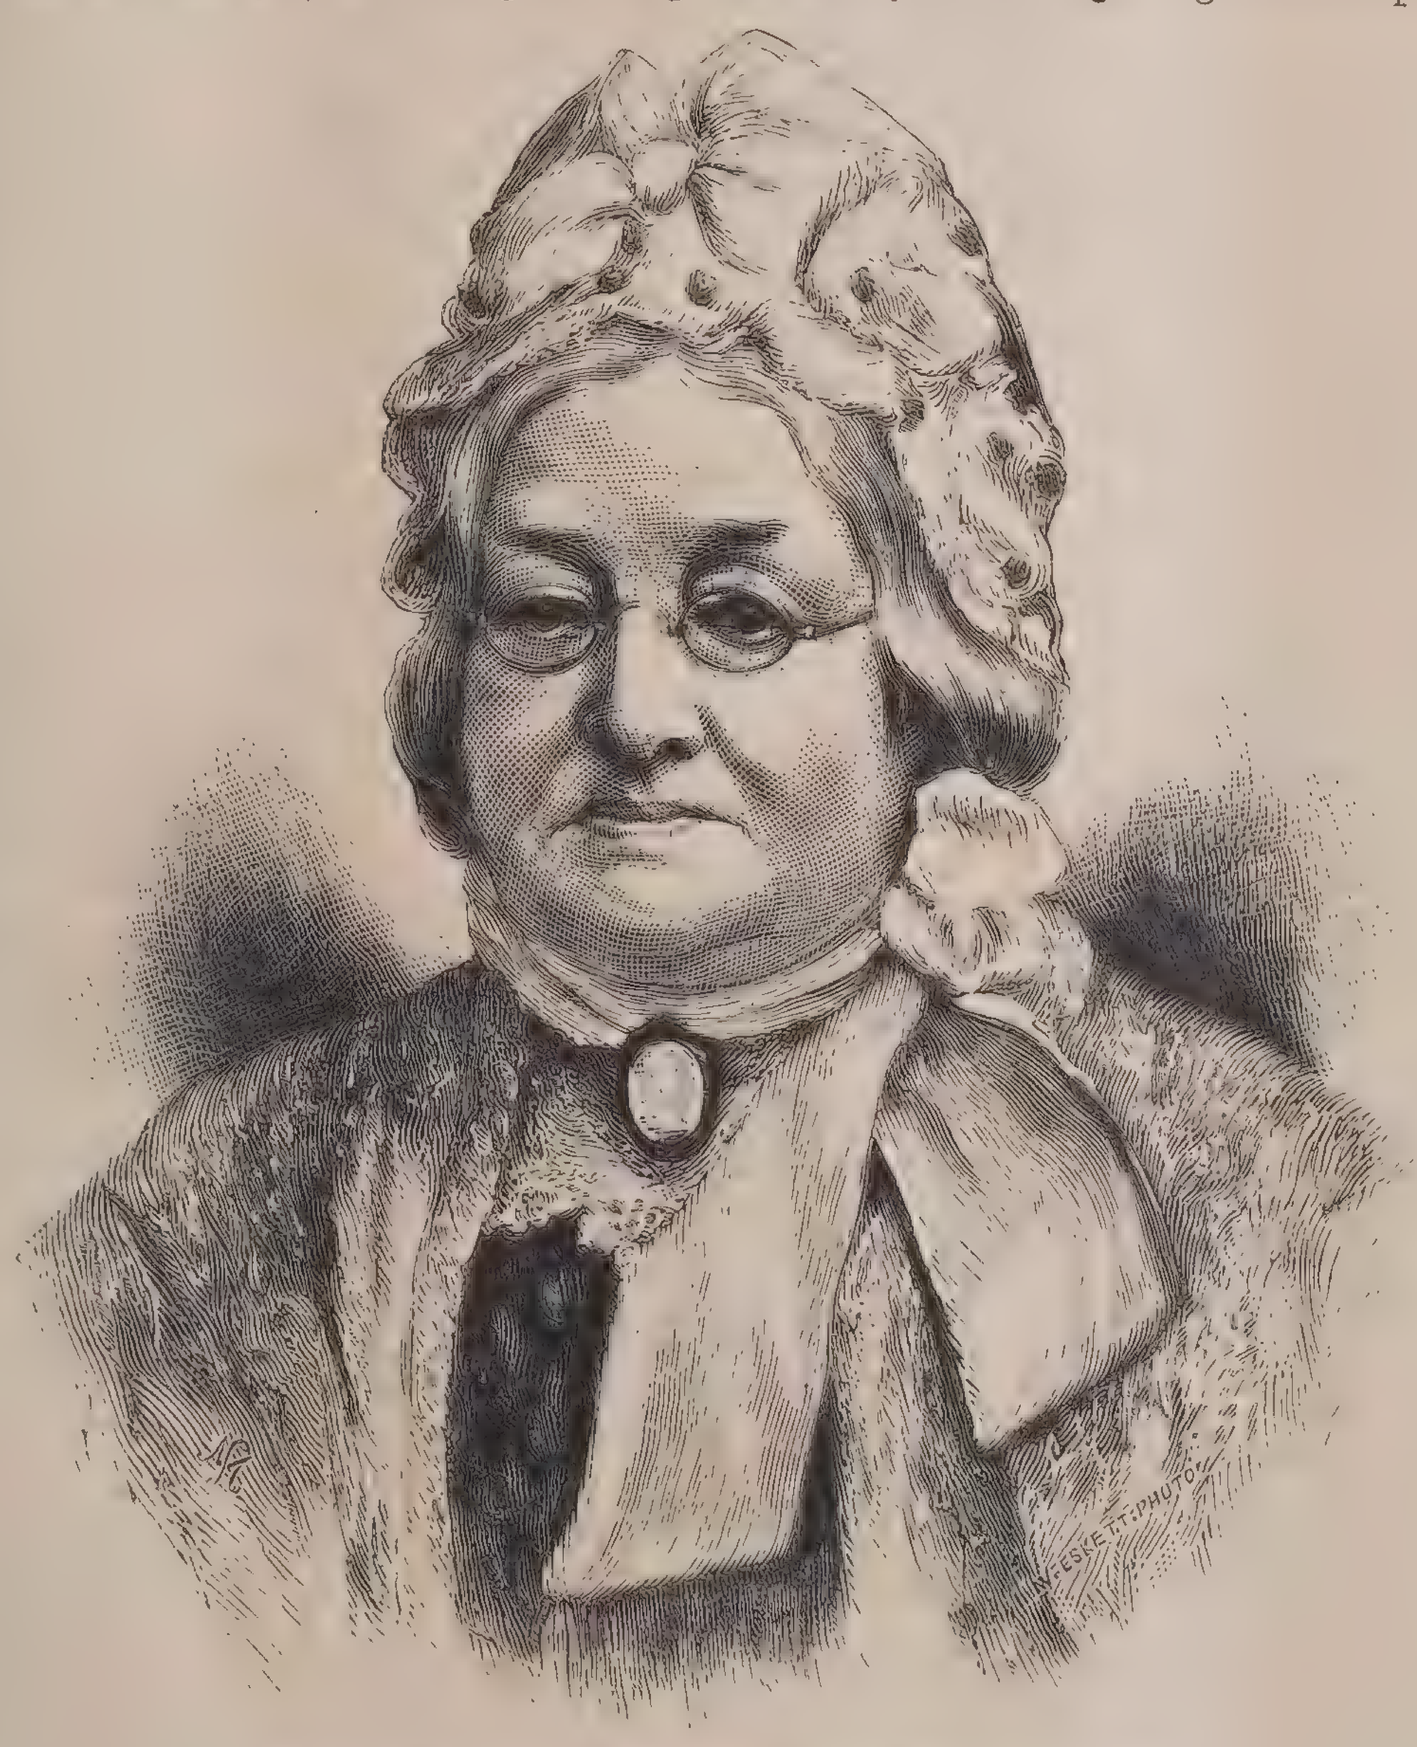
After five years thus spent at Somosomo, Mr. Lyth was removed to Lakemba, where the people had become Christian, and the great demand was for native teachers. The whole circuit was turned into a training institution. Two days per week the local preachers and class leaders came to the Mission station for instruction. After a lesson in theology the outline of a sermon was written on the blackboard and explained, then it was copied, to be preached in all the villages on the following Sunday, by men who had great facility in local illustration, and the burning fervour of first love. But while the men were thus getting help for their work, Mrs. Lyth had their wives in another room, teaching sewing and knitting, and giving a Bible-reading which the women would repeat when they returned to the villages. She was able to do more for the wives of teachers because the nurses trained by herself could do the work of the hospital under her general supervision. The training of native pastors and their wives in this way was a wonderful blessing to the Fijian churches.

Eight years were thus spent in Lakemba, and then Mr. and Mrs. Lyth were appointed to Viwa. Here was the printing press, and Mrs. Lyth was assisting in the translation of the Bible, and she was a cheerful and valuable helper in all literary work, for her knowledge of the language was accurate, and her pen that of a ready writer. It was during her residence at Viwa that what she calls in her journal a "heavier cross than usual" had to be taken up. The story has been often told, and may well be told again:—

> When fourteen women, captured as prisoners of war, were to be killed and offered in sacrifice and then cooked and eaten at a great festival in honour of important visitors at Bau. Mrs. Lyth and Mrs. Calvert, when their husbands were far away on a distant island, went at all hazards to try to rescue the victims. The death drum, the firing of muskets, and the piercing shrieks told that the butchery was already begun when they reached the shore, but they hasted through the crowds of maddened cannibals to the house of the old King Tanoa, the entrance of which was forbidden to all women, excepting those of the household, and with a whale's tooth as an offering in each hand thrust themselves into his awful presence, with their plea for mercy. Their audacity startled the old King, whose hearing was dull, and in their terrible earnestness they raised their voices to plead for the lives of their dark sisters. The old King was overcome, and said: "Those who are dead, are dead, but those who are still alive shall live." Five of the poor women were saved, and blessed them for their work of love. They were only conscious of their peril when they looked back upon it, after the excitement was past.

Captain Erskine, of the Royal Navy, says, on his visit to Viwa and Bau:—

> If anything could have increased our admiration of their heroism it was the unaffected manner in which, when pressed by us to relate the circumstances of their awful visit, they spoke of it as the simple performance of an ordinary duty.



(From a Photograph by Mr. W. Eskett, Photographer, Lendal, York.)

After leaving Fiji, and spending three years in Auckland in charge of the college for missionaries' children, &c., Mr. and Mrs. Lyth were appointed to Gibraltar. She was there, and afterwards at Fulford, York, the friend of the soldier. Everywhere she found some good work for the Master, and consecration to God was written upon all her powers. She died in her eightieth year, and no one ever earned a better right to say:—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Mrs. Hunt and Rev. James Calvert still survive of that band of pioneer missionaries to Fiji. They had a faith that could remove mountains, a love that could endure all things, and a zeal that could pass through fire or water to the place where duty called and the Master waited.

The West London Mission.

THIRD ANNIVERSARY.

IN a circular letter sent to friends with a copy of his new report, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes remarks:—"This Mission was started three years ago, without a building, without a penny, and without a member. This spring we reported 827 members, with 251 on trial. These represent only a minority of the persons who have been brought to Christ by this Mission, which is entirely unsectarian in its spirit and methods, seeks the prosperity of all Churches, and eagerly welcomes the co-operation of all Christians."

The report itself is a well-printed pamphlet of 140 pages, and is packed full in every corner of it with the most delightful recitals of devoted work and of wonderful success. Mr. Price Hughes, in a characteristic introduction, presents a capital microcosm of the whole. Mr. Guy Pearse tells, also, in his unique fashion, something of the Sabbath morning services in St. James's Hall, and of the resultant blessing that God gives him to know about from week to week. A large space is occupied with the reports by Mrs. Price Hughes and the various Sisters, of the work committed to them; while Mr. Josiah Nix has his own marvellous tale to tell. Altogether the book is a record of much attempted and much accomplished for God and man, that makes the Christian heart rejoice, and throws a hopeful light on the pressing social problems of the London of to-day. To every reader we would say, Get this report, and peruse it, by all means, if you would enjoy a genuine treat.

To read a report is one thing, however, be it ever so graphic and inspiring. To hear some of the principal actors in the work tell their own stories out of overflowing hearts is another and a much better thing. And this latter was the privilege of all who could be packed into Princes Hall last Friday afternoon. When the last inch of standing-room had been filled up, there was a crowd left outside lamenting; like the young man of the Gospel, they went away sorrowful, though for a very different reason. It was only by the use of the magic word "press" that the writer got squeezed through the portals after the place had been more than full for half an hour. First there came a short but telling statement from the go-a-head superintendent, Rev. H. PRICE HUGHES. He brought a very pathetic message from his wife, who, unhappily, was confined to a sick-room, and could not be there to speak for herself. Her message was one that would have moved a heart of stone; it embodied a womanly petition that there should be provided for the Mission, without delay, a convenient Shelter into which the workers can take any girl or woman the moment she is willing to leave the paths of open sin and return to a virtuous life. "This is an institution," said Mr. Hughes, on his wife's behalf, "that we have long needed, and which, God helping us, we must have." He went on to tell of the difficulty of getting these unhappy sisters out of the evil current at all if they are allowed to drift back, even for an hour, among their companions, with the certainty that conscience will be drugged and good resolves will disappear. Mr. Hughes made a most impassioned appeal that such a place of refuge should be given them, and it would be quite heart-breaking to think that the appeal should be unheeded or not responded to. It cannot surely be that the enemy of souls may plant as many as he pleases round about this central beating heart of the world's fashion and civilisation, and that not one solitary door of hope shall be provided by Christian London as an attempted antidote to the flaring gin-palaces, the flaunting saloons of vice, and the "devil's mile." Sceptics may well laugh to scorn our smug, self-satisfied Christianity, if we continue to beat an ignominious retreat from the foe after this fashion. Having quoted from the editorial columns of The Echo of the preceding day some unmannerly, and in this instance ludicrously mistaken, comments, as to invoking the aid and countenance of titled persons in Christian work, Mr. Hughes closed his remarks by introducing as president of the enthusiastic gathering.

In the singularly eloquent and thrilling speech that came from the lips and the heart of her ladyship, she certainly justified her position in the chair a thousand times over. It was manifestly by a strong effort that she held back the tide of emotion, as she declared it to be the highest possible honour to take any part, however humble, in the furtherance of such a noble and Godlike work. Mr. Hughes had spoken of the exceeding kindness of Lady Somerset in entertaining at her own country home a number of poor mothers from Soho. As to this, she also asserted that it was to her the greatest possible joy to welcome these dear people under her roof; and if others who had the opportunity would do a like simple act of service, they, too, would be as amply rewarded as she had been. Three years ago, she said, after her first visit to a St. James's Hall service, she felt constrained to seek refuge on a quiet seat in St. James's Park, that she might lift up her heart in thanksgiving to God, because the story of Divine love was being told out in the very throbbing heart of West London, and because that Gospel was also being preached by Christlike lives and by the manifestation of tender sympathy with poor, weary, sin-sick men and women. Most impressively she spoke of the pathetic contrasts of London society—overflowing wealth and sordid, squalid misery. No one could read the report of the West London Mission without feeling that the Gospel that is preached and practised in connection with it is the very Gospel that London needs to-day. Mrs. Hughes' appeal for a Rescue Shelter received a very earnest seconder in her ladyship, as she spoke of the overwhelming sorrow of heart that must come to all who see and understand the condition of our West-end streets.

In a few well-weighed but most hearty sentences, Dr. RIGG repeated former declarations of strong sympathy with this forward movement, and his thankfulness that the West London work was in such capable and appropriate hands. He assured the workers that they would have the undivided support of Wesleyan Methodism. The remainder of this afternoon meeting was taken up by addresses by representative Sisters, descriptive of the work carried on by them on behalf of the poor. All these addresses were full of intense interest and pathos. The facts recited are nearly all contained in the report, but they came with greater force and effect through the lips of the devoted workers. SISTER MARY secured the hushed attention of the audience as she related her trials and triumphs in connection with the girls' club. SISTER ANNIE was equally happy in describing the work of house-to-house visitation round about Cleveland Hall.

SISTER AMELIA achieved a truly remarkable platform feat in her simple but realistic narrative of the manifold work that gathers around the country Convalescent Home at Bisley, Gloucestershire. This is a pet scheme of Mr. Nix, and, like everything he takes in hand, it has prospered marvellously. He is wonderfully fortunate in having such a wise and consecrated worker in charge as Sister Amelia; under her care it seems to be revolutionising the whole aspect of the life of the village, besides being such a great boon to the poor Londoners who are sent down there. Last of all, and certainly not least of all, was SISTER LILY, who has charge of Katherine House. The burden of her tale was one story of visitation, but a more enthralling account of this kind of work was surely never told on a public platform. Who that heard it could not but envy the sanctified skill she brought to bear on her mission to that upper room, where such grand work was done for souls and for eternity? Sister Lily is a very daring young person; for she said, in reply to some criticisms as to the expensiveness of the Sisters' department of the Mission, that, if £500 a year was not too much to pay one West-end minister of the Gospel, she thought that £900 was not extravagant for the sustenance of seventeen Sisters who give their entire lives to the work. We should think not; it seems to us that Sister Lily herself, or, indeed, any one of the Band, would be cheap at the money spent on the whole.

In a closing word Mr. Price Hughes said that all the workers were willing to lay down their lives in this service, and he regarded it as nothing short of scandalous that he should have to spend any time at all in collecting or begging for the necessary funds.

EVENING MEETING.

The evening meeting was held in St. James's Hall, where Mr. F. W. CROSSLEY, of Manchester, presided over an assembly at once large and enthusiastic. So great was the interest in the anniversary that an overflow meeting, also crowded, was held in Princes Hall hard by. The chairman's address was full of sympathy with the work.

Mr. R. W. PERKS made a financial statement as to the progress of the Mission. There has been steady advance, and every department is full of promise. The year was begun with a balance in hand of £600, and ended with a deficiency of £1000. Including expenditure in connection with Cleveland Hall, the outlay during the year was £7500, of which £3200 was raised by friends throughout the country, and £2000 given at the various meetings in the mission-halls. The Sunday congregations amount to nearly 6000, and there are 1000 members and persons on trial. The Mission pays £1550 per annum in rents and taxes, a fact which was mentioned by way of emphasising the great need for halls belonging to the Mission. Every endeavour is put forth to make the various branches of the work self-supporting.

The seal of the Methodist Conference was placed upon the movement by the attendance of Rev. D. J. Waller, Secretary. The President of the Conference, Rev. Dr. Moulton, is a firm friend of the work, and hoped to attend the meeting, but was prevented through illness. He sent his son all the way from Cambridge to communicate his deep regret. Mr. WALLER made an earnest speech, in the course of which he said that the "bitter cry" we have heard in London, Manchester, Liverpool, and elsewhere, has been heard also at New York, Philadelphia, Cincinatti, St. Louis, and very loudly at Chicago. The people of America are looking to us to see how we are going to face the social problem. On no subject was he questioned so much during a recent visit to America as with regard to this forward movement.

Rev. WALFORD GREEN pleaded for such a generous response to the needs of the Mission as will leave the agents at liberty to prosecute their spiritual and benevolent work. A working capital of £10,000 would place the movement on a greatly improved basis.

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES

spoke generally on the work. The reception accorded him as he rose to address the meeting was an eloquent testimony to the high esteem in which he is held. There was great waving of handkerchiefs and renewed cheering. The audience included a large number of those who have, through the Mission, come to know the Saviour, and the hearty reception was nothing short of a manifestation of true Christian affection. At the outset he remarked upon the unsectarian character of the work. Converts are not asked to join in society, and the sisterhood, as well as other branches, includes representatives of various denominations. Proceeding to speak of the work, he declared that it was no exaggeration to describe London as a heathen city. Especially may this be said of West London, where the churches are nearly empty, and the most wealthy people go nowhere. There is quite as much Sabbath desecration in the upper classes as in the lower.

As a result of three years' work the four halls are crowded every Sunday; and sometimes thousands of people are unable to obtain admission. The names and addresses of 500 persons could be given who have been reclaimed from sin and misery. Half the number who have been blessed at the services have joined other churches.

Adverting to the distinctive peculiarities of work, Mr. Hughes said it was a combination of large and small efforts, evangelical and social. Many who have gone into the inquiry-room have found the Saviour, and nothing less than this satisfies the workers. In the back streets, there are all the details of personal work —open-air meetings every day, cultured ladies of the Sisterhood bearing their testimony on a stool opposite the flaring gas-lamps of a gin palace. The most acute forms of pauperism in this great city are to be found almost under the shadows of the palaces of the West-end. The State must interfere to make the social condition of the people consistent with morality. The Sisters do not go to cram religion down the throats of the people, but to help them, and to illustrate the Divine love to them.

At the close of his stirring address, Mr. Hughes entered on the usual appeal for funds, £3000 being needed to pay off old scores and begin the year with, besides an additional £1000 for the much-desired Rescue Shelter work in Piccadilly.

It was stated by Mr. Hughes, at Sunday afternoon's meeting, that £2847 was collected at the anniversary gatherings.

THE "BURIED ALIVE" NUNNERY. — The Governor has decided to confiscate the nunnery of the "Buried Alive," which will hereafter be used for school purposes.

WORK AT BENARES.

SINCE the return of my husband and myself to Benares from England, I have thought that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN might appreciate glimpses of our daily endeavours to lead some of the people of India to Christ. In the zenanas many receive instruction regularly, and about 350 girls are taught in our schools in the city and surrounding villages. We have much to encourage us in our work. Some are, we trust, believers in the Lord Jesus, secret from fear of opposition in their homes. The village people always receive us gladly, and listen with great attention. Several villages are visited regularly by our Bible-women, and we trust that by them the good seed has been sown unto life eternal.

There are many in this city and around it who have never heard of a Saviour, because we have so few here to make Him known. Will those who read this unite with us in earnest prayer that the Lord may send forth more labourers, men and women filled with the Holy Spirit, and with an intense longing for the salvation of the perishing souls around us? Now the special need is for more men. For in Benares, the very stronghold and centre of Hinduism there is a vast amount of work which can be done only by men. I should like to refer also to the many other kinds of mission work at Benares for which more labourers are needed. We want men of culture consecrated to the service of Christ. But to make a deep impression upon the people missionaries full of faith and zeal must carry on the work of evangelisation, train native helpers as well as conduct education, and provide literature.

My husband has charge of a college in which sons of Hindus are taught. He also visits the Sanscrit schools of philosophy and the Hindu monasteries. The monasteries are abodes of ascetics who endeavour to by practising the discipline of their orders. Some of them become famous among Hindus for spiritual wisdom, which attracts many from different parts of India to sit at their feet as they endeavour to throw light upon some of the great problems of existence. Many of these, as spiritual guides, exercise a great influence through Benares upon India. I lately visited one of these monasteries with my husband. The leading devotee and those who were with him gave us a kind reception; and they all listened with great interest to my husband as he told them of the love of Christ.

There are other kinds of work in which my husband is engaged, instructing inquirers in the Christian religion, translating the New Testament and other books into Hindi. Yesterday he had the joy of baptising a very promising convert, a young man about twenty-one years of age. We trust that he will be the means of leading many of his countrymen to the Saviour. Amid some discouragements, we have many tokens of blessing. Our special need is another missionary to help my husband, as, with all his efforts, much that he wishes to do has to be left undone. Will not some of those who lately listened to the earnest appeals at the Keswick Convention, consecrate themselves to the service of our Blessed Lord through the London Missionary Society, that they may help to win this great heathen city to Christ. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few."

AN ACTIVE UNITARIAN CRUSADE is proposed in the larger provincial towns, with the object of presenting to what a prominent Unitarian minister has described as the "unchurched masses" the religious aspects of the Unitarian faith.

DO WHAT YOU CAN!

"Do what you can," tho' the storm-cloud is sweeping
Over the valley, and cresting the hill;
Though o'er the sad earth the rain-drops are weeping,
Some drops of blessing it bears for thee still.

"Do what you can," while the children are learning
Some of life's lessons each day at your knee;
Unto their wants and cries lovingly turning,
The love of "our Father" in you let them see.

"Do what you can," for the shadows will lengthen
(How they were short as we breasted the hill)!
Comfort the weary, the feeble ones strengthen,
For down in life's valley the sun shineth still.

"Do what you can," tho' at times it means bearing
A loss without weeping, and pain without tears;
And sometimes a robe of calm cheerfulness wearing,
While the heart its own garment of mournfulness bear

"Do what you can"—'tis a task to no angel,
Entrusted, to carry the message to man,
Of God's mercy and love, and his own sweet Evangel.
Oh! sent of the Master! Rise! "Do what you can!"

All God's good gifts still to use for the Giver,
More is not given to woman or man—
Daily to labour for God's own for ever;
All that we ask you is, "Do what you can!"

SOLDIERS IN IRELAND.

THE parent Home in Cork becomes increasingly popular amongst our soldiers, many of whom have found it, as they themselves say: "a home in every sense of the word." So well is this Home used by soldiers, sailors, and police, that we find it is absolutely necessary to build an addition. Seeing the necessity that exists one generous friend has already given £500 towards the £850 required.

We have commenced a miniature Home at Ballincollig, co. Cork, where a cavalry regiment is stationed; and we have taken a house in Queenstown, which is now being fitted as a temporary Home to meet the requirements of the men during the winter. There are some 900 soldiers quartered at Queenstown Harbour, besides the bluejackets and marines on board the guardship. It will probably be a year or two before a suitable Home can be built, and we thought that too long to wait without making an effort for the salvation of these men, who at present are literally shut up to public-houses and dens of vice in Queenstown. At the same time we earnestly plead for the £2000 required to build, towards which we already have £700 invested.

In Belfast the new Home is rapidly approaching completion, and we hope early in the New Year to open an Institution there adequate to the needs of the large garrison. Sufficient funds to defray the expense of erecting the building have been realised. There are still the numerous items of finishing and furnishing, estimated at about £1000.

There are many important garrisons in Ireland, consisting mainly of English and Scotch soldiers, still unprovided for, and these men have no place of resort, outside barracks, except public-houses, which abound on every hand. We purpose, as God sends us in funds, to go on establishing Homes in the places where the need is the most presing. Earnestly do we ask help in this effort to save the souls and bodies of these men.

CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION. — In last week's notice, we omitted to state that co-operation is earnestly desired in the effort to supply hospitals. workhouses, infirmaries, tram, and omnibus-men, &c., with the "one letter in the year," which is eagerly expected. Several London institutions are in need of helpers. Invalids' assistance is invited. Miss E. Steele Elliott, 66, Mildmay-park, N., hon. sec., will furnish information.

Artisan Y.M.C.A.'s.

MUCH has recently been written upon the question, "Are Y.M.C.A.'s, as at present carried on, a success?" I have no hesitation in supporting those who give an affirmative answer to the question. But while I do so I submit that at present they only reach a certain class, and therefore their operations are limited. The period has arrived, when the burning question regarding our artisans and labourers ought to be, "How are we to reach the masses of working men, with some antidote sufficiently powerful to undo those evils, which, if not checked, must undermine the very foundation of our national prosperity?" There is but one remedy for the evil; it must be wrought out by individual effort, and not by wholesale reform. I mean, the establishing for each special class of its own Y.M.C.A., where, welded together as brothers, they will become a power for good in reaching those in their own line who have not yet been brought within the pale of Christian life and influence.

I say advisedly, "each special class," for the different social grades will never thoroughly assimilate with those either above or below them, nor is it necessary that they should. When I make this assertion regarding our young men of the artisan class, I speak of what I have proved, having had the privilege of being president of the Tower Hamlets Artisans' Y.M.C.A., Mile End, for many years. I have seen the untold good accomplished by the Association, now numbering over two hundred members, all Christians and all abstainers. They have been considerably censured for making these two qualifications essential for membership; but we have proved the power and the purity that the condition has brought into this community. Quality, not quantity, is the essential element of excellence. Members are being continually added, drunkards are being reclaimed, and atheists converted. The Association publishes every month a most readable and instructive magazine called The Christian Artisan.

Why should not similar institutions for working men be multiplied in every district of every large town? Why should there not be a dockers' Y.M.C.A.? a navvies' Y.M.C.A.? and so on through the many ramifications of labourers existing on all sides. In our part of the Metropolis alone there are some 500,000 men, amongst whom there has as yet been nothing done in this way. Our commercial young men are almost without exception the representatives of the Y.M.C.A. everywhere. Let us strive to get our artisans brought under the tender sway of the Divine Master. It is only a matter of prayer, perseverance, and patience. I would lay this vital question before Christian and philanthropic men of influence and means; that each should promote the establishing of Artisans' Y.M.C. Associations, where they can meet, and strengthen each other against the crying evils of the day, by which young men are everywhere surrounded.

I shall be happy to communicate with any district wishing to commence this good work, and to give all the information in my power.

CANADA AND EMIGRATION.—The Dominion Government has decided upon the means of laying out the special vote of 150,00 dollars passed by Parliament last session for emigration purposes. It is understood that steamship agents will receive a commission for every emigrant booked by them to settle on lands in Manitoba, the North-West Territories, and British Columbia, after proof of settlement, and that a cash bonus will be given to agriculturists or those who take homesteads in the portion of Canada west of Lake Superior.

Alike for the Body and the Soul.

REFERRING to the unceasing efforts made in his Homes to rescue children from dangerous surroundings, Dr. Barnardo writes in "Personal Notes" of Night and Day for November:—

What that work of rescue is, how carried on, in what quarters, by whose hands, and with what results, these pages are intended, in some degree, to exhibit by pen and pencil, thus bringing the supporters of God's work everywhere into personal contact with the poor waifs and strays whom their generous co-operation enables me to deliver from conditions fraught with peril alike to soul and body.

"I first saw Ellen," wrote a lady in Brighton, "on the doorstep of one of our great mansions here. It was about seven o'clock in the evening, just the dinner hour, and there she sat, tired out, overcome by fatigue, asleep, whilst her unsold ware lay scattered at her feet." Then followed the usual touching plea for immediate aid to be extended to this poor child of the streets, a girl of eleven, who, shoeless and stockingless, and in the company of a professional beggar, was assuredly preparing for a similar career herself. "I have kept her myself," said my informant, "for a fortnight, but am so beset by the woman who says she is her aunt, that unless I can get Ellen admitted without delay into some Home, I fear I may not be able to keep her, as the aunt threatens daily to take her off again."

When Ellen came into my hands, I found that, although apparently over 11 years of age, she did not even know the alphabet, and was as dark spiritually and morally as intellectually. Cases like Ellen's, differing, of course, in detail, but as pressingly urgent in character, and revealing, as hers did, the sad story of a miserable childhood, in which there had been neither love nor laughter—only hard work, cold, privation, and fierce temptation—reach me daily from every quarter of the kingdom. And, oh! think of it, and glory in it, and thank God for it, as I do; never once in all our history has such a poor waif been turned empty away.

Speaking of his recent absence, Dr. Barnardo adds: Very gratefully do I desire to acknowledge and thank my readers for the measure of sympathy and support extended to my large family during my prolonged absence in Canada. That family now numbers 3,570 souls, and I am hopefully preparing for the winter's campaign of 1890-91, assured that the pressingly urgent needs of the work I and my colleagues are engaged in, of daily and nightly rescue, and of continuous and patient training of those rescued, will not be lost sight of by the Lord's stewards the wide world over.

THE LORD'S DAY IN FRANCE.

DURING late years an earnest Gospel work has been carried on in France. At her great exhibitions hundreds of thousands of Bibles, Testaments, portions, and well-written publications and tracts have been pressed into circulation, while the McAll Mission, the Paris City Mission, with other organised and unorganised efforts have been made to enrich the people of France, especially of Paris, with the true wisdom. Blessings have followed as blessings always do the reading and teaching from the Holy Scriptures. The French Protestant churches have been strengthened and encouraged to take aggressive action in evangelising effort, while there is an improved state of feeling among the masses as regards religion. Their hostility to the Bible has diminished, and the Sabbath is more highly esteemed. Vast bodies of men employed in the public works and docks have freedom from Sunday labour, while in Paris and other towns an increasing number of commercial houses and shops are closed. This is so far satisfactory, but by the great bulk of the people the day is regarded as one for pleasure, not worship.

In the matter of Sunday races, Englishmen are unhappily to the front; many English horses run, while men of the turf and their followers attend in large numbers. This thoughtless and, in some cases, wilful profanation of the Lord's Day is most damaging to the cause of truth and righteousness in France, and the time has come for a decided resistance of the evil. With this object the committee of the Paris City Mission have resolved to take action as follows:—

To appoint a well-qualified missionary to work in Paris for the Scriptural observance of the day. He will gather round him a staff of devoted men to assist in giving popular lectures upon the subject, and in distributing books, publications, and tracts. He will seek out and embrace every opportunity to resist profanation of the Sabbath, while instructing the people and public bodies in the duty and the wisdom of keeping the Sabbath holy. To meet expenses quite £100 a year is required. The French brethren will, indeed, contribute one-half of the cost, and for the remaining £50 a year an appeal is made to English Christians. As this evangelist will spend much of his time with English Sabbath-breakers, the arrangement is quite equitable. Mr. J. M. Weylland, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's-wood, N.W., Hon. Secretary for England, will gladly give further information.

WILTSHIRE.—At the close of a series of Gospel meetings in a remote Hamlet in Wiltshire, thirty-five individuals, some of whom are 70, 75, 80, and even 85 years of age, were so awakened to a sense of their unsaved state, as to confess it publicly, and willingly gave their names, when told that hundreds of the people of God would pray for their salvation. C. H. W.

CHINESE IN LONDON.—"The number of Chinese," says Mr. George Piercy, "who come annually to London and other British ports is steadily, though not rapidly, increasing. They are also found in a larger number of vessels. During the past year 4691 visits were paid by Chinese to the Mission Rooms (inclusive of a few Japanese), and I may again state that one of the most encouraging points is that the men, in many instances, come to the Mission Rooms as soon as they return. I cannot but feel deeply impressed that this multitude of heathen coming to our shores from year to year deserves much prayerful sympathy and effort to enlighten and save them." Mr. Piercy's address is 276, Burdett-road, E.

A DEATH-BED IN NORTH AFRICA:

A MESSAGE FOR YOU.

"DYING! and she knows not Jesus"—
Lying on her bed of pain;
Only one among the thousands
To whom death cannot be gain!

Gaze upon her as she lies there—
'Tis a woman with a soul,
Which, you say, must live for ever,
While the endless ages roll.

She has passed some forty summers,
Intellect and mind were clear
To have grasped the blessed story
Of the truth to you so dear;

And she might have been forgiven;
'Twas for her as much as you
That the Saviour paid the ransom,
For the "many"—not the few!

But to her the glad news came not;
You had heard it long ago,
And you passed them on to others;
But to others who DID know.

And shall others live in darkness?
Must it still of them be true—
"Dying, and they know not Jesus?"
Stay—the answer is for YOU.

MISSION WORK IN COSTA RICA.

IN May, 1888, the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society sent Rev. J. H. Sobey and his devoted wife to undertake mission work in Costa Rica making Port Simon their headquarters. The population of Costa Rica is probably nearly 300,000, the language Spanish, religion Roman Catholic. There is full religious liberty. The construction of a new railway has brought thousands of English-speaking people here, chiefly from Jamaica, and the United States. These people, nominally Protestant, are for the most part utterly regardless of the claims of God.

Rev. William Head, Baptist minister, who has lately been on a visit to Costa Rica, writes to us:—"The abundant labours of Mr. and Mrs. Sobey have been greatly blessed. In spite of many difficulties, such as the heat of the climate, frequent attacks of fever, and utter indifference, the missionaries have held on their way. A chapel large enough to seat five or six hundred people has just been erected. It cost upwards of 5000 dollars, of which over 4000 had been paid. Other necessary matters will need not less than 1000 dollars more. A mission-house is also urgently required. Conversions take place from time to time, chiefly among Jamaica people; there is also a very gracious work going on among East Indian coolies, twelve of whom have been baptized. The little church now has thirty-five members."

LONDON SANDWICH-MEN.—On Monday week the first of Mr. William Harrison's winter series of meetings for this class was held in Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho. When from two hundred and fifty to three hundred of the men were assembled, Mr. Harrison explained to them the nature of the evening's entertainment. Soon each man was in possession of a mug of tea and two thick slices of bread, with a slice of corned beef sandwiched between them. Tea over, Mr. Harrison questioned his guests as to their business and social life, and it was found that about two-thirds of them attended Sunday-schools in their boyish days; only fifteen had homes of their own, and only ten acknowledged that they had wives and families at home. Mr. John Carter and Mr. W. J. Benham spoke in earnest terms, and were listened to with marked attention. At the close, Mr. Harrison urged upon the young men present to make a fresh start in life—to see if there were no means by which they could become true and happy men. If the way was dark, and their hopes few, they must remember that God was the hearer and answerer of prayer, and, if they were in earnest to do right, God would give them strength to accomplish it.

HOUSE OF REST, FINCHLEY-ROAD.

ON Friday, Miss Mason's new Home at 10, Finchley-road, was publicly dedicated to the service of God, and for the benefit of his workers. Miss Mason's many friends came from far and near, and the large meeting-room was totally inadequate, so that an overflow meeting was held in another part of the house. Thanksgiving was the keynote of the whole proceedings. Dr. J. Monro Gibson presided. Miss Mason made a short statement, in which she gave her reasons for purchasing the new house. The Home for Christian workers when old age or infirmities compel them to retire from the mission field will be attached to the premises. The building of the new wing will be begun in the spring. On the subject of finance Miss Mason said there is now due £1500 to the bank, and she pleaded for assistance to pay this off. The house, it was mentioned, began to fill almost before it could be be got ready.

The chairman, in a warmly appreciative address, pointed out how the House of Rest bore testimony to the faithfulness of God's promises.

He cordially wished for the work increased blessing and prosperity. The two meetings were also addressed by Rev. H. Sharpe (Hampstead), Rev. G. Savage, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. G. L. Dixon, and others.

SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND, PEKING.

DEAR SIR—I regret to have to inform you that this Mission has suffered very seriously by the recent floods, which have wrought such disaster in North China. Within the School for the Blind, Mr. Murray kept anxious watch, his care being divided between his helpless blind charges and his own family—his wife's nervous system having quite broken down under such prolonged tension, following immediately after the birth of her second child.

There was also grave anxiety on account of several Chinese colporteurs who had been sent with a supply of books for sale in the country.

They eventually returned in safety, having however been obliged to abandon their cart. The most extraordinary thing is, that under such very adverse circumstances, and with rain falling incessantly, they should have succeeded in selling nearly a thousand copies of the Holy Scriptures.

Mr. Murray tells how, day by day, as portions of his walls and ceilings fell, he shifted his pupils, their books, and furniture, from one corner to another, covering them up as best he could, but living in the ceaseless expectation of a total crash. One horribly suggestive detail in the story of their miseries was the overflow of the city sewers, which flooded the school, of course totally destroying all the mats, and whatsoever else was reached. The subsequent cleansing of the premises would be no easy work, especially when every neighbour is in the same plight, and it will be marvellous indeed if a renewed epidemic of fever does not ensue.

With all his splendid faculty for accepting all life's trials as blessings in disguise, Mr. Murray confesses that it is not easy to be philosophical when the house is tumbling: "Day and night we are expecting a crash, and our house is like a common sewer." Under these circumstances there is a very special need for immediate aid to enable Mr. Murray to rebuild his schools.

Mr. Murray's honorary treasurer is Mr. James Drummond, chartered accountant, 58, Bath-street, Glasgow.—Faithfully yours,

C. F. GORDON CUMMING.

HOME OF HOPE, GLOUCESTER.—Many of the girls, once destitute, friendless, or fallen, both among those who have left, and those still in the Home, are giving good evidence of the change of heart without which no amended life can really avail. Next to her highest spiritual interests, the main object is to train each girl in the varied details of home life, which every woman ought to know; and testimonies from mistresses and others, show that these efforts are not in vain. The hon. superintendent is Miss E. Sessions.

A WANDERER RESTORED.

THE Thames Church Mission is doing good work amongst the rough men on all kinds of vessels that come up our great river. It can point to numerous instances of men, hard-hearted and degraded by sin, who have been won to the Saviour through the instrumentality of its agents. Many a poor backslider has been restored to happiness and peace. One such instance has lately come under notice. The chaplain at Gravesend several times in the early part of this year came across a very wretched specimen of humanity, a perfect wreck of a man, on board a steamer. He became particularly attracted to him. The man at first was reserved, and would not talk much. His shyness, however, wore off, and he seemed to have something on his mind, but he could not be persuaded to devulge what it was.

For a time he was lost sight of, but in September last he called at the offices of the Mission in New Bridge-street, and represented himself as utterly alone in the world and helpless. He was sent to the Sailors' Home, and in a day or two proceeded to Gravesend, where he sought out the chaplain, and to him unfolded his sad story. Up till October in last year he was a certified minister of the Gospel in the United States, America, but fell from his high position through drink. Disgraced and degraded he ran away and joined a ship, which, however, was burnt at sea. With others he was rescued, and came to England in a cattle-boat. It was then he was first met by the chaplain. Since that time he has been wandering about in a miserable condition, but the hand of God was following him.

For a long time he tried to drown the voice of conscience in drink, but to no purpose, and when last month he was at Gravesend he was in great distress of mind. The chaplain pointed him to several precious promises of Scripture, and together they knelt in prayer. Tears of penitence rolled down his cheek, as like the prodigal of old he poured out his soul in prayer to God. The light streamed into his soul, and there and then he was graciously permitted to know that his sins was forgiven, and that he was restored to the Father. He has since sailed for a British colony, where, it is believed, he will be enabled to make a new start. Many similar cases are recorded in the "log-book" of the Thames Church Mission.

ROMANISM IN THE UNITED STATES.—In response to the query of a correspondent, Rev. C. Chiniquy requests us to state that there are now in the States between 400 and 500 ex-Romish priests, who have left the Church of Rome. But the great majority are infidels; only about seventy-five are professed Christians. He thinks that about 1000 Roman Catholics in Canada and the States have left that Church; 100 young converts are studying for the Protestant pastorate. Mr. Chiniquy has been ill from overwork, but has now completely recovered. He purposes spending the winter in work at Montreal.

PURE LITERATURE FOR NORWAY.—At the Westbourne Baptist Church, Bournemouth, on Thursday, October 30, Mr. Godfrey Hubert, of Christiania, gave an interesting account of the work in which he is engaged in Norway. In order to counteract the influence of infidel and impure literature, and to win men for Christ, he has printed and circulated translations of books by Mr. Spurgeon, Mr. Haslam, Mr. Moody, Mr. Hastings, Mr. Payson Hammond, Mrs. Shipton, and others, with the happiest results. His object in visiting this country now is to obtain help for the prosecution of this excellent work. He is warmly recommended by the leading evangelical Christians of Christiania, and has already been well received in this country. His story is full of interest. We commend him and his work to the practical sympathy of those who are able to help, and shall be glad to hear from any who may desire a visit from him.

REV. JOHN G. PATON'S WORK.

IN a letter dated Moreland Grove, Coburg, Victoria, Australia, August 18, Rev. John G. Paton writes to a friend in Scotland:—

"Let me thank you cordially for the amount you have so kindly sent through my brother in Glasgow, to help in getting eight more missionaries to give the Gospel to 50,000 cannibals yet on the New Hebrides group of the South Sea Islands. The remarkable success that God has given us on the twenty islands we now occupy, and the peace and temporal blessings that follow the teaching of the Gospel on those islands, have led all the remaining heathen to cry for the missionary so as to enjoy such blessings. Erromanga, where five missionaries were murdered and two were feasted on by the savages before they began to receive the Gospel, is now, under God's blessing, a Christian island, and some of the murderers are now working for Jesus.

"We have five islands professedly Christian. A blessed work is going on all round them and on all the islands we now occupy; but on some of them God has given us great success lately. For instance, one missionary who laboured eleven years without a convert, has, during the last ten years, welcomed over 1,600 professed Christians—774 church members, 26 day schools attended by 1,500, and taught by teachers of his own training, who, ten years ago, were cannibals. He has also educated 28 other teachers and evangelists, who are away helping other missionaries.

"Another of our missionaries, in eleven years, has had 1,500 professed converts; and another, in eight years, has had over a thousand, with 62 church members, and an average attendance on Sabbath services of 800. He has 26 schools, and the work is rapidly extending among the 8,000 inhabitants of his island.

"I have just read a letter giving an account of a Kanaka labour vessel, or slaver, at one of our islands, where a man and his wife were willing to go with it, but the captain and agent refused to take them because the mother had a a baby. The father caught it by the legs and dashed its brains out on the rocks; pitching the body away, he said, 'Will you take us now?' This shocking traffic is destroying the population of our islands very rapidly. They are now purchasing all who can be got away as slaves from the chiefs and leading men on heathen islands. By deception they have also lately got away many of our Christian natives, which upsets family relations, and greatly hinders our work. Yet God has blessed the labours of our missionaries wonderfully on that group."

COTTAGE MISSION TO COSTERMONGERS.—Eighteen years seem to have made a wonderful difference in the neighbourhood of Vinegar Ground, City-road, which was once notorious for open, shameless profligacy, and where Mr. Walter Penrose has lived to see his work for God grow from a meeting attended by an audience of two, in a three-roomed cottage, to the varied round of operations carried on through the week in the hall, which is often closely packed, where souls have been saved, and where bodily and mental needs receive kindly care in many ways.

WANTED—A MILLION.—The Charity Record says:—"Without wishing to detract from the value of General Booth's ideas, we would point out that already there are societies existing which deal with most, if not all, of his proposals, and so beneficial has been their work that we should view with alarm any proposal that might injure them. Among the institutions already at work may be cited the St. Giles's Christian Mission, the Homes for Working Boys in London, Mrs. Hilton's Crèche, Dr. Barnardo's Homes, the Boys' Homes, Southwark, the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution, and many others, all of which have long been working in their several spheres for the accomplishment of the object which General Booth has at heart—viz., the social regeneration of men, women and children."

THE KARENS OF BURMAH.

THE Bghai Karen Mission occupies ranges of hills on the east of Toungoo, running north and south. It extends east as far as the Salwen river. On the south it is conterminous with the Paku Mission, and extends north as far as can be worked. The whole country is broken up by high hills, mountains, and intervening ravines. Twelve tribes, besides several clans, have already been brought within the working of the Mission. Each tribe has a dialect of its own, quite distinct from the others, though closely allied, and all are very clearly only dialects of the Sgau Karen language, in which the Bible and other books are printed, and in which instruction is chiefly imparted to the Karens of Burma.

These tribes were continually at war among themselves, on account of inherited blood feuds, and are so now, wherever the Gospel has not reached them. Add to this the fact that their methods of cultivation are the most wasteful known, with only a local market, and we can readily see how slowly they will be able to emerge from their low condition, even under the powerful stimulus of the Gospel. The necessity of recognising, for a season, so many dialects in imparting instruction, the clannishness of the people, hindering co-operative work, and the want of a written language, have been some of the obstructions to be overcome before much advancement could be secured.

Notwithstanding all these hindrances to our work among this people, by the exceeding goodness of God, such that, as we review his dealings with this Mission, our highest praise is called forth in honour of all his mighty deeds. An awful famine lasted for three years, and decimated many of the villages. But this famine proved, in some respects, a friend rather than a foe, and resulted in uniting the two bodies of churches, under the care of the American Baptist Missionary Union.

Meanwhile, the interior work of developing, training, and educating the churches, and the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen, were pushed with increasing vigour, from year to year, as funds allowed, till, to-day, there are over seventy-five churches and stations, numbering 2797 baptized adults in good standing; fifty-six schools with an attendance of over 1200 pupils; and a training school where over 200 pupils are being prepared for teachers and preachers. The churches are well organised and vigorous, and are also associated in two strong associations, with working committees for Association work. In short, no effort has been spared to teach this community of Christians to be self-supporting and self-conducting, and also to become a strong missionary body.

The work of instruction in temperance began twenty years ago, and is still being carried on with increased vigour, and by increasing numbers from year to year. The church members have been total abstainers from the beginning, that is, from intoxicating drinks. In short, every step in the direction of self-help has involved years of patient, persistent teaching. But, as a result, to-day we have a strong band of progressive leaders, some of them men of considerable ability.

Three-fourths of the old churches are now practically self-supporting. Hereafter, all available forces in the Mission will be directed upon the heathen.

We confidently anticipate that the many supporters of the Mission, by whose prayers we have been aided and sustained in the past, will rejoice with us in successes won, and be encouraged to still press on with us to new and greater conquests for Christ in the future.

The railway employés of Burmah are greatly neglected. I have begun a library in Toungoo, but need several hundred more volumes. Old papers are eagerly received as I pass over the line, and the officials have been induced to put up a small building for library purposes.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION.

VALEDICTORY meetings were recently held in connection with the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, at the Town Hall, Kensington, and in the Mildmay Conference Hall, to take leave of ten lady missionaries who are proceeding to various parts of India. The names and destinations are:—Miss Beynon, to Faizabad; Misses Macphun and Gregory, to Patna; Miss Lorbeer, to Ghazipur; Misses Blake and Wright, to Lucknow; Miss Smith, to Allahabad; Miss Sutherland, to Lahore; Misses Trott and Schwarz, to Bombay. At the former meeting Lord Kinnaird presided, and referred to the antidote to fear found in Isa. xliii. We have to do with One to whom difficulties are as nothing.

Rev. A. R. CAVALIER, secretary of the Mission, addressed a few kindly words of counsel to each missionary separately, touching upon the special circumstances of the various fields of labour. Then came brief testimonies from some of the departing ones, speaking of the lights and shades of work already done among Indian women and children by two or three missionaries, who are returning to their work, and of the gladness and intelligent appreciation which have followed patient and long-continued efforts for the good of some few among India's millions. All the addresses breathed spirit of cheerful and humble confidence in God.

Rev. HUBERT BROOKE, addressing the missionaries, said soldiers enrolling for service know that besides grand field-days there will be hard drill, long marches, and terrible warfare; yet they look beyond such things to reward, pension, and rest. Workers for God must not fix their eyes on difficulties, but on the sure rewards, which, in some cases, may be not far off. In the story of the Apostle Paul's missionary life, there are no fewer than three references to the fact that he shed tears. There were tears of personal suffering (Acts xx. 19). Some had the idea that missionary life is all rose-colour and romance; but the romance is not always on the surface. Instead of taking it as a discouragement that we have to weep, we may take it as an encouragement if we are thus called to follow in the great missionary's steps. Then there were Paul's tears from pastoral solicitude for others (31). Let us remember that nothing breaks stubborn hearts like tears. In ver. 37, we find tears of friendly sympathy. Paul was but doing what the Lord did before him. In the garden, our Lord wept from personal suffering; when He sat on the Mount of Olives, He shed tears of pastoral solicitude; and when He stood by the grave of Lazarus, tears were the signs of His sympathy. If we are to abide in Christian work there must be readiness to meet trials.

But Psalm cxxvi. 5, 6, exhibits a jewel for every tear we shed. The word doubtless tells that missionary effort "pays." Why are so few going out to the foreign field. Have we counted the cost in tears, and thought them too costly to pay for the joy? The Apostle says, "Neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy." Having received the good seed, we have become the seed, and the Lord plants us out. May He gave a wide field of labour, the rain of heaven upon the seed, and faith's firm hold upon His own seal of certain result from our labour for Him.

CHINA.—The September Record of the Religious Tract Society gives us a cheering account of the work done in Central China. In 1889 as many as 1,000,000 publications were circulated in this vast and densely populated district.

RUSSIAN JEWS FOR PALESTINE.

Many readers of The Christian have evidently been aroused to sympathy with the sorrows of the Jews who are fleeing from persecution to the land of their fathers.

I have received several interesting letters calling my attention to the letter of "An Eyewitness," which appeared in your issue of the 10th of October. These letters I have regarded as affording tokens of the Lord's guidance. One or two extracts will interest your readers. One friend says:—After mentioning the painful topic—"If you have any thought of taking this matter up, I shall only be too glad to send £20 towards the expenses at once....It would be a grand thing for them to be met on landing by a Christian who would, in the name of Christ, welcome them to the Holy Land, and give practical proof of Christian sympathy."

Another friend writes, suggesting that this "opportunity might be made of grand use for speaking of Christ and giving Testaments. Their exile, and the love thus shown would be such a help to the reception of the message. I should think any of God's people would feel it an honour to help in such a Christlike work; I should be glad to do so, and the right person to carry it out will be forthcoming if we ask the Master's help." Another friend says, "I do hope you have been thinking and arranging some way whereby this still beloved race may be able more peacefully to enter their own land. Excuse my writing; but, should you undertake this work as proposed in The Christian, I shall be glad to contribute £10 yearly towards the expenses thus incurred."

These two promises, of £10 yearly and £20 as a donation, together with the promise of help in the third case, without mentioning the amount, are supplemented by the following sums already received, £10, £5, £1 1s. and 10s.

And now a word as to our plans as the result of much prayer and conference. Our beloved and trustworthy brother, Mr. Baron will, the Lord helping him, undertake this work. He goes out for twelve months, taking his wife with him; and, as Mrs. Baron speaks German, she may render her husband effective help. Mr. Barnett, the beloved fellow labourer of Mr. Baron on many journeys, willingly leaves wife, children, and country for six months to assist in the work. We propose to make Jaffa the base of operations, itinerating occasionally in all directions, as the Lord may open the way. We are taking steps to engage the services of a devoted Spanish-speaking Christian Jew, whom Mr. Baron and Dr. Dixon met on their tour in the East last spring.

Our work will be chiefly itinerant, and to distribute the New Testament Scriptures in various languages and lands; and our brethren will work in brotherly love with all other workers, and will supplement and seek to strengthen the hands of localised Missions. Our brethren will depart with all possible speed, and expect to be ready for starting early in December. We hope to have a special meeting at Mildmay to commend them to the Lord, but this is not yet fixed. For obvious reasons, confirmed by the experience of recent years, Mr. Baron agrees with me that all contributions, both for temporal aid and for spiritual needs, should be sent through the Mission and not to him direct, and I will engage in every detail, as far as possible, to carry out the wishes of the donors. May the Lord guide us in everything!—Faithfully yours,

J. Wilkinson.

MANCHESTER.—Handsome new premises for the Boys' Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester, erected at a cost of £10,000, were opened on Tuesday week by Mrs. H. M. Stanley, who was accompanied by her husband. Three separate and distinct "homes" are combined within its walls, including a training home for intending emigrants to Canada.

WESLEYAN MISSION IN PARIS.

In his recently-published report, Rev. W. Gibson gives many encouraging details of the important work entrusted to him in the gay capital. At the Boulevard des Capucines, he considers they have solved the question, "How can we get hold of the refined and intellectual classes in France?"; and, at the Rue Clairaut, Batignolles, the more difficult problem, "How can we lay hold of the working classes?" At the Boulevard des Capucines, half of the audience, every Sunday night, is swept in from the causeway. Of these, as a rule, half are Roman Catholics and half infidels. St. Denis is the chosen home of Paris ouvriers, and here is one of the most important stations of the Mission. It is said that there are fifteen hundred English-speaking students in the Quartier Latin, mostly sceptics and freethinkers. Here is a wonderful sphere for Christian work, but the difficulty is to find the needed funds.

The last station opened, Rue Clairaut, Batignolles, has become by far the most important post. A service is held every night to meet the counter-attraction of the wine-shop. The Temperance Restaurant is doing great good, bringing the workers into immediate contact with the people; the receipts help towards the cost of the establishment. Altogether, the Mission now has ten stations in or about Paris.

In the Rouen and Elbeuf Circuits, Roman Catholic families attend regularly at the chapel in the Rue Grand Pont, and eagerly drink in the water of life. Throughout the summer, Sunday morning English services were numerously attended by American and British visitors; and at night good old-fashioned services were held among the seamen.

The operations of the Mission are not confined to the city of Paris. Earnest work is sustained at Havre and St. Malo, and Mr. Gibson desires to extend the work commenced at Brussels if the needed monetary help is given. His address is 4, Rue Rocquépine, Paris.

LITERATURE FOR THE CONGO.

Rev. J. L. Forfeit, of the Baptist Mission, Underhill Station, Tunduwa, Congo River, writes:—If any friends in England would kindly send me an occasional parcel of old religious papers, periodicals, and illustrated journals I could make good use of them among the large numbers of English-speaking coloured Christians, employed in the construction of the Congo railway, the starting-point of which is about two miles from this station. Many of these men are members of Sierra Leone Episcopal and Wesleyan Methodist Mission Churches, and they attend our Sunday morning English service, while on Sunday afternoons my colleague (Rev. J. Pinnock) or I visit them at their own quarters at Matadi.

Hundreds of native carriers are constantly on the road between Stanley Pool and the Lower River, and we frequently have large audiences of Congo men at the various riverside trading factories, which are regularly visited from this station on Sundays. On these occasions the natives listen without the least restraint, whereas in other towns, should their chiefs be opposed to "God's Palaver," it is difficult for the missionary to obtain a hearing. The latest reports from the interior are very encouraging. The people, generally, now welcome the missionaries, and beg them to come and settle in their districts.

Parcels addressed to me, care of Mr. E. Bennett, 17, Brunswick-street, Liverpool, will be promptly forwarded to the Congo.

MR. GEORGE SMITH, of Coalville, is still resolved to persevere with the Bill for bringing the 50,000 gipsy and van children under educational influences. He has visited several hundreds of families of gipsies and van-dwellers, and finds among them a general concurrence in the purpose for which he has so long and energetically struggled.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

By a Graduate.

The subject of Rev. H. C. G. Moule's Sunday evening Bible-class is "Christ our High Priest." In the course of his remarks he said that the mind, when deeply conscious of sin craves for a mediator; losing sight of Christ as our summus sacerdos often leads earnest minds to rely on priestly mediation.

The county branch of the C.M.S. has held a meeting of the Gleaners' and other Unions. Speaking on his visit to Tinnevelly, Mr. Barton compared the effects of work out there, as shown in the lives of converts, with the spiritual state of many parishes at home. The people were earnest, and in many cases had contributed from their private means to erect substantial churches.

The new mission buildings of Corpus Christi College Mission were opened by the Bishop of Rochester. A number of members of the College were present.

The Union Society recently discussed the Abolition of Horse Racing in England.

Miss Steel, of Kensington, has generously put £3000 in the hands of the Regius and Ely Professors of Divinity, and Rev. S. S. Lewis, of Corpus, as trustees, for the endowment of Theological Studentships of the annual values of £30, £40, and £50, chiefly with the idea of encouraging and assisting honour-men in reading for Holy Orders after they have taken the B.A. degree. The candidates must be at least twenty-one years of age, and provision is made for parish work on the part of elected students. The students will be under the direction of the Regius Professor of Divinity.

The papers comment on the fact that the University lends itself but little to training men for the ministry, unlike Dublin University. Such institutions as Ridley Hall, and the Clergy Training School, have to fill this want in the University system.

The total number who matriculated in October was 865.

The work of the Railway Mission here, under the leadership of Mrs. Brown, is a most encouraging one. From six the numbers have risen to considerably over 200, and a room in the station has been exchanged for a fine hall. A conference is shortly to be held here by the Mission, and prayer is asked on its behalf.

Archdeacon Farrar, in the course of the University sermon last Sunday, spoke of the benefits England owed to the Reformation, and deplored the efforts now made to depreciate that great movement.

The sermons on behalf of the Universities Mission to Central Africa, were preached last Sunday, in St. Edward's Church.

Some Unitarian sermons and lectures are being delivered here in the Liberal Club Rooms, on Sundays, mixed up with many moral precepts. Great error is being systematically taught.

It is interesting to note that in a motion at the Union Society in favour of the abolition of horse-racing in England, 73 voted with the ayes; the motion only being lost by 4.

Dr. Vance Smith lectured last Sunday on "Creeds in Church and Chapel."

A TOLSTOI COLONY.—A colony of followers of Count Leo Tolstoi has (according to the Berlin correspondent of The Daily Chronicle) been formed at Vishnevolotzki, in the Government of Tver. The colony is composed of ladies and gentlemen of the upper classes, who live as peasants, and put Tolstoi's theories into practice.

MISS ROBINSON'S SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.—The Officers' Houses, Ryland Parade, Portsmouth, is intended to serve as an adjunct to the work carried on by Miss Robinson and her devoted helpers, affording comfortable accommodation on moderate terms to officers and their families, especially during the trooping season. It is also useful as a private boarding establishment for ladies and gentlemen desirous of seeing or assisting in the work. The House is entirely self-supporting, and not in any way dependent on funds subscribed for the Soldiers' Institute. Captain and Mrs. Mitchell, from Sandown, have undertaken the superintendence, and it is hoped that great blessing will attend their efforts for the comfort and well-being of visitors.

MR. LETHABY'S FAREWELL.

Last week there was a service at Christ Church, Lambeth, to bid farewell to Mr. Lethaby, who started on the following Wednesday to resume his arduous work in Moab. Mr. Lethaby asked prayer that the Holy Spirit might bless the labour of himself, his wife, and Miss Arnold, at Kerak, especially the work among the children. These earnest friends are working in a region where, without human protection or weapons of any sort, they are constantly exposed to robbery and violence, in a land where there is no legal restraint.

Illustrative of the peril to which they are exposed, he narrated what occurred only a few months ago, in his last journey from Kerak on his way to England. He engaged the owner of a donkey to convey him to the Jordan. Illness, with long and rough riding, overpowered him. He could no longer keep his seat, and lay down exhausted on the road. His guide, with professions of sorrow, said he must go back with his donkey lest robbers should seize it. So Mr. Lethaby was left to die. Soon the guide returned in distress, saying the robbers had seized the donkey. Presently the robbers came round with looks of ferocity. Mr. Lethaby examined their features; then accosting a man who seemed most open to influence, he said, "Come to me," and held out his hand, which the robber took in his. "What is your name?" "Hassan!" Holding his hand firmly, and looking him straight in the face, Mr. Lethaby said, "Hassan! I have spent a long time in Kerak giving medicine to your people, and they have often said, 'Allah will reward you.' Now, Hassan, be my friend, and Allah will reward you. Will you be my friend?" The man's expression changed, as he said, "I will." Against the remonstrances of his comrades, he mounted Mr. Lethaby on the donkey, and conveyed him safely to his destination.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Newman Hall, the pastor, who had met Mr. Lethaby in Jerusalem, and often accompanied him in his walks, distributing the Scriptures to Russian pilgrims. At the close, contributions were offered towards the expenses of the Mission, for which help is much needed.

Dear Sir,—Your columns have been so kindly opened to the workers in Moab, and so useful, that you will perhaps allow me a few lines to thank Christian friends for the kindness shown during the last few weeks by hundreds to whom I was personally a stranger. During that time it has been my privilege to address scores of meetings, and other assemblies, and I can never forget the prayers that have been offered, the gracious influence which has been felt, and the discovering of the old fact that the real burden-bearers of Moab are the Lord's remembrancers, who, in out-of-the-way corners of England, Scotland, and Ireland, have been "crying out for Kir-heres."

I write, within two hours of my departure, to say that I return single-handed to the field. Though half-a-dozen offers of service have been tendered, those who only seemed qualified for the work at this time have withdrawn, at parental and family solicitation. Well, the Lord knows that for a longer time apparently two women and one man have to attend to the bodily, mental, and spiritual needs of scores of thousands of those who are made in His image, redeemed by Christ's blood, equally with ourselves; and, if we are faithful, He will give strength, grace, and guidance.

Again, then, my principal petition is for the supplications of my Christian readers, that the Holy Spirit may ever inspire and accompany every effort, and make it effectual to the conversion of souls; especially that our Bedouin boys and girls may in yet greater numbers be made "wise unto salvation" and a blessing to their own people; and, as seems most important, that the cruel, lawless conduct of Turks and Ishmaelites may so cease, and such protection be vouchsafed, that the way may be open for myself or others to go on to those Arabian fields which are not so much "white unto the harvest" as ripe and brown with the dust of many centuries, during which immortal souls have been forgotten by the labourers of the Lord of the harvest. Oh, that even now the disciples might "lift up their eyes!"

Yours, for Christ and his kingdom,

William Lethaby.

London, October 29.

[Letters or help to Mr. Lethaby may be addressed, care of Rev. George Piercy, 276, Burdett-road, London, E.]

PASTOR ARCHIBALD BROWN, 22, Bow-road, E., writes to us:—"This year has been one of prolonged trial to faith. As I will not on any account go into debt, I shall be compelled to close some branches of the work unless the Lord send deliverance. I leave that with Him."

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.—Miss Steer held her annual meeting last week. Her report was of unusual interest. We regret that we are obliged to postpone fuller notice of it. Meanwhile, we trust the same warm spirit of appreciation exhibited at the meeting is felt by those who were not present.

PORT SAID.—Our Bible work at this port, among men of all nations, is going on very encouragingly; 669 copies of God's Word were sold in one month, in more than twenty languages. We also sold over eighty Arabic and Turkish Gospels to pilgrims going to Mecca, this year.

W. H. Taylor.

CHILDREN IN TRAVELLING SHOWS.—At the Ripley Petty Sessions, Derbyshire, two travelling showmen were fined small sums under the Act of last year for employing young children in performances without magistrates' certificates. The inspector of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children said he intended to go round to local shows and bring all such cases before the magistrates.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.—During the past eight days a Gospel mission has been held here, conducted by Mrs. Dawson, a converted gipsy, whom the Lord uses in a most remarkable manner to bring souls to Him; though, as she says herself, she has not received one days' schooling in her life, night after night the audience has been held spell-bound by her simple eloquence. God has worked through her in a most marked manner during this mission. Every night souls have been brought to the feet of Jesus. To the Christians it has been a glad time of refreshing from the Lord. Mrs. Dawson goes to Thornton Heath for another mission during the coming week. E.S.M.

SNOWDROP BANDS.—Dear Sir,—Just now, when Factory Clubs, Girls' Evening Homes, &c., are reopening for the winter, they may be glad to learn that this movement is found very helpful by an increasing number of those who feel the importance of awakening in our young girls a higher ideal of life and conduct, a love of goodness and purity which may be their defence in a world of peril. In Birmingham alone there are fourteen Snowdrop Bands, and many others in London and different parts of the country. We have found that many Sunday-school teachers, Bible class leaders, and others, feel the need of definite speech to their girls on the subjects of modesty, the influence of woman, the difference between true love and false, &c., but hardly know how to begin. To such the Snowdrop card is a real help, as it furnishes a text for the speaker, and a continual reminder to the members. I shall be glad to supply by post any information desired.

Southwold, Sheffield. Amy Watson.

THE ABORIGINES PROTECTION SOCIETY has addressed a letter to Lord Knutsford, Secretary of State for the Colonies, with reference to the treatment to which a large number of coloured natives of Cape Colony are exposed in Johannesberg and other portions of the South African Republic. These natives have in the colony enjoyed all the rights and liberties of British subjects, and have there held respectable and honourable positions as members of Christian churches, and in the exercise of their various trades and callings. By the authorities of the South African Republic, however, they are subjected to the severe restrictions of the native pass law, and are in every way regarded as Kaffirs, to whom the privileges of freemen are denied.

Letters to the Editor.

SUCCESS IN MISSION WORK.

Dear Sir,—May I, from the mission field, send a word of very real thanks to your correspondent, Mr. Harden, for his letter in your issue of August 22, under the heading "What constitutes Success?" The letter was shown me by a brother missionary with the remark that it took just that point of view which the spirit of the age is most apt to ignore.

"Quick returns" may formulate the lawful ambition of the supporters of foreign mission work, as it does that of the commerce of these days. But we cannot too sufficiently beware of allowing a material commercial spirit to invade the mission field. Especially would I thank your correspondent for that sentence of his: "Who can tell the burden of temptation, fear, and despondency laid upon the faithful and trembling workers in a lonely land by the unauthorised clamour for results?"

It is only after some years of work in heathen lands that it is possible to realise all the meaning of that "gross darkness" which is said to cover the peoples (in Isa. lx.), to conceive the spiritual death which from century to century has reigned supreme in village upon village, city after city, province beyond province.

I am sure that a clearer perception of the extent and character of the gross darkness of heathenism, a more humble thankfulness for the wonders already wrought, and a deeper abasement before the Lord, personally, and on account of the Church's pitiful neglect of his last command, will most effectually quench that spirit which would demand the opening of the windows of heaven in return for a five-shilling subscription, and which forgets the entreaty of the Master to prove Him by bringing all the tithes into the storehouse.

But I find no room for any desponding view of missionary work. The Lord has most graciously encouraged us here by much evident result, and I know that He is teaching both his missionary servants and his home disciples more and more of the blessedness of yielding Him all his due. Therefore, I know that the day is drawing nearer when He shall see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied. We seek personal success only in so far as it is bound up in his. We ask for results solely in so far as they form part of that sweet ending of his toil.—Yours truly,

A. J. Shields, C.M.S.

Godda, Bhagulpur, Santalia.

In a communication on this subject, Rev. Daniel Jones, of the Baptist Mission, Agra, India, says:—

There is such a rage for baptism nowadays that one is reminded of the days of Francis Xavier, who, in his zeal to make converts, it is said, sprinkled them with holy water as he passed through the streets. There is too much pressure brought to bear upon workers in the mission field by subscribers at home, who are not satisfied unless they have "good returns," although we know for a fact of some of these "good returns" only ending in disaster. What a stir there was some few years ago, when hundreds of a certain tribe were baptized. Where are they to-day? Echo answers, Where?

I am glad and thankful to know that all do not think alike at home. As one face to face with the enemy, in the thick of the fight, in the midst of bitter hostility to the Christ, I would thank those brethren who have lately written to The Christian words that have come like a refreshing shower. It is all very well when you can go on rejoicing over so many baptisms, &c., but there are others equally conscientious, and, it may be, doing more of real, intelligible preaching of the Word, who cannot baptize in this way, and rather thank God, when they see so much made of baptism, that they were not sent to baptize. David was not recommended for his counting of the people, and there will no doubt be many found from India whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life never known to the missionary. This is not mere imagination. Then there can be no doubt that some peoples are more ready to receive the Word than are others. There are different kinds of soil, and God's purpose will yet be made known in this matter

Surely it becomes us all as workers to be more and more concerned about doing the will of our Father in heaven. If that means that we shall be ployed in bringing men to Christ, and that we ll know it to be so, then we shall rejoice and glad; and if we know it not, let us still "rejoice the Lord."

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

SIR,—In your issue of 24th ult., I asked whether r. Meyer's pen had slipped, or whether he was rning High Churchward, when he asserted that was "especially in the Lord's Supper that the ner life becomes replenished and fulfilled with s grace and heavenly benediction." I also ked on what authority such doctrine rested.

Mr. Meyer answers that so far from his pen ving slipped, he is thankful that his statement s been brought into fuller relief, and will there- attract greater notice. He does not give any thority for the doctrine, beyond saying that his ords were suggested by a passage in the Com- union Service of the Church of England, and ly reaffirms the position taken as one of his most cherished convictions."

I submit that higher authority than the Church f England Communion Service or Mr. Meyer's nvictions is needed here. The question is, What saith the Scripture? "To the law and to the stimony." Mr. Meyer puts on one side, as of no alue, the fact of the entire omission of all refer- hce to the Lord's Supper in twenty out of the wenty-one Epistles of the New Testament, and the urther fact that in the only one which deals with it, is not described as an "especial means of re- lenishing the inner life"; and he deprecates any rgument with regard to the relative importance of octrine being drawn from its frequent mention r otherwise. Herein he differs widely from the Apostle Peter, who, when proclaiming the Lord's eturn, reminds us that "his beloved brother, Paul," had spoken of those things "in all his Epistles." I think I am not wrong in believing hat Mr. Meyer himself has adduced the frequent nention of the second coming of Christ, and of such doctrine as justification by faith, as no mean evidence of the importance they assumed in the mind of the Holy Ghost.

But Mr. Meyer now goes far beyond his original statement. He asserts that "in obedience to the solemn and blessed rite" of the Lord's Supper, "the material act and the spiritual blessing are synchronous and simultaneous." [The italics are mine.] Does our good brother realise the meaning and effect of these words? Short of transubstantiation, he con- cedes in them all, or almost all, that the most advanced Sacramentarian demands. I assume that he pre-supposes faith in the recipient; his immedi- ately preceding words no doubt imply this. But his expression is surely most dangerous. Why, not even the sentence in the Communion Service to which he appeals goes so far as this; for it is some time after the "material act" of partaking that the prayer is offered that "we may be fulfilled with his grace," &c. Even there it is not regarded as "synchronous and simultaneous," but as a sub- sequent blessing still sought.

The statements made are, it seems to me, open to serious misconstruction, and, coming from one whose utterances have deservedly both great weight and wide circulation, they require, I submit, the clearest support from the sole authority of Scrip- ture. In these days, when Sacramentarian error is spreading everywhere — when multitudes are taught that in one Sacrament "the material act and the spiritual blessing" are so simultaneous that the baptized are "regenerated," and that in the other, the life thus imparted is "replenished and fulfilled with grace"—it is of the last import- ance that from men like Mr. Meyer no "uncertain sound" should proceed.

In his recommendation of weekly communion, and in his belief in the deep meaning of the Lord's Supper, most evangelical Christians will, I take it, agree. But as all readers of THE CHRISTIAN, in which his original statement was made, may not see the November number of The Christian Treasury, to which Mr. Meyer refers for a fuller enunciation of his views, I venture to ask once more that he will give us Scriptural authority for what he has advanced. Let me assure him at the same time that I have written this in no spirit of captious criticism. I have the deepest regard for our beloved brother, and am most grateful to God for what He has used him to teach by lip and pen; and it is only as one jealous for the truth that I have called attention to what I cannot but regard as open to grave misconstruc- tion.

INQUIRER.

MR. MEYER'S REPLY.

SIR,—I wish first to thank you for your courtesy in giving me an opportunity for answering the criticisms of "Inquirer" in the issue in which they appear.

Your correspondent would dilute the importance to be attached to the Lord's Supper, because it is not referred to in twenty out of the twenty-one Epistles. In reply, I submit that this is no true standard of computation; in this case it is utterly fallacious.

No number of references on the inspired page could invest with deeper and more precious im- portance an ordinance which was solemnly insti- tuted to perpetuate the memory of love even to death; the institution of which occupies so im- portant a position in each of the Gospels; the order for which was communicated by a special revelation to the Apostle Paul; and the often observance of which seems to be taken for granted in the very words of institution (1 Cor. xi. 25, 26).

"Inquirer" also finds serious fault with me for holding that the material act and the spiritual blessing are synchronous and simultaneous. But then he forgets the way in which I guard myself. I could not say more distinctly that there is no spiritual gift conveyed through the material elements; but that when we obey Christ in par- taking of them, and appropriate them as the sign and seal of his covenant, He draws near, and gives fresh and living pledges of his love and faithful- ness.

My friend asks for Scripture proofs of this: I give three. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me...and I will love him and manifest Myself to him" (John xiv. 21). "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you" (Jas. iv. 8). "He was known of them in the break- ing of bread" (Luke xxiv. 35).

It surely would be a marvel if, simultaneously with the material act, accompanied by such deep and blessed spiritual dispositions as I have indi- cated, the blessed Lord did not draw specially near the soul. And just as the bread and wine excite by their visible impressions a keener realisation of the mighty mysteries they set forth, and a more ardent appetite for the spiritual realities they symbolise, so, in proportion to the eagerness of our desires, will surely be the Lord's communications of grace and heavenly benediction.

I am at a loss to see what evil can accrue in holding that the Lord's blessing is simultaneous with the outward act, when that act is the ex- pression of faith and love and devotion. "Whilst they are yet speaking, I will hear." Surely it would be a greater evil to hold that his gifts lagged hours behind our desire for them. There is a vast difference between this and Sacramentar- ianism, which does not demand that the spiritual disposition should accompany the material act, but teaches that the rite itself is the channel of spiritual grace—a position which differs by a whole heaven from the one I have propounded.—Yours truly,

F. B. MEYER.

"RUSSIA AS PERSECUTOR."

DEAR SIR,—While all must feel profound sym- pathy with the Jewish and other victims of Russian oppression, it is satisfactory to know that the words marked on the face of the lad named Rutenberg, (referred to in your issue of last week), with lunar caustic (nitrate of silver) will peel off in the course of a short time, leaving little or no trace.—Faithfully yours,

Hastings, Nov. 3. G. A. KEYWORTH, F.C.S.

We have also received letters to a similar effect from Mr. G. Lindsay Johnson, M.A., F.R.C.S., and from F.R.C.S., Brighton.

BLESSING IN WORK.

DEAR SIR,—In answer to the letter in your number of Oct. 1, respecting "blessing in work," it is the experience of some that God does give a blessing where the Christian worker is conscious only of failure and defeat. I can recal instances where believers had sown the precious seed of the Word, but were thoroughly humbled and dis- heartened, ready to cry, "How long wilt Thou forget me, O Lord," because there seemed no blessing on their labours. Yet God was blessing them, and the soul over which they yearned was able to rejoice their hearts with the tidings of having passed from death into life. Hindrances, however, may arise from want of faith in both teacher and hearer. We may often doubt the efficacy of our own words, but the incorruptible seed of the Word of God "liveth and abideth for ever," and believers being commanded to "show forth his salvation from day to day," and "declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people," may rest assured that if in the path of unhesitating obedience and self-surrender they do this, God will give the increase.—Yours,

Wetherby. M. T.

THE CONTRAST.

"Hold thy tongue: for we may not make mention of the name of the LORD."—AMOS vi. 10.

"They that feared the LORD spake often one to another."—MAL. iii. 16.

YES! evil progresses, and love waxes cold;
And e'en in this world of wondrous designs,
He who made and upholds is, just like of old,
Neglected, rejected, by too clever minds.
So, speak of the earth, or speak of the sky,
But, hush! not a word of the Maker on high.

Not so the wise servants, who, faithful and true,
Are waiting, expecting to welcome their King;
Be they the many, or be they the few,
They learn by the Spirit his glories to sing.
Let love but be glowing, and words flow apace,
As they talk of the Giver of hope and of grace.

So dark gropes the world in its intellect's pride,
The compass is lost, and sad havoc abounds;
See error abounding, no pilot to guide,
Till fair barks and grand are stranded around.
Alas! for the man whose sheet-anchor is gone,
Alas! for the heart which must drift on alone.

Not so the loved children, forgiven and taught.
With the law in their hearts, they steer on aright
The storm that might sink them, no mischief has wrought,
They look out of weakness for heavenly might.
All joy to the man who can breast a wild sea,
All loving the converse of rescued and free.

THE CITY MISSION.—Mr. T. J. Jackson's thirteenth anniversary of the Clapham Branch meetings was recently held in the Mission Room, Lillieshall-road. Many stood up and testified to personal benefit from this good work. A larger room is much needed for the district.

CITY WORKWOMEN.—Mrs. Fisher writes:—"Whilst the echoes of the words of Dr. Thain David- son are ringing in our ears, showing up the horrors of 'the deleterious literature' of our day, our desires are intensified that we should be able to redouble our efforts in providing our young women not only with Bibles, but pure, good books, on a much larger scale. We had in the early days of our work three Bible-women regularly employed five days in the week in visiting warehouses in taking subscriptions for Bibles and books. We have now only one Bible-woman fully at work. I believe there are many who would help us if they only knew our need. Ladies are greatly needed for short dinner and tea hour services once a-week." Mrs. Fisher may be addressed, care of hall-keeper, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

MORMONS AND POLYGAMY.—The recent decree against polygamy in Utah has given rise to hopes which may not yet be realised. Dr. Samuel Small, president of Ogden University, in the course of an interview, on October 29, said:—"It is not wise to place confidence in the recent circu- lar of President Woodruff, forbidding polygamy, as he is only the puppet of shrewd and unscrupulous conspirators who engineer the schemes of the Mor- mon priesthood. The alleged submission and the reformation creed are both tricks and works of jugglery, and are so understood by the faithful, who do not renounce polygamy as a fundamental and revealed essential to their system. On the contrary, they reiterate adherence to it, only say- ing that they recognise the power of Congress to punish polygamists. They therefore advise their followers to avoid such an indulgence of their pri- vileges as would make them criminals."

ALMANACKS FOR 1891. John Ploughman's has the excellent features which have made its predec ssors such firm friends in many a home. (1d. Passmore & Alabaster.) Faithful Words, also a very useful penny wall sheet, is published by Mr. Holness, who has also brought out, at the same price, the Day by Day Almanack, and Christian's Daily Remembrancer, edited by Heyman Wreford. The latter may also be had interleaved and bound in cloth at 6d. Messrs. Partridge & Co. publish the Seeking and Finding Almanack. (1d.) Its motto is, "Search the Scriptures," and it is admirably designed to promote daily Bible-reading and study.

Evangelistic Notes.

Keith, N. B.—Mr. J. A. Smith, Aberdeen, has conducted a Gospel mission in Newmill and Fife-Keith Halls.

Mr. William Forbes closed his services at Chatham last week, and, at the invitation of Rev. H. G. Thwaites and others, he began a series of meetings on Monday in the Isle of Wight.

Gipsy Smith has conducted an evangelistic mission at Barrow-in-Furness. The meetings were held in the Town Hall, which accommodates one thousand, and was crowded throughout. Much unity was manifested among the churches, and a large number passed through the inquiry-room.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has conducted a twelve days' mission at Batley. The interest increased daily. Mr. Waugh held meetings for men only on the Sunday afternoons, and one for women only. These were exceedingly well attended. On the last Monday he gave the story of his conversion. The number of inquirers exceeded 250.

Mr. William Catlin has added to his other evangelistic work by the acquisition of St. John's Hall, Corporation-row, Clerkenwell, where he intends to hold Gospel meetings every Sunday evening at seven, addressed by various speakers. Lectures, some with lantern illustrations, have been arranged for the Wednesday evenings of November at eight o'clock.

Blackheath.—The united mission, conducted here by Mr. W. R. Lane, was a time of much blessing to many. Meetings were held daily in the Rink, afternoon and evening. The attendance was good, and on some occasions large. God was with his servant in blessing by His Spirit's power to the word spoken. Some were brought to decision, backsliders were reclaimed, and saints quickened and built up. W. L.

Hyde Park Hall Mission.—Over 1000 young men were present at the evangelistic service at the Metropolitan Music-hall on Sunday evening last. An address especially suitable to young men was given by Mr. Charles Cook. So many young men have lately been converted at the above meetings, that they have formed "The Hyde-park Hall Young Men's Guild," the object being the salvation of their fellow young men. Some thirty have recently confessed Christ.

Belfast.—A fortnight's mission, conducted by Miss Smith and Miss Bax in a schoolroom belonging to the Society of Friends, Belfast, has been attended with much blessing. Many backsliders were restored to the path from which they had wandered, and several drunkards were amongst those who professed to be converted. Many requests for prayer sent in during the mission were turned to praise before its close. Some interesting cases came under notice.

Ireland.—Mr. D. A. Black has been conducting largely attended meetings in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Londonderry. Mr. W. J. McCracken, of Dublin, has held ten days' mission in the Baptist Chapel, Banbridge. Mr. James Dickson, of the Belfast City Mission, has closed a series of Gospel services in the Methodist Church, Antrim. Rev. John Elliott and Mr. J. H. Cullen are conducting evangelistic meetings with marked success in a movable mission tent at Gortigal, co. Tyrone.

Evangelistic Mission.—A sixteen days' special Mission has been conducted, at Carshalton, Surrey, by Mr. William Grove, with very happy results. The meetings increased in interest and numbers in attendance night by night, and scarcely a night passed without some being confessedly brought to the Lord. One pleasing feature was a tea, which the Christians gave to their friends or neighbours. Each purchaser of a ticket had the privilege of inviting one unconverted person. Two hundred and thirty thus sat down to tea, and in the evening numbers were standing about the doors. Much blessing has been vouchsafed.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has just completed a mission of ten days in a barn belonging to Mr. J. Brock, of March Baldon, near Oxford. The barn was filled nightly with listeners to the simple Gospel messages. The Holy Spirit wrought on many, and broken-hearted sinners were healed. The converts of thirteen months ago were found continuing steadfastly, and witnessing by changed lives and ways to the power of the Lord to keep as well as to save. Mr. Rainey is at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, during the first fortnight of this month, and purposes returning to commence a mission in Gerston Hall, Paignton, on the 16th inst.

Burgh-by-Sands, Cumberland.—A week's mission has been held in the Mission Room, Burgh House, by Captain F. T. Tottenham, of Wimbledon. Evident blessing has followed the Gospel addresses. Bible readings were held each afternoon, which were deeply valued.

Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde-park Hall, preaches in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday evening next, and at the Carrubbers Close Mission every night for three weeks.

Rev. J. McNeill hopes to discharge, early in the New Year, at least a portion of the evangelistic duties assigned to him. Birmingham, Walsall, Berwick, Alnwick, and Wooller are spoken of as possible spheres of operation.

A fortnight's mission is to be conducted in Manchester by Rev. S. R. Macphail, M.A., of Liverpool, one of the Presbyterian Synod's evangelists, from Nov. 14 till Nov. 28. During the first week it will be held in Brunswick-street Church.

FOWEY SAILORS' HOME AND REST.—Since the opening of this place two months ago, a goodly number of seamen have lodged in the Home, and the mission services crowded. Several seamen have signed the temperance pledge, and some have professed conversion to God, while many have been deeply impressed.

JERUSALEM.—Mr. Edwin J. Wareham, of Clevedon, writes:—"A friend at Jerusalem informs me that on October 12, while Government excavations were in progress outside the Damascus Gate, a fountain of sweet clear water was discovered, of sufficient abundance to supply all the city. Should expectations thus raised be realised, this is important news. The railway from Jaffa, which is expected to reach Ramleh in about two months, and Jerusalem in a year or so, and the railway from Haifa to Damascus which will be commenced next month, will doubtless be the means of opening up and developing the resources of the country, and of still further hastening the glorious return."

BERLIN CHRISTIAN MISSION.—Mr. Fritz Schaaff, superintendent, writes:—"Our hall, which is situated in the centre of the city, Alte Jakobstrasse 91, has been crowded nearly every night during the past year. The Lord has owned our work in the salvation of a good many souls. Some of them were full of Socialistic ideas, thinking to promote their own happiness and the happiness of others without Christ in their hearts. A good many were formerly addicted to strong drink and other vices. We have now some of them testifying every night to the people. With the help of God we are going on, speaking, praying, tract distributing, and visiting the poor and sick, converted and unconverted people, in order that the Lord's name may be magnified." Mr. Schaaff is in London, and letters to him may be addressed care of Mrs. E. F. Pennell, 5, Gordon-street, Gordon-square, W.C.

FINSBURY PARK Y.M.C.A.—The Association at Finsbury-park has entered heartily on its winter work. The programme, full particulars of which appear in the Association magazine, Echoes of the Month, is a varied one, and provides for the fourfold character of the Association's object—viz., the spiritual, intellectual, physical, and social welfare of young men. The first social reception of the season was recently held, when Mr. Piercy was the host and Rev. George Lester was the chief speaker. At the close one young man present decided for Christ. He had been brought to the meeting by one of the new members, who himself was converted at the Association only a few weeks previously. On the 22nd Mr. R. Howard Henson, the hon. secretary, delivered a lecture on his trip to Morocco. There was a crowded attendance, and the capital dissolving views added largely to the interest of the evening. The regular meetings of the Association are well sustained.

THE INDIAN CHILD MARRIAGE CUSTOM.—Another victim of this enormity, a Parsee young lady named Sherinbai, is invoking the aid of the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Broach, Bombay Presidency, to release her from a matrimonial engagement entered into by relatives and friends without her consent. All that she is able to say in her "plaint" is that she "is informed that when she and the defendant were babies some ceremony, alleged to be that of marriage, was performed between them at Broach." Soon afterwards the bride's family removed to the distant city of Bombay, while the child-bridegroom remained in Broach. Never did Sherinbai from that hour gaze on the features or hold communication with him who nevertheless now claims her for his bride. Sherinbai is uncompromising in her demand that the pretended marriage shall, under these circumstances, be "declared null and void."

The Temperance Cause.

Dr. Nansen, the Norwegian Arctic explorer, is a strict abstainer from alcohol.

The Glasgow magistrates, at a recent licensing sessions refused all new applications.

A "model temperance hotel" has been built at Barnstaple, Devon, at a cost of nearly £6,000.

The Baptist Union of Scotland reports that eighty per cent. of its ministers, and all the students are abstainers.

The native authorities of Raratonga have petitioned the Governor of New Zealand for legislation to prevent the export of liquor to that place from the colony.

The Liverpool Temperance Confederation submitted searching questions on temperance matters to all municipal candidates, and received many satisfactory replies.

An influential meeting, on behalf of Sunday closing, has been held at York. Canon Fleming, Mr. Rowntree, and other gentlemen, advocated the Sunday Closing Bill.

The Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association has held a number of meetings in different districts of the city this autumn, and many pledges have been taken.

"Hope Lodge," Malvern, is an institution for the rescue of inebriates. It is now in its fifth year, and since its inauguration about 250 have been admitted or assisted.

A publican in St. George's-in-the-East was lately fined for supplying drink to a constable on duty, and the constable was dismissed from the force after twenty years' service.

Manchester, with a population of 373,583, has 2,577 licensed houses; Birmingham, with a population of 400,757, has 2,166: and Liverpool, with a population of 552,506, has 2,510.

Mr. Leng, M.P. for Dundee, addressing his constituents at Dundee, said he intended introducing a Bill to effect the complete separation of the grocery trade from dealers in wines, spirits, and other excisable liquors.

Methodist ministers are taking their share of Temperance work on the other side of the Tweed. Revs. E. J. Brailsford, W. Potts, and J. Leathley have been advocating total abstinence at some of the great meetings in Dundee and Glasgow.

The Irish Executive have opened an official inquiry into the ether drinking in the North of Ireland, to which we referred last week. Evidence is being collected from the constabulary and other persons in the districts concerned.

A Rhode Island (U.S.) journal, which advocates the repeal of the prohibition law, now says of the licence system:—"Rowdyism and drunkenness prevail to a shocking extent, while vice of every kind is flaunted in the face of the respectable residents."

Speaking at the annual meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance, upon the defeat of the compensation proposals, Sir Wilfrid Lawson said "Two months' work, and the whole scheme vanished." The moral of it was that where the Temperance party is united it is more powerful than the Drink party.

At Trelewis, a mining locality about seven miles from Merthyr, although the population is about 2,000, and money is circulated briskly, there is neither public-house, pawnshop, police-station, nor even a policeman. When it is remembered that a mining population comprises some of the most reckless spirits in the community, we may cease to wonder that social miracles soon follow the exclusion of drink.

The Band of Hope Union have determined on a new departure. The committee offer 1,500 prizes to the value of £250, open to all scholars and pupil teachers in elementary schools, to be given on examination in a special text-book, entitled "The Temperance Manual for the Young." Any teacher may receive a copy of the conditions of the competition by applying at the offices of the union, 4 Ludgate-hill, E.C.

Speaking at the annual Conference of the Exeter Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S., at Plymouth, Archdeacon Sandford said it was useless to stand by legislation alone. Laws may do something, but they will never give heart and soul to the temperance movement. The heart and soul will come from the deep sympathy of Christian hearts with temperance work, which would best be done through the fundamental principles of Christianity and self-sacrifice.

American Notes.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

E American Board of Commissioners for reign Missions held their annual meeting in nneapolis. It was a wonderful gathering. The ot where they met was Indian hunting-ground y years ago. Now it is covered by a noble city mbering 160,000 inhabitants. The corporate embers of the Board number about two hundred d fifty. They sit on a large platform before a eat assembly and transact their business in this blic manner. During the past five years there s arisen a spirit of controversy within the Board er the qualifications of missionary applicants. he conservatives insist on belief of the old thodoxy, while the new school men are less acting.

The utterances of Joseph Cook, the Boston theogical giant, reveals the fear of the orthodox men, at, if future probation is taught as a "larger ope," the heathen will be the sufferers. Mr. ook is no trimmer; among many fiery words he id:—

Our object is to preach the Gospel—not its counterit. I mean to make no uncourteous reference to the pinions of anyone when I cite Coleridge's famous remark that a Unitarian or a Universalist may be a hristian, but that Unitarianism or Universalism is ot Christianity. Now, I do not deny for an instant that man may hold what are commonly called new departre views and be a Christian; but this Board is of the pinion that the doctrine of probation after death ought ot to be preached on the basis of funds gathered by our committees. It is the opinion of this Board that he doctrine of probation after death ought not to be resented within its field as Christianity.

The cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul are alled the twin cities of the northwest. They are ocated within ten miles of each other. They are ities of great material splendour and commercial vealth. It was my privilege to hold evangelistic ervices in each city, in connection with the Young Men's Christian Associations. Both of these rganisations are energetic and aggressive, and vithal very spiritual in power and influence. In Minneapolis, besides the mixed services held in the hurches, I addressed Y.M.C.A. men's meetings, umbering nearly four hundred. In St. Paul the umber of men reached 1000.

LIVERPOOL Y.M.C.A.—At a recent social meeting of this Association nearly 400 new members vere present. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided, nd gave strong testimony to the value of Associaion work.

PENDLETON.—The meetings for the present season have begun in good earnest at John-street Hall. As the result of six days' Gospel temperance mission, about 70 pledges have been taken. House to house circulation of Gospel literature is well sustained, combined with kindly attention to the sick and destitute. These visits have afforded many opportunities for doing good to soul and body. Mr. John Sugden, hon. sec., reports pleasing fruits from the varied indoor and outdoor operations of the past quarter.

TONGA.—Information to hand from Tonga confirms the recent good news respecting the improved condition of affairs among the native Wesleyans, which is very largely owing to the wise intervention of the High Commissioner, Sir J. B. Thurston. Already most of the exiled Wesleyans have returned from Fiji; and now that religious liberty has again become a reality the hitherto suppressed feeling of fear and restraint among the natives is beginning to disappear, and large numbers are again returning to the Wesleyan Church.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—Canon Wilberforce's recent denunciation of the opium trade has led to the formation of a committee representing the majority of the English churches, which is making arrangements for holding a conference on the subject next spring. The conference will specially consider the question so far as it affects India, and will lay its conclusions and its requests before the Government. With regard to the production of opium in China, though the conference will thoroughly ventilate the subject, it is not expected that any practical results will be reached. The conference will probably be held in London next March

Obituary.

MR. JAMES DALZIEL.

WE have lately heard, with much regret, of the death, at Shanghai, of Mr. J. Dalziel, for some years worker in connection with the China Inland Mission, but latterly an independent worker in the city. He succumbed to an attack of dysentery. Mr. Dalziel and his devoted wife were known to many in London.

MR. C. E. MUDIE.

The death is announced of Mr. Charles Edward Mudie, founder of the well-known circulating library. Born at Chelsea in 1818, he began business in Bloomsbury at the age of twenty-two, and, combining enterprise with great organising ability, achieved great commercial success. Mr. Mudie was a member of the Congregationalist body, and a sincere worker in the cause of Christ. He superintended a Mission in Pimlico, and was widely known as a benevolent man. A hymn from his pen, "I lift my heart to Thee, Saviour Divine," has found its way into many collections.

MR. ASHWORTH BRIGGS.

Mr. E. F. Ashworth Briggs, barrister-at-law, a county councillor, was killed a few days ago by an engine running over him at Blisworth Railway-station, Northamptonshire. He was widely respected, and exercised a good influence as a prominent Congregationalist. Mr. Briggs had several times been among the selected speakers at the Congregational Union Assembly. He was one of the representatives of the Northamptonshire churches on the Council of the Church Aid and Home Missionary Society, and was also a member of the National Council of Congregational Church Guilds.

MR. JOHN NAPIER.

We regret to have to record the death of Mr. John Napier, who has been connected for more than half a century with the Manchester City Mission. At the funeral service, Rev. William Jackson sketched the salient characteristics of the deceased, and emphasised the lesson of his life. The transparency of his religion, his unostentatious benevolence, his catholicity of spirit, and his devoutness in public worship were named. Mr. Napier had attended two services the previous Sunday; on Monday morning, somewhat early, he had to confess himself unwell, and at eleven o'clock, without a struggle, he passed away, in the 90th year of his age, after seventy years of Christian service.

MISS WEITBRECHT, who was secretary of the London Y.W.C.A. for upwards of twenty years, has been compelled to resign through failing health, and Mr. Henry Kidner has been appointed her successor.

MATABELELAND. — A Reuter's telegram from Cape Town, Oct. 29, states that peace is now positively assured. The missionaries have all re-entered the country, and matters have generally assumed their normal aspect.

IRELAND.—Mr. T. H. Grubb has been having attentive audiences at his Gospel tent meetings in Ireland. He writes from Tredegar Cottage, Tudor-square, Tenby, of his desire to resume the work, but, as the people are poor, they are not able to help financially. Letters from converts testify to the esteem in which Mr. Grubb is held, and the blessing which has attended his evangelistic ministry, especially at Castleblayney.

THE CONVENT OF THE "BURIED ALIVE."—The judicial authorities at Naples have instituted proceedings against the Superior of the Convent of the Sepolte Vive (Buried Alive) under the Penal Code. Another visit has taken place in a second refuge of the same kind at the Incuraboli, where the authorities were admitted without opposition, and obtained information showing that the Sepolte Vive, under the direction of S. Orsolo, is not an isolated case.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE ON THE CONTINENT.—The Blue Cross Temperance Society, which commenced many years ago in Switzerland, has not only influenced the Southern part of Germany, but also the City of Paris. Mr. F. Stanley Service writes from Edinburgh: "Pastor Wood, of the French Methodist Church, after leaving Lausanne, started, with the assistance of a reformed Swiss drunkard, a branch of the Society in Paris, which now, after six years' incessant labour, numbers about fifty members, of whom more than one half have been reclaimed from drunkenness. Pastor Wood left Paris about a year ago to begin a work of evangelisation in Cherbourg, and has already founded another branch of the Croix Bleue in that town."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Chapel Royal, Whitehall, is to be permanently closed.

The Bishop of Lichfield is anxious to raise £25,000 for the increase of church accommodation.

Rev. W. T. Hollins, of St. Peter's Church, Bristol, has left England on a six months' missionary visit to India in connection with the C.M.S.

A fortnight's general mission, conducted by several well-known missioners, was commenced on Sunday at all the churches in Shrewsbury.

Dean Perowne, of Peterborough, has accepted the bishopric of Worcester. Canon Newbolt, of Ely College, is to be Canon Liddon's successor.

So bad is the eyesight of the Bishop of London that in Christ Church, Woburn-square, where he had arranged to preach recently, he had to be led to the pulpit.

The Bishop of Ripon, at his diocesan conference, gave an address on "Modern Biblical Criticism." He contended for liberty of reverent investigation, but deprecated the acceptance of rash conclusions.

"The Church and Socialism" was the subject of some earnest discussion at the Manchester Diocesan Conference. It was contended that true Christianity provides for all that is good in the Socialistic claims.

Mrs. Wilberforce, wife of the Bishop of Newcastle, opened a new factory girls' club in that town. The club, she said, would aim at brightening the lives of female toilers. It would be to them a place of refreshment, where they could always find a friend.

The Bishop of Newcastle-on-Tyne, at the recent diocesan conference, spoke in favour of the establishment of brotherhoods of lay workers living together under simple rules, whose vows of poverty, celibacy, and obedience need not be lifelong, but might be terminable.

The London County Council intend to make a final effort to prevent the waste of the superfluous funds of the City churches. It is time that these large ecclesiastical endowments devoted to comparatively empty parishes and churches, and further augmented by the funds of parochial charities, should be employed in a more beneficial manner.

The death of the eldest daughter of the Archbishop of Canterbury, which we announced last week, has excited deep and general regret. Miss Benson took an active part in movements for the religious and social elevation of women. She caught the disease from which she died through a visit to the family of one of the Archbishop's employés, whose daughter had died of diphtheria.

A large and influential meeting was held last week in the library of Lambeth Palace on behalf of the Episcopal Missions in Japan. Addresses were given by Admiral Sir Vesey Hamilton, Archdeacon Maundrell (who gave an account of the work in South Japan), Prebendary Wodehouse, Rev. J. Batchelor (who spoke of his own work among the Ainus of East Japan), Rev. S. Bickersteth, and others.

For two seasons, services of a distinctively evangelical nature have, with the licence of the Bishop, been conducted by Rev. A. Ernest Foster (a young and gifted Church of England clergyman) in the spacious pavilion of the pier, Hastings. They have attracted a considerable number of visitors, who have thus heard the Gospel, and have, even on Sundays in the winter, been very numerously attended. The Bishop of Chichester thinks that such an informal arrangement should now cease, and, in deference to his opinion, Mr. Foster has retired. But the members of the large congregation which has been formed have no place to which they can go. For their sake, Rev. J. B. French, a Congregationalist, has offered to conduct the services, without there being any break, in the Episcopalian manner. The offer being accepted pro tem., the new arrangement came into observance on Sunday last, November 2.

BAPTIST.

Rev. D. Rees Davies, Baptist minister, Swansea, has sustained serious injury by being knocked down by a trap, the wheels of which passed over his chest.

In connection with the twenty-third anniversary of the Enfield Baptist Church, a sermon was preached by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. There was a very large congregation, and several local ministers were present.

The Committee of the Baptist Missionary Society have resolved to send out at least one new missionary to Ceylon in the place of Rev. George Gray, recently retired. Offers of service are invited from suitable candidates.

The first anniversary of the church in Kimberley, South Africa, was recently held. The newly-formed church consists of about ninety members. A suitable site in the main street, in the centre of the town, has been secured for a new chapel.

The annual meeting in connection with the Pastors' College was held at the Tabernacle last week, with the president, Mr. Spurgeon, in the chair. There are now sixty-five students in the college, and over 800 have been trained since the commencement.

Sixty missionaries are leaving America this season for distant fields of labour under the Baptist Missionary Union, and of these forty-two are fresh appointments. Twenty-five have already proceeded from the great western republic to eastern countries—Burmah, Assam, and India.

Two friends of the Baptist Missionary Society have proposed to pay the deputation expenses of Revs. R. Glover, of Bristol, and T. N. Morris, of Ipswich, who recently left this country for China, so that no portion of the cost of the deputation will be taken from the funds of the Society.

A Social Union has been formed in London for the cultivation of a more intimate acquaintance with the interests, local and general, of the denomination, and the encouragement of a more friendly and social intercourse among laymen. The meetings are held at the Holborn Restaurant.

The Baptist church at Attercliffe, Sheffield, commenced a mission five years ago at Treeton, which has been conducted in a room over a stable. The accommodation having become inadequate, and encouraged by the offer of a site by the Rother Vale Colliery Company, the erection of an iron church has been undertaken.

Rev. A. Hampden Lee, speaking at the West Midland Baptist Conference on "Religion in Daily Life," said the phrase often uttered by men in large ways of business, "I will drive all competitors out of the market," is not the outcome of a Christian spirit. Many a plodding, honest tradesman has had all the heart taken out of him by some prosperous neighbour graspingly adding to his already prosperous business the trade of another.

The Welsh Baptist Association for Montgomeryshire and Radnorshire, at its yearly meeting held at Llanidloes, agreed to address the Prince of Wales as follows:—"To his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales,—We beg to request your Royal Highness to use your great influence against the evil practices of gambling and betting, whether connected with racecourses or the boxing ring, or, indeed, in any way. We feel strongly that these evils are not only ruinous to the worldly interests of many of our fellow-creatures, but also exceptionally dangerous in view of their future interests, and as such we beg of you to give no countenance to these practices in any way whatever."

Resignations.—Rev. James Easter, the pastorate at Ashton-on-Ribble, Lancashire,—Rev. A. Tessier, the pastorate at Bromley.—Rev. J. Drew, New Cross-street Chapel, Margate.—Rev. George Taylor, St. Clement's Chapel, Norwich.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. Walter Wynn (Bradford) to Waterhouse, Durham.—Rev. Thomas Perry (Lordship-lane) to Stepney Baptist Chapel, King's Lynn, Norfolk.—Rev. W. H. Tredray (Wandsworth) to Vauxhall Chapel, Upper Kennington-lane, S.E.—Rev. D. Davies (Bangor) to Porth, South Wales.—Rev. T. S. Campbell (Airdrie) to Fishponds Church, Bristol.—Rev. F. G. James (Pontypool College) to the pastorate of Glasbury and Penyrheol churches, Brecon.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Young People's Guilds in connection with Congregational churches are being formed in various parts of Wales.

At Clive a series of evangelistic services have been held by the pastor, Rev. D. Russell Hamilton. The membership has been nearly doubled.

At the recent anniversary services of the church at Upton, Forest Gate, it was stated that seven members were received into the church during the year.

Dr. Goodrich, late of Glasgow, has been inducted into his Manchester charge. Ministers of different denominations attended the recognition service on Monday last.

The Congregational churches of the country have decided to observe November 16 as "College Sunday," on which day a deeper interest in the institutions whose object is to secure an educated ministry will be pleaded for.

An interesting reception was held last week at the Memorial Hall on behalf of the Mansfield House scheme—the Congregational settlement at the East-end of London. The Congregationalists intend to push on vigorously with their Forward Movement.

A very interesting correspondence is going on in The Independent on woman's work in the Church. A northern church and two London churches have elected female delegates to the Congregational Union, and probably next year a still larger number will follow their example.

London Congregationalists are about to renew their efforts in response to "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London." Dr. Parker will preside at a special session of the assembly of the London Union, on November 25, for the purpose of considering the question, "How to reach and help the mass of unreached Londoners."

At the autumnal meetings of the Yorkshire Congregational Union (Leeds and York District), held at Knaresborough, it was reported that £1300 had been subscribed for the purpose of carrying on aggressive work in the towns of the county, and that earnest attention was being paid to the matter of grouping churches in the villages.

A request has been issued to all the Congregational ministers in England and Wales asking them to carry out, in such form as may locally be deemed best, the resolution of the Congregational Union advising that on a given Sunday in November a special sermon be preached on the sin of intemperance. The Sunday suggested for this year is November 30.

A United Congregational Evangelistic Mission in Leeds will commence on January 11, 1891. It is hoped that among others the services of Revs. Dr. Dale, Dr. Charles Leach, R. F. Horton, M.A., Morley Wright, Arnold Thomas, M.A., Urijah Thomas, Charles New, John Calvert, and Frederic Hall may be secured. A central midday meeting for business men and special gatherings for working people are contemplated.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. E. Griffith-Jones (Llanelly) to Mount View Church, Stroud Green.—Rev. Walter Lanceley (Tattenhall) to Holywell, Flintshire.—Rev. Alfred Laishley (Scaldwell) to Brigstock, Northamptonshire.

METHODIST.

A special mission is being held at the Leysian Hall, Errol-street, E.C., this week.

The Wesleyans at Wigan are about to erect new premises in Dicconson-street in which to carry on mission work.

Leatherhead Wesleyans are anxious to commemorate the centenary of Wesley's death by the erection of a new place of worship.

Rev. Joseph Odell has removed to Birmingham in order to devote himself to the work of the Evangelists' Home, Highgate Lodge.

The Wesleyan Methodists of this country have within the last twenty-five years raised not less than £5,000,000 for building and enlarging chapels.

Mr. John Holman, a prominent merchant of Camborne, dropped dead whilst attending service in the Wesleyan Chapel there last week. He was over seventy years of age.

The children of Methodism have started a children's centenary memorial to John Wesley, to embrace a window in City-road Chapel, London, and a statue to be erected in some suitable locality.

A gentleman has given to Mr. Nix, of the West London Wesleyan Mission, an iron hall with its appointments, holding three hundred, for use in Bisley, Gloucestershire. It was to be formally opened yesterday (Thursday).

The Manchester Methodist ministers belonging to the several sections of Methodism are accustomed to meet once a year for brotherly intercourse. The gathering this year will be held on November 7, at the Central Hall, Oldham-street.

It is probable that Mr. J. Flanagan, whose work has been so signally successful at the Albert Hall, Manchester, will be appointed, with several assistants, to lead the Primitive Methodist "Forward Movement" to be commenced shortly in London.

Rev. George Hargreaves, United Methodist Free Church minister at Cardiff, was selected as the Liberal candidate for one of the wards in the Cardiff County Council. The Town Clerk, however, has declared that as a minister Mr. Hargreaves is ineligible.

The General Missionary Committee of the Primitive Methodist denomination are taking steps with a view to the establishment of mission churches in London and Liverpool, in districts where the religious needs of the population are inadequately provided for.

At the sittings of the Connexional Committee of the Methodist Free Churches, held in Huddersfield, it was reported that Mr. Councillor J. Duckworth, of Rochdale, had promised to give another mission car to evangelistic work in the villages. The one given by that gentleman last year is rendering excellent service.

The Birmingham district meeting of the United Methodist Free Church has passed a resolution recommending "a week of self-denial" throughout the district, commencing on the third Sunday in January, 1891. The proceeds are to be divided between the home and foreign missionary societies.

A convention of representatives from all the Cornwall circuits was held at Camborne last week. Rev. W. Brooks, secretary of committee, reported a total accommodation of 72,710 seats in the chapels. In some places this was in excess of attendance, from depopulation through emigration; but one fifth of the district population attended the chapel services, and one third of the entire number were church members.

The Missionary Committee of the United Methodist Free Churches has held its autumn session in Newcastle-on-Tyne. Rev. T. Wakefield has agreed to go to East Africa not later than February next, and two young men have been accepted and appointed to accompany him. Another offer of service for China was also accepted; the new missionary will obtain some knowledge of medicine and practical surgery, and will go out under the care of Rev. F. Galpin, who has been in China upwards of twenty years, and will return for another period of five years.

SALVATION ARMY.

For the first time in Norway liberty has been granted the Salvationists to hold an open-air meeting, a burgomaster granting permission for processioning with bands of music.

Archdeacon Farrar has visited the Men's Night Shelter at Westminster, and will preach on General Booth's Social Scheme, at Westminster Abbey, on Sunday afternoon next.

The Christian World thinks nearly all the opposition to the Salvation Army comes from the public-house element, General Booth's followers being regarded as the deadliest foes of the liquor traffic.

The Princess Puchtomsky, Mrs. Major Oliphant, and Captain Verniers were recently stoned in the streets of Geneva. Despite opposition, the services are sustained with vigour, and many of the most "notorious sinners" of the city have knelt at the penitent form.

Last week the memorial stones of new barracks for a Holloway corps of the Army were laid amid much rejoicing. The building, which is to accommodate 1500 persons, is situate in Ronald's-road, within a few yards of the Holloway-road, and will cost (including the land) in round figures £3000.

Much persecution has been endured at Rorbas, German Switzerland. Roughs hired by publicans pulled down the barracks, which, after being rebuilt, had to be watched day and night. Four of the worst offenders committed suicide. The hall is now full every night, nad people are coming to the penitent form.

To a great audience in the Dome, Brighton, on Wednesday, last week, Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Tucker earnestly pleaded the claims of India's evangelisation.

General Booth expresses confidence in the realisation of his new scheme of social reform. Speaking at Eastbourne, he said he had been flooded with sympathetic letters and promises of co-operation, and assistance from men and women of all classes, from pronounced unbelievers as well as professing Christians.

In a lecture at Welbeck Hall, W., last week, Mrs. Fawcett said the great value of General Booth's book was the emphasis which it gave to the absolute necessity not merely of a change of the outer circumstances, but of changing the inner man if any real and adequate remedy was to be found for the terrible problem of poverty.

The Army in India (says The Bombay Guardian) has scored a victory. The whole of the Dherd community at Paej in the Gujerat district, numbering six hundred adults, have just thrown away their idols, and taken Christ for their Saviour. This is in addition to the great successes lately reported in the Kaira district. This has been brought about by preaching the Gospel and personal testimony only.

General Booth's book has already brought him a number of contributions towards his scheme. These have been in money; but the latest gift is along the line of one of his own suggestions. A well-known firm, of Lowestoft and London, have offered to General Booth all the waste tin from their factories for the purpose stated in his book. This is said to be equivalent to an annual contribution of nearly £1000.

A Dalziel's telegram from Montreal states that there the Salvation Army were mobbed last week, and a serious riot was only prevented by the prompt interference of the police. Marching through Griffintown, the Irish quarter of the town, they were met by several hundred roughs, who attacked them with stones. Several of the men were seriously injured. The ring-leaders have been arrested, and placed in gaol.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John Robertson, Rev. John McNeill's successor in Edinburgh, preaches for Mr. Spurgeon on Nov. 23.

Dr. Saphir commenced on Sunday a two months' occupancy of Rev. W. Rodger's pulpit at Bournemouth.

The Earl of Aberdeen, though himself an Episcopalian, while Viceroy of Ireland, appointed a Presbyterian as one of his chaplains, and during his recent tour in Canada gave an address from one of the Presbyterian pulpits in Hamilton.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Methodist Orphan Society has 170 orphans under its care.

The Belfast Mission to the Adult Deaf and Dumb is doing a good work.

Rev. J. C. Blair, the General Assembly's new missionary to India, has sailed for Bombay.

Several of the Protestant Diocesan Synods met last week, and in nearly every instance encouraging reports were presented.

Guilds, having for their object the intellectual, moral and spiritual improvement of young men, are being formed in connection with many Presbyterian congregations in Ireland.

Rev. Patrick Ernest Donovan, formerly a member of the Roman Catholic Church, but now a Methodist minister, has been addressing large congregations in Portadown and the neighbourhood.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Mr. James Maclaren, lately associated with Dr. Monro Gibson's church.—Rev. James J. Hayes, LL.D., curate of St. Michael's, Limerick, aged 27 years.—Rev. Alex. Somerville, Congregational minister, Lytham.—Rev. Evan Hughes, vicar of N. Sunderland, Chathill, Northumberland.—Canon Cooper, of Henbury, a warm supporter of the Scripture Readers' Association.—Rev. E. Evans, Congregational minister, Penybont, Trelech.—Mrs. Trollope, wife of the Suffragan-Bishop of Nottingham.—Rev. E. Marsden, pastor of the Baptist Church at Bangalore, India.—Rev. John Roberts, Baptist minister of Glynneath, formerly vicar of Llangeler.—Rev. Dr. W. Evarts, for twenty years pastor of the First Baptist Church, Chicago.—Rev. William Shadrach, D.D., after sixty-five years of ministry in the United States.—Rev. John Hicks, of Southampton, oldest minister in the Methodist Connexion, wherein he has ministered fifty-seven years.—Mr. E. F. Ashworth Briggs, a well-known Congregationalist of Daventry.—Mr. John Wilson, of New Pitsligo, N.B., an elder of the U.P. Church.

THE FISHMONGERS' COMPANY has made a grant of fifty guineas to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.

FRANCE AND ITALY IN PALESTINE.—It is reported that France is exercising constant pressure at the Vatican to have the Italian monks in charge of the holy places in Palestine replaced by French priests. The monks at present in charge are under the French Protectorate, and the Italian Government naturally wish them to be placed under the jurisdiction of the Italian Consul, threatening otherwise to stop the subsidies which are at present allowed. In the event of the proposed change French influence in Palestine would be greatly increased.

 The book by Mrs. Wright, noticed last week, is SUNBEAMS ON MY PATH—not "Sunbeams on my Faith," as erroneously stated.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 9.—Eccles. III.

THE thought which is prominent in the early part of this chapter is, not so much the strong contrasts which present themselves in the events of life, each in its time, but rather the purpose of God which attains its end through seeming contradictions or reversals of action. Thus, to take the great purpose of God in redemption: "When the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son born of a woman" (R.V.). This was the "time to be born," but for such a One to die seemed to be the reversal of all that this birth involved. "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever." "We trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel." Nevertheless we had (John xiii. 1) that "Jesus knew that his hour was come that He should depart out of this world." This did not really reverse the purpose of his birth, but rather was the end and aim of his being born into the world; for He "took part of flesh and blood) that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil." Thus the death of Christ, considered as a national murder, was the greatest crime ever committed; but, considered in relation to the purpose which it fulfilled, it was "beautiful in its time" (11). The other contrasts may be similarly viewed as illustrating spiritual things.

He hath set the world in their heart.—The "world" better rendered "eternity," and 2 Cor. iv. 18 illustrates the meaning in its highest fulfilment. Delitzsch says: "God has not only assigned to each individually his appointed place in history, but He has also established in man an impulse leading him beyond that which is temporal toward the eternal. It lies in his nature not to be contented with the temporal, but to break through the limits which it draws around him, to escape from the bondage and disquietude within which he is held, and amid the ceaseless changes of time to console himself by directing his thoughts to eternity."

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10.—Eccles. IV.

Some of the evils which tend to mar man's happiness "under the sun" are now considered. (1) Oppression, with no comforter for the oppressed (1-3). (2) Envy, which pursues even him whose work is right (4-6). (3) Loneliness, which robs men wealth of its satisfaction (7-12), and (4) an evil which Solomon himself experienced more than most, the follies of old age (13-16). This last evil is illustrated by a story which seems to recall the evil heritage which Solomon himself left to Rehoboam. Ver. 14 might be rendered "Out of the house of bondage he goes forth to be a king, while also he that was born in his kingdom is poor (or dispossessed)." The contrast being between Jeroboam, "Solomon's servant" (1 Kings xi. 26), who became a king, and Rehoboam, "born in his kingdom," who became poor, by the loss of the ten tribes. That this should be uttered prophetically no difficulty to those who recognise inspiration.

15, 16. These verses are obscure and difficult, but seem to point to a continuation of the subject of ver. 14. Delitzsch renders them thus: "I saw all the living which walk under the sun on the side of the youth, the second who shall enter upon the place of the former: no end of all the people, even those at whose head he stands." For the fulfilment see 1 Kings xii. 16-19.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11.—Eccles. V.

A difference of style marks a transition to a new branch of the main subject. The writer addresses his readers now in the second person. Some have divided the book into two parts, making this the division—chap. i.-iv. being theoretical, and iv.-xii. practical. From this to the end of the book are set forth short practical principles or maxims.

1. Keep thy foot, &c.—i.e., keep a guard upon thy conduct. The foot denotes walk (see Prov. iv. 26, 27). The sacrifice of fools would seem to be the thoughtless formalism which is satisfied with the mere ritualism of worship, while the heart is far from Him they profess to worship.

2. It would be well if the direction here given, "Let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God," were more borne in mind in Christian worship. To see crowds of worldly people in our churches repeating words expressive of devotion to God, when their lives belie their words, is a very serious evil, and apparently the very one against which we are here warned.

4, 5. There is no encouragement here given to vowing, rather the reverse, and certainly no recognition of a dispensing power which can (as Rome falsely teaches) relieve one from the responsibility undertaken by the vow. Is this not evidently the Lord's meaning in Matt. v., "It was said of old, Do not forswear thyself, but perform unto the Lord thine oaths; but I say unto you, Swear not at all"? To make vows is incompatible with being led by the Spirit.

6. Delitzsch renders the word "angel" by "messenger," and understands by it the messenger of God, be he prophet or priest, before whom the vow was taken; if so, it is clear from what is said that this "messenger" possessed no power to dispense the one who had vowed from the obligation to make it good.

10. It is the love of money which fails to find satisfaction even in its increase.

12. Labouring man does not mean what we understand by the expression, but "everyone who, according to the Divine direction, earns his bread in the sweat of his brow."

13. The evil depicted in this and the following verses is the common one of the rich man losing his money, and his family becoming paupers.

18. The real blessing of wealth to those to whom God has given it is to recognise God as the giver, and rejoice in Him rather than in his gifts.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12.—Eccles. VI.

The Preacher dwells in this chapter upon those evils which in this life—"under the sun"—tend to mar the otherwise prosperous and happy existence of one to whom God has granted earthly blessing. The vanity of life "under the sun," which is the great subject of the book, is more strikingly seen in such cases than even in those of ordinary poverty and trial.

2. God giveth him not power to eat thereof.—It does not say how, whether by war or disease, or death, or mental incapacity; but the language would cover all these cases.

3. Many passages attest the disgrace which attached to lack of burial (Ps. lxxix. 2; Is. xiv. 19; Jer. viii. 2, xvi. 4, xxii. 19; Rev. xi. 9). It is the privilege of a believer to attend his own burial, and he cannot complain of its lacking honour, "buried with Him in baptism." The subsequent disposal of his body may be a matter of comparative indifference.

4, 5. The subject of these verses is the "untimely birth" spoken of in ver. 3. "He" and "his" are better rendered "it" and "its."

6. "He" points back to the man spoken of in ver 3.

9. It is better to enjoy the good that lies before us, which God has given us, than to let the spirit wander in desires after that which we have not got, and which we never may attain. Or, to put it in another way, "It is better to face the world of fact which lies before us, than live in the region of fiction which attracts so many."

10. The key to this verse is Acts xv. 18, "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." "It is known that it is man" is explained by Delitzsch, "the whole being of a man, whether of this one or that one, at all times, and on all sides, is previously known," i.e. to God. Against such foreknowledge on the part of God it is useless for man to contend.

12. James iv. 14 seems to be a reminiscence of this verse.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13.—Eccles. VII.

The teaching of the first six verses of this chapter may seem "pessimist" in its character, death being therein preferred to life; but the object is to direct attention to the only true sphere of happiness, which is not to be found "under the sun" as things are at present.

1. A good name is better than precious ointment.—This may be said pre-eminently of Him of whom Solomon speaks (Cant. i. 3), "Thy name is as ointment poured forth," and in a mystic sense the latter clause is true of Him too. Calvary, to us who believe, is better than Bethlehem. To the believer too, if "to depart and be with Christ is far better" than remaining in the world, much more is it so than coming into the world.

3. Sorrow is better, &c.—In 2 Cor. vii. 10 this is asserted of "godly sorrow" which may well be understood here too.

11. The question asked (i. 3), "What profit hath a man?" &c., and hitherto answered in the negative, now finds an affirmative answer in the words, "By wisdom there is profit."

Wisdom is good with an inheritance seems best understood of the inheritance to which God's wisdom leads the soul; that spoken of in 1 Peter i. 4.

12. Better rendered in R.V., "Wisdom is a defence even as money is a defence." The same illustration is conveyed in the New Testament, where Christ speaks of "the true riches," and Paul speaks of "the unsearchable riches of Christ." See also Rev. iii. 18.

16, 17. "Be not righteous over much," &c...."be not over much wicked," &c.—These difficult verses are explained by Delitzsch thus: "Be not a narrow rigorist...but let not the reins be too loose, and be no fool who wantonly places himself above law and discipline."

29. The same writer well expresses the meaning of this verse in the words, "Inventive refined degeneracy has come into the place of moral simplicity."

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14.—Eccles. VIII.

The first nine verses dwell on the action of "wisdom" under the circumstances of despotic government as experienced in the East. God had warned Israel of the evils they were bringing on themselves in asking for a king (1 Sam. viii. 11-19). Even Solomon, with all his wisdom, comes to the conclusion (9) that "there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his hurt" (R.V.), i.e., "the hurt of the subject, not of the king" (as in A.V.). There is a time coming when this will not be, when the true King comes; but till then despotic monarchy is too often found to be to the hurt of those ruled over.

The last eight verses deal with the evil arising from men of the world presuming upon the postponement of judgment, and imagining that there will be none, or that it can be evaded. In earthly things this often arises from maladministration of the law. In reference to God's future judgment, it is too commonly ignored, and mirth brought in to drown thoughts of its reality. Even the wise are subject to this temptation. See ver. 15, which does not express Solomon's final judgment, but a stage in the process of his investigation.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15.—Eccles. IX.

The teaching of the first six verses of this chapter seems at first sight to be fatalistic; but our Lord's warning (Luke xiii. 1-5) about the fate of the Galileans not being a proof of their being sinners above others is perhaps the best key to the right interpretation. In this light the fact that "there is one event unto all" (3) must be limited to the ordinary workings of God's providence in this world. As to the next, Solomon seems to anticipate the blessedness, now fully revealed in the Gospel, of one "accepted in the Beloved," when he says (7), "Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy," &c. Taken thus mystically, verse 8 is a beautiful description of justification and sanctification going hand in hand. "Let thy garments be always white; and let thy head lack no ointment." Compare Rev. iii. 18 where the white garments and the anointing oil both occur together.

11. Time and chance happeneth to them all.—The word "chance" is literally "incident"—"what lights upon any one."—Gesenius. There is no recognition intended of a blind chance or fortune whom the heathen of old made into a sort of goddess. Fausset in his commentary explains it to mean what we call "Providence."

The parable of the poor wise man delivering the city (14) might point to the deliverance of Abel from Joab (2 Sam. xx. 15-22) were it not that the deliverer was a wise woman and Joab was not a king. Still (as Fausset suggests) it is a striking parallel. But the mystic meaning seems to point to Christ, who for our sakes became poor, and yet was the wisdom of God, whose deliverance of "the city of the living God" is too often forgotten even by its citizens, and hence they need the constant reminder, "Do this in remembrance of Me."

WOMEN CRIMINALS IN VENICE.—Rev. Alexander Robertson, of San Remo celebrity, contributes to the November number of The Sunday Magazine a description of a convict prison for women at Venice, which he considers one of the best institutions of the kind he has ever visited. Mr. Robertson says his admiration of the whole establishment was enhanced by learning that although the prison contained between two and three hundred criminals, the majority of whom were murderesses, "yet it is managed entirely by a mere handful of women, who, from love to God and to their fellow creatures, have voluntarily dedicated their lives to this work."

Sunday Afternoon, November 16.

JESUS CONDEMNED.—LUKE xxiii. 13-25.

GOLDEN TEXT: ISA. liii. 8.

WITH this lesson the examination of Jesus before Pilate is resumed. The place of judgment is described by Geikie as a permanent erection, projecting from the front of the Judgment Hall, and easily accessible by a doorway from it. It was called Gabbatha, = a raised place, because raised above the crowd, and the Pavement, because laid with a pavement of coloured stones. Upon this tribunal Pilate again took his seat, and summoned before him the priests and rulers, while a constantly increasing multitude of citizens and pilgrims assembled in the space below (13).

Luke's account must again be supplemented from the other Gospels. He does not refer to the dream of Pilate's wife, the ceremony of washing the hands (Matt. xxvii. 19, 24), the scourging and mockery of Jesus, the "Ecce Homo," the terror of Pilate on hearing mention of the divinity of Jesus, nor the charge of the priests that to release Jesus would prove Pilate an enemy to Cæsar (John xix. 1-15). Let the teacher carefully think of these, and introduce them into the narrative.

14-16. A second time Pilate announces the innocence of Jesus of the charges laid against Him (14, comp. 2). This verdict is the more valuable because confirmed by Herod (15). If this is Pilate's conviction, there is a straight course before him. Will he dare to take it, in spite of the envy and opposition of the priests? He wants to release Jesus; he knows he ought to; has he the courage to do it? Many since Pilate's day have had to decide a similar question, and, alas! have decided it in an equally unsatisfactory manner. He compromises. He will not do all the people demand, nor all his own conscience demands. If he chastise Jesus, will not that satisfy the priests? If he release Him after the chastisement, will not that satisfy his conscience? "I will chastise Him," &c. (16). It was a fatal mistake. It showed him willing to grant even an injustice to please the people. Beware of weak compromises, especially in your treatment of the claims of Jesus. Yield Him all He demands.

17-20. It is not known how the custom here referred to arose. It was probably Jewish in its origin, and may have been a memorial of the deliverance from Egypt, very fittingly celebrated during the Passover Feast. Barabbas (18) is understood by some to have been the son of a Rabbin, as his name suggests. He had been guilty of the very crime (19) with which the priests charged Jesus (2); and had committed murder in the insurrection (Mark xv. 7). According to Matthew (xxvii. 16, 17), it was Pilate who put this man in comparison with Jesus, no doubt as an act of policy. What choice will they make? Probably it was at this time that Pilate retired into the Judgment Hall to receive his wife's message (Matt. xxvii. 19). It made him more desirous to release Jesus; but his absence was the priests' opportunity to stir up the people to ask Barabbas. Hence their choice. It is not wonderful that they should prefer Barabbas to Jesus. A bold man, willing to lead a movement against the hated power of Rome was more to their mind than the Saviour who counselled patient submission. But it was a momentous choice (Acts iii. 14), and proved the hypocrisy of their pretended zeal for Rome (2, 5).

20-25. The excitement and passion of the people increase; and for the first time the awful cry, "Crucify Him" (21) is heard, drowning all Pilate's attempts to speak to the people (20). This third assertion of the innocence of Jesus (23) only aggravates Pilate's guilt in scourging and condemning Him. It was probably at this stage that the scourging took place (John xix. 1). The Roman form of this punishment was unusually severe. The victim was bound in a stooping posture to a post, the bare back exposed to the full force of the cruel blows. He was then beaten with knots of rope, in which were fastened pieces of lead, or sharp-pointed bones. The number of stripes was according to the will of those who inflicted the punishment. So painful was it that the victim sometimes died under the infliction. From the fact that the soldiers who scourged Jesus were the same as those who afterwards mocked Him, we may conclude that the severest punishment was inflicted upon Him. It was when bleeding and faint from this torture that Pilate presented Him before the people (John xix. 5), in hope of moving them to pity. But it was in vain. The mention of "the Son of God" makes him again hesitate, and leads to a further interview with Jesus; but the fear of displeasing Cæsar decides him against his own judgment (John xix. 8-12). The priests have triumphed. Barabbas, the choice of the people, passes out among them, free; Jesus, the rejected Messiah, is delivered to be crucified!

LESSONS.

(1) Pilate's guilt.—He did not hate Jesus; he even wanted to deliver Him. But his weakness made him the tool of the priests. His guilt consisted in condemning One he knew to be innocent, in spite of the warning of his wife's dream, and in doing this because he feared the people. He was without excuse. No ceremony of hand-washing can remove his guilt. He is a sad illustration of the fact that a man may have good desires and good intentions, yet, through want of decision of character, may act wickedly. "He that is not with Me is against Me."

(2) The people's choice.—It is being repeated today by everyone who rejects Jesus, and chooses sin and the world. Which have you chosen?

(3) The unwearied activity of the priests.—They spent a sleepless night. From the time when Jesus was apprehended in the garden they had been busy with three examinations of Jesus before the high priest, two before Pilate, and one before Herod. All this against Jesus. Imitate their activity in working for Jesus.

(4) The unparalleled sufferings of Jesus.—Why endure this so patiently? Was He helpless to deliver Himself? Had He deserved such cruelty? The Golden Text gives the answer. Learn what guilt is by the fact that only such sufferings could atone for it. Learn what his love is from his readiness to endure so much. Are you receiving or rejecting Him?

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Special services at Cwmyniscoy, in connection with Mr. Wintle's work at Pontymoile, commencing Nov. 10.——A two weeks' mission in New Circus, Newcastle-on-Tyne, beginning Nov. 2.——The work of Mr. J. Crofton Rainey at Paignton, S. Devon.——Mr. W. R. Lane's mission at Bournemouth, for men only, from to-day, Friday.——For strength to abstain from intoxicating drink; also for an aged parent, that she may see her need of a Saviour, and be led to Him.

A MISSIONARY EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—Rev. J. Crompton Sowerbutts, of the Stockport (Tiviot Dale) Circuit, is fruitful in expedients for awakening interest in missions; his Missionary Evangelical Alliance at Heaton Moor Chapel is the latest, and one of the most interesting. The happy suggestion occurred to him to gather together representatives of the several churches in the neighbourhood who should do for the locality what the great Missionary Conference recently held in London did for the Protestant world. The result has justified the faith of the promoter. The Bishop of Manchester, Dr. Maclaren, and Rev. Rigby Murray, of the Presbyterian Church, were regretfully compelled to be absent by reason of prior engagements, but the Propagation Society, the Church Missionary Society, the Primitive Methodist, and the New Connexion Missions had their clerical representatives present, who told the story of their respective churches' work in various parts of the world. It was a happy idea successfully carried out.—Methodist Recorder.

AFRICAN MISSIONS AND SLAVERY.—The Stanley and African Exhibition was the scene of an interesting gathering last week, when some hundreds of friends gathered to hear statements on African Missions and the Slave Trade. Lord Kinnaird, who presided, said he thought the time had come when, as Christians, we ought to see what more could be done for the effectual suppression of the vile traffic in human flesh. A number of interesting addresses followed from missionaries and others, but they threw little direct light on the slavery question, being mainly taken up with accounts of missionary progress. Mr. Taylor, of the Church Missionary Society, gave his experiences of the inhuman trade, and told of efforts he had made to cope with it. Mr. Cust repeated Mr. Stanley's dictum that every piece of ivory is steeped in human blood, and charged the French missionaries with encouraging the traffic by buying boys in order to train them. One speaker said the evils of the trade would only disappear with the advent of good roads and railways, so that slaves would not be needed for transport.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-FOURTH SERIES.)

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS—CASE of Mr. LINSELL, of BRAINTREE.

I had lost sight of this patient until a brother of his coming to see me at Coombe Lodge, in April last, reminded me of his recovery, after having been given up as hopeless. "My brother continues quite well. You may make any use you like of his letter." (Mr. R. H. LINSELL, Rayne-road, BRAINTREE, Essex.)

On referring to my consultation book, I find that he was examined by Dr. Brown. The apex of the left lung being affected, and the upper lobe of his right lung.

He had had a cough for six months (which had resisted all remedies), accompanied by expectoration, short breathing, pains in the right side and throat.

For two years this patient took my medicine, at times, leaving it off occasionally, and resuming it. Probably, had he continued with that constant regularity which I am so anxious patients should observe, he would have been thoroughly well in less than half the time.

However, I am glad that he recovered, and to hear that his health has been so well maintained.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS & ASTHMA.

I WILL demonstrate to the whole world, and to sufferers from these unfortunate maladies, how they can be permanently cured, by an entirely New Method of Treatment, without the chance of failure. All afflicted may write with full confidence to Mr. WILLIAMS, 11, Burwood-place, Norfolk-crescent, London, who will send full particulars to any person free of all charge.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 3,500 POOR WAIFS AND STRAYS.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing or ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., WOULD KINDLY MARK ON THEM THEIR VALUE, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

Friends willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End. Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

IN THEIR OWN HOUSES, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they will be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Gymnasium of the Boys' Home in Stepney, E.

DR. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided. The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

SOUTH-WEST LONDON COLLEGE

High-class School for Young Ladies,

Carlton Mansions, Clapham-rise, London, S.W. Principal—Mrs. HALE, A.C.P., F.S.Sc., London.—Modern system of teaching. Visiting masters, resident certificated governesses, with careful personal supervision, and home comforts. Cambridge and other examinations. Special advantages for music and languages. House pleasantly situated in one of the healthiest suburbs of London, replete with every convenience and all modern sanitary improvements. Good garden and tennis. Highly recommended by parents of pupils, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and Rev. D. McEwan, D.D.

LUNHAM HOUSE HOME SCHOOL, Lunham-road, Upper Norwood, S.E. High-class education and the comforts of family life. Careful Christian training. Autumn term commenced September 8.—Principal, Mrs. BRYANT.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.—Superior education for Girls with Christian training. No dancing. Resident English and foreign governesses.—Principal, Mrs. JOHN BRETT, Fern Lea, Upper London-road.

THE PRINCIPAL of a well-established School for Young Ladies, for many years singularly successful, holding testimonials of the highest order from parents, evangelical clergy, and others, has been solicited to place the advantages of earnest Christian training, combined with High School modes of instruction, within reach of parents of good social position, but limited resources, who are unable to meet the usual fees, which will be reduced to 30 or 40 guineas, and made inclusive. Preparation for all examinations. The staff is composed exclusively of Christian teachers, many taking University honours. Liberal diet. Spacious residence, replete with every modern appliance to ensure health and comfort. Delicate girls, and orphaned families, receive exceptional care.

GIRTON, 13, Rose-street, Newgate-street, E.C.

AN APPEAL

To the Young Men's Christian Associations and their Friends in Great Britain and America.

IN March '86 we were permitted to organise the first Y.M.C.A. of Bohemia. The constitution, sanctioned by the Government, is very favourable, and gives the parent society the right to organise branches in any place where we have ten members. The local committees of any Y.M.C.A. in Bohemia are made responsible by the Government to a close corporation of fifteen believing men. In old historic Bohemia, with a population of five and a half millions, the Y.M.C.A. has commenced its beneficent work. The large majority of the young men of this land have no saving knowledge of the truth. What a field for earnest work! The thrilling story of this land of Huss and Jerome is well known. Here is the cradle of the great Reformation. The morning star of the new hope and gospel life was seen here long before it dawned in the land of Luther. Bohemia remembers in tears 1620 and the disastrous battle of the White Mountain. Bitter persecutions nearly extinguished the light here, and drove to violent death or cruel flight more than two-thirds of the population. The spirit of intolerance still reigns in this beautiful country, and our Y.M.C.A. has been denounced again and again by the Ultramontane press. Our society has here a membership of seventy—poor young men, but earnest in their desire to rescue their associates from temptation and sin. Need we say it—the Y.M.C.A. of Prague, a city (with suburbs) of 300,000 souls, needs, ah! so much, a home of its own. Our rented rooms, open every evening, are not at all adequate to the work in hand. We have already a library of 800 volumes. In the proposed house, besides reading-room, lecture hall, &c., we hope to have for young men a coffee-room and simple restaurant under the supervision of a truly converted Christian man. In short, we wish to make the desired house a real centre of genuine rescue work for young men. Any gift, however small, will be very welcome. Let even the poorest give his pence as a thank-offering to the land of Huss. We have already a building fund of £150, but we need £1,500. Confident of your prayers and assistance, and ready to give further information,

ALBERT W. CLARK, President.
JOSEPH SZALATNAY, Vice-President. } Prague, Bohemia.
ALOIS ADLOF, Secretary.

Mr. Charles Fermaud, of Geneva, International General Secretary of Y.M.C.A.'s, and George Williams' Esq., of London, have visited the work in Prague, and are ready to testify to its great importance. Among other friends of the work, to whom also contributions may be sent, we mention the following:—

Secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand; Rev. R. S. Ashton, B.A., Secretary Continental Society, 13, Blomfield-street, London Wall, E.C.; The Christian; Dr. Baedeker; Mrs. Sercombe, Ventnor, I.W.; Rev. T. G. Cunningham, 43, Queen-street, Edinburgh; Mr. T. B. Reynolds, Paris; Rev. F. E. Clark, Pres. Y.P.S.C.E. Boston, U.S.A.; Rev. Dr. Taylor, New York, formerly Liverpool.

TO CHRISTIAN PARENTS.

Dr. & Mrs. GRATTAN GUINNESS desire to recommend to parents seeking for their daughters the combined benefits of education abroad and those of a Christian home, the advantages offered by a German Lady and her daughters, who are both engaged in Christian work.

Frau Gruetz is willing to receive three or four young ladies into her home, where they would obtain motherly care and attention. Fräulein Gruetz, who holds a high class Government certificate, is thoroughly competent to instruct them in all the ordinary branches of education. Dr. and Mrs. Guinness have the pleasure of personally knowing Fräulein Gruetz, through a visit to Harley House, and are confident that any young lady who was privileged to become an inmate of her home could not fail to be exceedingly happy there, and to be greatly benefited by her personal influence and instruction.

Frau Gruetz possesses the advantage of dwelling in a separate house, instead of the usual flat occupied by German families. It is situated in Charlottenburg, a pleasant suburb of Berlin, and is within very easy reach of the city on one hand and Grunewald Forest on the other. Terms two guineas weekly. Further particulars will be supplied by Fräulein Gruetz, who writes and speaks English perfectly, at 4, Verlängerte Schloss Strasse, Charlottenburg, Berlin; or by Mrs. Guinness, Harley House, Bow, London, E.

NOW READY.

THE HERALD OF MERCY ANNUAL VOLUME.

Very Attractively Bound in Strong Illustrated Covers, ONE SHILLING; Cloth Boards, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

The Volume contains Fifty-two Engravings, and abounds with Gospel Stories, Striking Narratives, Choice Extracts, Select Poems, &c., &c.

"Full of everything that can gratify, instruct, and elevate the human heart. It is remarkably cheap. The papers which appear in THE HERALD from month to month are short, pithy, pointed, and interesting. It is intended for humble homes, but it is suited for homes of all kinds. The young will find it interesting, while the aged will find it full of comfort. The minister will find in it many suitable anecdotes and illustrations for his sermons, and the Sabbath-school teacher will find in it something helpful for his work. The Volume is very neatly bound, and would suit admirably for a gift book for Sabbath-school scholars and other young people."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"It is high praise to say that THE HERALD OF MERCY is as good as ever. It is the most interesting of all evangelistic periodicals—full of short striking papers and pointed anecdotes. For lending to cottagers, in town or country, it is most admirable."—Christian Miscellany.

"This Annual Volume has always been a favourite with us. Its sound Gospel teachings, apt illustrations and beautiful pictures, are bright and charming. Those who are desirous of circulating sound Christian literature, cannot do better than help to circulate this shilling book."—Baptist Messenger.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Major G. Ormonde Stoney, Soldier and Evangelist.

As we go to press, Dr. Barnardo is bravely defending his action in the case of the boy Roddy before the High Court of Appeal. The inconsistencies and mutual contradictions of the judgment given in the Divisional Court by the Lord Chief Justice, gave ample occasion for that appeal. The judges propose to hand over this boy to a Roman Catholic institution after he has been for twelve years trained, at school and in Dr. Barnardo's Homes, in the principles of Protestantism. That seems to us to be an iniquitous thing. We reserve detailed comment on the case till after the appeal is heard and decided.

It would be well if all the charges and official utterances of the bishops of the Church of England were characterised by the fearless plain speaking, faithful warning, and earnest protest which marked the recent visitation charge of the Bishop of Liverpool. Dealing with the many social, political, and religious dangers of the day, he besought the assembled clergy never to lose their grasp of those well-proved Christian truths and doctrines which the professing leaders of "modern thought" were putting on the shelf. Let them hold fast the authority, supremacy, and Divine inspiration of the whole Bible, and the old doctrine of the sinfulness of sin and the corruption of human nature. The ceremonial and sensuous type of Christianity so much in vogue would never satisfy the soul. There must be true private religion as well as public worship. The necessity of a better observance of the Lord's Day was specially insisted upon, the clergy being exhorted to resist the persistent attacks upon its sanctity, and to warn the working classes against those who, whilst posing as their friends in this matter, were really their worst enemies. "Whatever the bad habits of the working classes in large parishes, they will never be cured by organising modes of breaking the Fourth Commandment."

Finally, Dr. Ryle urged his brethren in the ministry to hold fast the great Protestant principles of the Reformation, and to resist all attempts at re-union with Rome. Owing partly to the untiring zeal of Rome, and partly to the spurious liberality which infected society, "the edge of the old British feeling about Protestantism seemed blunted and dull"; and he solemnly warned his hearers that the times required them to be awake and on their guard against the Christ-dishonouring system and doctrines of Rome:—

> I beseech you to realise the painful fact that the Protestantism of this country is gradually ebbing away, and I entreat you as Christians and patriots to resist the growing tendency to forget the blessings of the English Reformation...The novel teaching and ritual of modern days have gradually familiarised people with every distinctive doctrine and practice of Romanism—the real presence, the mass, auricular confession and priestly absolution, the sacerdotal character of the ministry, the monastic system, and a histrionic, showy style of public worship—and the natural result is that many simple people see no mighty harm in downright genuine Popery.

The Daily Chronicle relates the particulars of a singular experiment which recently took place in Palestine, owing to a question having arisen in regard to Bishop Colenso's statement that the children of Israel assembled in the valley between Ebal and Gerizim could not hear the curses and blessings from the heights of the two mountains. A party of travellers ascended each of the two mountains, while the remainder stayed in the valley, and it was found that the portions of Scripture read upon the heights near the summits could be easily heard by those below.

In the current issue of The Nineteenth Century Mr. Gladstone writes on "Mr. Carnegie's Gospel of Wealth," the distinguishing doctrine of which is that the rich should give away their money while they live, rather than leave or bequeath it at death. Against charitable bequests, Mr. Gladstone brings the following charge:—

> The practice offers a ready and seductive mode of escape from that exercise of self-denial which is required in order to part on any adequate scale with our means while we are alive. Next, an evil tradition obtains among us that assigns to these posthumous dispositions of property a character of virtue to which they are in no way entitled.

Mr. Gladstone not only cordially approves Mr. Carnegie's teaching, but makes a practical suggestion. Twenty-five years ago, under the presidency of Lord Carlisle, a Universal Beneficent Society was formed, of persons who bound themselves in honour to give away from year to year at least a certain fixed proportion of their incomes. It was an exclusive organisation, and has ceased to exist. The suggestion is that this experiment, on a broader basis, should receive another trial, and Mr. Gladstone holds himself in readiness to do all in his power to promote a practical beginning. Spontaneous generosity need not be curtailed through such a plan as is proposed, so we cannot but trust that the outcome of the overture will be to the advantage of rich and poor and for the glory of God.

In these days of telegraphs and travel, "murder will out," even when committed in the deepest wilds of darkest Africa. The revolting story of cannibalism told two years ago in connection with Mr. Stanley's rear column was heard with universal horror, but was generally discredited. Now the story is reaffirmed in all its most hideous details, with many added facts as to inhuman cruelty on the part of the leader of the rear column. It is a dreadful commentary on our boasted Christianity and civilisation, and if the facts are established they will smirch the fair fame of this nation for generations to come.

Speaking recently in London at a meeting of the Association of Sanitary Inspectors, Dr. Richardson drew a remarkable contrast between the condition of England to-day and that of half a century ago, when children were worked without limit or pity; and, after stating that to-day the poorest inmates of asylums received better treatment than kings and princes were then able to command, the Doctor went on to say that the death-rate throughout the whole island ought not to exceed 15 per 1000. What a light does this cast upon "slum life," seeing that in some of the overcrowded districts inhabited by the poor the death-rate has been recorded as high as 50 per 1000.

Strong condemnations of the Russian prison system have appeared in The Fortnightly Review. Since these have been controverted, the Editor has requested a Russian, of noble birth, to give his experiences. This he does in the current number. For holding opinions adverse to arbitrary government, he was, without a preferred charge, sent to a fortress as a University student at the age of twenty-two. When at length tried, he was acquitted; but, coming again under suspicion, not of any overt act, but of not having renounced his political predilections, he was again imprisoned. For eighteen out of the twenty-four hours of the day his cell was in total darkness. Forbidden intercourse, even with his keepers, he almost lost the use of his speech and hearing, and after seven years his nervous state approached insanity. Since that time he has been thirteen years an exile in Siberia, and confirms what has been written of atrocities, and outrages on innocent women.

In the same Review there is a reprint of an address delivered by the traveller, Mr. H. H. Johnston, before the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce. It will give encouragement to those who have had their fears respecting missionary work in tropical Africa. He maintains that with foresight and care its climate may be made as comfortable to dwell in as India; that Arabs may be usefully employed; that Mohammedan propagandism on their part need not be feared; that they and Negroes will return a reward for friendly approaches; that the men sent out should be "sparse" young men, but not younger than twenty-one; and that all white men should regard alcohol as an insidious and deadly poison. With these precautions bright hopes are held out of a commercial and Christian development.

It is not only in our own country that betting and gambling are becoming a grave national disorder. It was stated a few months ago that scarcely a day passes in Paris without someone being charged with having robbed his master in order to indulge in this vice. The Paris correspondent of The Standard now writes that nearly four million francs have been distributed among the various charities as the produce of the two per cent. tax upon the money staked at the betting establishments; that secret betting agencies are on the increase; and that the evil is spreading amongst the humbler classes of French society. The above system of taxation, however, defeats its own object; for the social and domestic havoc which gambling creates among clerks, servants, working men, and others generally causes more poverty than can be thus relieved. In France, as in England, the remedy must be sought in the educating and raising of public opinion on the subject; in the setting of a better example by the rich and titled classes, and in individual resistance of the vice under whatever apparently harmless form it may be disguised.

Dr. Parker on Preaching.

To a large, representative, and very appreciative audience, Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, gave an address on the Modern Sermon, at the Memorial Hall, on Tuesday week. The address was full of telling and suggestive points, and was altogether an able production. Dr. Parker strongly condemned sermons that are mere displays of intellectual energy or collocations of pretty nothings, and contended that more use ought to be made of the sermons of the great preachers of all churches. More attention ought to be given to preaching in college training. We give the closing paragraphs of the address:—

The sermon that shall answer such inquiries must be composed in full view of the Cross. On this point I wish to bear my testimony in an age of literary pretence and idolised reason. I will never consent to reduce the cross to the level of an illustration of moral excellence—the pattern of an obedience which amounted to little more than the tragic conquest of its own reluctance. To me the cross is not the exhibition of human submission to the Divine will. It is not Man who is excelling all other men; it is God who is saving the world.

I have no wish to be hard upon my fellow preachers; they will bear me witness that I have not been wanting in brotherly sympathy; but no consideration shall restrain me from saying that the minister who preaches Christ merely as the highest and sublimest moral example has no right or title to occupy an evangelical pulpit. He is a Unitarian without a Unitarian's dignity. From a moral point of view, I say, All honour to the Unitarian who uncomplainingly pays the penalty of his convictions. From a moral point of view I would go on to say, Shame be to the man who submits a theory for a Revelation, and who thus drags down a historically orthodox pulpit, and turns it into an instrument for the propagation of a heresy which it was erected to confute and denounce. No blessing can rest on such a ministry. It may be verbally brilliant, but in the soul of it there is a lie against the Holy Ghost. Out of our churches and colleges I would eradicate every thought that turns away from the cross as other than the spectacle of God in Christ dying for the sins of the world. I do not want clever young men in our ministry; I want burningly earnest young preachers. There was never so much need of them as there is to-day. In order to preach Christ they must first know Him; they must have been crucified with Him; they must have known the fellowship of his sufferings and the power of his resurrection.

My young brethren, I offer you a counsel which has been dearly bought, and I pray you to receive it at least for consideration. I have seen life in most of its aspects; I have tasted the bitterest sorrow ever drunk by human lips. I have worked long and hard, and have never eaten the bread of idleness. I have known the mystery, the shame, and the anguish of sin. I have hewn out to myself cisterns—broken cisterns; that can hold no water. Looking back upon all the chequered way, I have to testify that the only preaching which has done me good is the preaching of a Saviour, who bore my sins in his own body on the tree; and the only preaching by which God has enabled me to do good to others is the preaching in which I have held up my Saviour, not as a sublime example, but as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Ere since by faith I saw the stream
His flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die.

"In Darkest England."

General Booth's way out of Darkest England is a scheme on a scale so vast as to command attention to the calamitous condition of "the sunken tenth," and to his magnificent conception for improving it. The enormous difficulties in the way are no reason for discouragement; on the contrary, their very enormity proves the necessity of their removal. It is no small temptation to pass out of a region of opposition or contempt into one of high appreciation and applause. Those who most clearly apprehend this phase of the situation may well withhold criticism, and give themselves to prayer that this great endeavour to "raise the fallen, cheer the faint, heal the sick, and lead the blind," may be placed and kept on lines which give God his right place, and which consequently He can bless.

It will be extremely difficult to do this at the head of a movement which gathers in its train men of all beliefs and misbeliefs and disbeliefs, but there are treasures of love and wisdom and power in God sufficient to overcome all these; and if there is one thing in which all Christians can agree throughout the world, surely it may be found in those words of the Lord Jesus: "It is more blessed to give than to receive"; and in Paul's record of his conference with the elder Apostles at Jerusalem—"Only they would that I should remember the poor: the same which I also was forward to do."

This new scheme of the Salvation Army is just now on the crest of the wave. Within the last week General Booth has received the good wishes of the Heir Apparent, the benediction of Cardinal Manning, the eloquent advocacy of Archdeacon Farrar, the commendation by circular of many leading ministers of different denominations, and the conditional offer of a thousand pounds by a well-known actor, besides endless suggestions from sympathising friends. We hope the General is not preparing for himself and his scheme the woe that is said to come to those of whom all men speak well. We rather prefer to think that everybody is feeling that something great ought to be done, and that the man who essays to do it deserves to be helped.

The circular letter to "the clergy and pastors of the British churches," signed by Canon Farrar and representatives of several evangelical denominations, says:—

That the proposals made by General Booth should have a fair and adequate trial seems to us of the highest importance to the nation. We welcome, therefore, his invitation to the friends of the poor to furnish him with that financial help without which he can take no step forward in this necessarily costly experiment. The suggestion that the churches should take an independent line in this matter, and make an opportunity for their people to join in providing the sum required, seems to us a good one. We should be greatly gratified if any considerable number of our brethren, of whose true interest in the needy we have abundant proof in their own work, were led to join in this course.

We sincerely trust that the needful support will speedily be forthcoming, so that General Booth will be able to show what he can do for the despairing classes of our large cities. The winter is rapidly advancing, and in a very short time the perennial cry of the poor and neglected will increase in volume and intensity.

We receive communications from various quarters expressing hope that contributions to existing operations on behalf of the poor will not be diverted to the new scheme. To do this would indeed be folly. General Booth's book has stirred the country, and may well be expected to open up entirely new sources of supply. The present institutions, so far from being diminished, ought surely to share in these increased supplies.

Reconstruction or Destruction?

On the occasion of his induction recently to the office of Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis in the Presbyterian College, London, Rev. John Skinner delivered an address on "The Critical Reconstruction of Old Testament History." He said great things for criticism, which he declared to be "the art of reading the Bible with eyes free from prejudice." But, as he also said, "Criticism lays great stress on the principle of development," it is obvious that, if we would read "with eyes free from prejudice," we must exclude the supernatural element from the Old Testament. True, the Professor holds that "in accepting critical conclusions one does not need to accept the doctrine that miracles never happen;" but, nevertheless, the fact remains that the "conclusions" are arrived at by strictly naturalistic methods of reasoning, the Old Testament being treated as if He of whom Moses and the Prophets wrote had never come, and without recognising the blessed influence the various books have exercised in the world during the past two thousand years.

This destructive work is now magniloquently described as "reconstruction," and those who do not know the depths of criticism are told that "it will make the Old Testament an organism instinct with life in every fibre, with a meaning in every part." In our judgment, the critics overestimate the importance of their endeavours as well as altogether misstate their purpose. The Divine Head of the Church gave them no such commission as they are intent upon discharging. With Him the Old Testament was beyond the sphere of controversy, as is clear from the fact that, on a memorable occasion, "beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself." The Old Testament was a living organism then, and, if we use it as Christ and his Apostles did, we shall find it the same to-day, and esteem it not one whit the less because it is becoming fashionable to question its marvels and tone down its statements.

We cannot for a moment understand how men who receive Christ and his teaching can hesitate, with implicit confidence, to accept the Old Testament, wherein God's earlier dealings with mankind are recorded, and his gracious promises and foreshadowings of redemption are set forth.

LIFE, LIGHT, AND LOVE.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

JOHN i. 19.

II. THE SECOND DAY; CHRIST-DESIGNATION (29-34).—"The next day John seeth Jesus coming to him." He was probably coming straight from the scene of the temptation. For forty days He had been alone, with no companionship save that of wild beasts, amid the sterile hills which stretch for miles on either side of the Dead Sea. Directly John saw Him, he knew Him. "This is He of whom I said, He that cometh after me is become before me, for He was before me." How did John know Him?

It is probable that, though cousins, they had not met till some six weeks before. John had spent his years in the seclusion of the deserts, Jesus in the highlands of Galilee. Therefore John said, "I knew Him not." Was it one of the providential arrangements of the only wise God, that the Christ and his forerunner never met until Jesus came to Jordan to be baptised of John, lest it should ever be said they were acting in collusion? Or even if John may have known Him as his cousin (i.e., after the flesh), yet he knew Him not as the Baptizer with the Holy Ghost, or the Son of God. But He who sent him to baptize with water had revealed to him a sacred sign by which he should recognise the Lord whom he announced. For that sign he scanned each face as it emerged from the waters of baptism. Thousands passed through his hands, but as yet he had not beheld it, and the months seemed long, as they slowly passed away.

At last Jesus presented Himself for baptism. John would have hindered Him, indeed "was hindering Him." He, doubtless, knew of the events which had preceded His birth, had heard of that Holy Thing which was to be born, was familiar with his blameless, holy life, and desired, therefore, to debar Him from a rite which was a confession of sin. He felt that he had himself more need to be baptized as a sinner, than to administer the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins to Him, who was, so far as observation went, sinless.

His objections were, however, silenced by the appeal to him to do his part in bringing in the everlasting righteousness, which Daniel identified with the mission of the Messiah. "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

It was probably the custom that the candidate for John's baptism, either audibly or silently, should confess his sins ere he submitted to the sacred rite. But in this case, having no sins of his own, our Lord would probably make a vicarious confession, confessing the sins of the nation, with which, there and then, as the sacrificed lamb he identified himself. It was the Jewish custom to set apart four days previously the lamb which was to be sacrificed in the Passover, and this may have been the symbol of this solemn act of our Lord's baptism in the river Jordan, the river of judgment.

As he emerged from the waters of baptism, the long-expected sign was given. The Spirit descended on Him from heaven like a dove. We cannot but recall the ancient record of the deluge, and the ark, and the dove which found no place for her rest. Here at last there was a home in which the Dove-like Spirit might take up an abode. Here, at least, was one heart in which He, who had been long an exile, might rest. From the waste of waters He came to the sacred Ark.

Twice over we are told that "He abode on Him." No fitful enduement this! No transient baptism! No ephemeral experience! For us, as for Him, there is an abiding experience to be enjoyed—an experience of spiritual grace which breaks on us, not to wane as in the case of some of the Old Testament heroes, but to increase in ever-growing power from year to year, until we are filled unto all the fulness of God.

We may not stay to note the energy with which the Spirit drove Him into the wilderness to be tempted. How marvellous that union of brooding gentleness and irresistible driving force! As if the blessed Spirit—who had waited with the patience of God for four thousand years, while in one dispensation after another man was continually overcome by the tempter—now that the Second Man was come, impelled Him to the victory which He foreknew. It was from this conflict that He returned on this second day.

For six weary weeks the Baptist had eagerly scanned the faces of the crowds to discover that face. But hitherto in vain. At last, on this memorable day, he descried it—worn with conflict and fasting, but radiant with victory; and as he saw it he announced the Christ: "This is He of whom I spake. The same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. Behold the Lamb of God, which beareth away the sin of the world."

Dean Milman suggests that when John, beholding Jesus as He came to him, said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" he alluded to flocks of lambs, intended for the forthcoming Passover, then passing from the rich pastures of Perea to Jerusalem by the ford near the scene of the Baptist's labours. But surely there is a deeper thought. John was clearly a deep student of Isaiah's prophecies. He cannot but have been deeply familiar with that chapter which reads like a fifth Gospel, as it foretells how the Servant of the Lord would be led as a lamb to the slaughter, an allusion which, of course, was based on the offering of the morning and evening lamb, and on the great Paschal Feast, which lay at the base of the national history.

We cannot stay to trace the complete analogy between the lambs and the Lamb, between the Passover and the supreme event of our Redemption. The points of likeness and contrast are deeply interesting. But we must let this witness of the Holy Ghost, through those human lips, have its due weight with us. Evidently the main aspect in which we are to view our Divine Lord is in his sacrificial character. "The Lamb as it had been slain" must be beheld both here and hereafter, in this world and in all worlds. Not his character, however fair; not his words, however much light they cast on the mysteries of life and death; not his miracles, however strong their testimony to his Divine mission; but his appointment to bear the sin of the world, this is the primary aspect in which we are to behold Him.

Look into these words; the Gospel glistens in them, as the whole sun in a single dewdrop. They tell us that the sacrifice of the cross is the outcome of the thought and preparation of the infinite God. Jesus is the Lamb of God. They remind us that his propitiation for sin is not for ours only, but for the whole world. They give a clue to the source of that mysterious anguish which at times overwhelmed Him. They describe the attitude which we should ever adopt of beholding Him—an attitude by which we are able to appropriate the nutriment of his flesh and blood, of which the paschal supper was a type. O blessed Lamb what shall we say of Thee or to Thee? Words fail. Thou wast made sin for us. Thou hast washed us from our sins in thy blood. Thou hast put away sin by the sacrifice of Thyself. Thou art longing that every soul of man should know and rejoice in thy yearning love, thy glorious work. We praise, and adore, and worship Thee. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!

But remember ever to unite the double burden of John's preaching. We need not only blood, but fire. It is much to be justified, but we need to be sanctified; much to know of the atoning death, but we need union with the Lamb in his resurrection life; much to have the blood sprinkled on the inner shrine, but we need that the Shekinah fire should burn there with quenchless power; much to have the baptism of water, but at the best that is negative, and we need something positive, searching, quickening, and God-like.

After all, John was right. Christ is the greater Baptizer. Beyond death and the grave He received the Spirit, that He might shed Him forth. And now He stands among us whom He has redeemed, eager that, having washed us in his blood, He may complete what He has begun with that holy baptism of which John spake, and which is as much our privilege as the cleansing of the blood. Ah! brethren and sisters, we have need to be baptized of Him. Not the blood without the fire; not the fire apart from the blood. Not the Christ of Calvary only, but the Christ of the throne. Not pardon alone, but deliverance and salvation.

But let us remember that just as Jesus could not be manifested to Israel, until John had come baptizing in water (31); so it is still. John the Baptist must still do his work in the soul. And only when there has been repentance and confession of sin, which submission to John's baptism signified, is a sinner prepared to receive the Saviour. There is profound truth in that saying of McCheyne, "Only a broken-hearted sinner can receive a crucified Christ."

This suggests a very serious question to many who have no clear consciousness of Christ, no glad realisation of his presence, no rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory. May not this lack arise from their not having entered into the meaning of those preliminary conditions which were represented by the Baptist? Only as we know the sinfulness of sin, and the preciousness of the atoning blood of Christ, can we apprehend the power of his resurrection and rejoice in the hope of his coming and his kingdom. May God the Holy Spirit make us a people prepared for the Lord (Luke i. 17).

III. THE THIRD DAY; DISCIPLE-DESERTION (35-37).—On the third day John again looked wistfully and eagerly on Jesus as He walked. It was perhaps the last time those eyes were to behold Him. Again he designated Jesus as the Lamb of God; but there was a significance in his words which was instantly detected by the two disciples who stood beside him. He meant by those words to transfer their allegiance from him to his Lord. Henceforth they were to behold Him. So at least they seem to have understood him. "They followed Jesus."

As the preacher looked on their retreating forms, and realised that his work was done, and that henceforth all the crowds would follow them and ebb away, did he have a feeling of jealousy or regret? Evidently not. Or if there were a momentary sense of desolation and loneliness, it must have been instantly wiped out by a great sense of joy. To quote his own matchless words, "This my joy therefore is fulfilled" (iii. 29).

It is sad to see the crowds depart; to note the drying of the brook whose waters were so sweet, the ebbing of the tide, the waning of the day; to watch the falling leaves which leave the trees to nakedness; but, where the soul has learnt to live in Jesus and for Him, it is not so hard to die to all these things, because the Lord has become its light and its salvation, the strength of its life and its everlasting joy.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

A SERIES of meetings has been held at Leicester in connection with this Mission. At a conference, on November 1, of workers and delegates from various branches, reports were given telling of much blessing at various places. Regret was expressed that long and irregular hours of work hinder greatly the attendance of the men at the meetings. A public meeting was held in the Temperance Hall. On Sunday afternoon and evening, large gatherings were held. After the evening meeting, several professed to decide for Christ. The work at Leicester is not confined to the mission-hall; the Misses Walker visit the goods sheds every week, and conduct services at the dinner hour, which are much appreciated.

A conference of branches in the London District was held last week at the Railway Mission-hall, Wandsworth-road. A branch of the Mission has been formed at Dartford. At Newcastle-on-Tyne a Bible-class for the men at that large station will shortly be commenced by Mrs. Clapham. The work of the Mission is extending, and the men are coming in still larger numbers under its influence. Its work is now more necessary than ever, owing to the constantly increasing traffic on our railways, which means longer hours of duty, and still further curtailment of the men's spare time. Cases are constantly met with where men have been on duty for fifteen, sixteen, and sometimes seventeen hours. Sunday work, too, exercises a very demoralising influence spiritually.

THE OPIUM TRADE.—In view of the proposed great Conference in London on this subject next spring, it is most desirable that literature setting forth the evils of the traffic should be widely circulated. All friends of national righteousness ought to secure a packet of the telling "Anti-Opium Tracts," published by Messrs. Dyer Bros. Paternoster-square, London, E.C., price 1s. 6d. per 100, post free.

SECULAR USES OF CHAPEL PROPERTY.—A case of considerable importance was decided last week in the Queen's Bench Division. The trustees of a Baptist Chapel at Hornsey were called upon to contribute towards making a road, but urged exemption, on the ground that the building was devoted to public worship, and therefore not liable to be rated. It was shown, however, that some portions of the premises were used for other purposes; there was a hall, in which a bazaar had been held, and concert performances had been given. The decision of the magistrates—that having been used for secular purposes, the premises were not exempt from rates—was upheld by the Court. The Daily Chronicle remarks: "Unless the appeal be carried further, it may now be considered as certain that, under the conditions indicated, neither bazaars, concerts, nor any form of secular entertainment which realises money can be permitted in chapels without incurring serious pecuniary liability."

A Village "People's Hall."

THURSDAY last week was a red-letter day in the historical calendar of the little Gloucestershire village of Bisley. It had already passed through one notable experience when on Easter Monday "Sister Amelia" was installed as the presiding genius of Wesley House—the Convalescent Home for the very poor of Soho, which Mr. Josiah Nix, of the West London Mission, had received as a gift from God through the medium of a sympathetic Christian friend. As we noted last week, Sister Amelia recently told something of her Bisley work at Princes Hall, to a deeply interested audience. That work seems to embrace all the departments of a fully equipped medical mission, and wonderfully successful it has been.

But there was yet one lack to be supplied. The villagers stood much in need of some place where all could meet on common ground, as a rallying spot for the social and spiritual life of the inhabitants. No doubt there are the parish church, and one or more chapels, but the uses to which such buildings are put, either in town or country, are very limited. We believe it was the lack of proper accommodation for Sister Amelia's mothers' meeting that moved Mr. Nix to pray to God for such a room; the answer has far exceeded the scope of the original prayer. It is nothing new or strange for Mr. Nix to have his prayers answered in the most direct and unmistakable way. It was thus he got the Convalescent Home; and it was thus he got Sister Amelia—"the lady with the black bonnet and white strings." Those who want to know all about this should write to Mr. Nix, at Wicklif House, Fitzroy-square, N.W., for a copy of a little penny pamphlet, "The Story of a Convalescent Home." Somebody ought to send a copy of it to Professor Tyndall, who has thrown such scientific scorn on the benighted people who expect answers to their prayers.

As we say, Mr. Nix prayed to God for this hall and he was guided to take counsel with a friend, who at once supplied the answer to the prayer and the accommodation of which Bisley stood in need. He gave Mr. Nix an iron hall, with all its appointments; this hall was moved to Bisley straightway, and erected in the garden attached to Wesley House. On Thursday last week it was formally opened, and dedicated to the free use of the people of Bisley. Mr. Nix chartered a third-class saloon from the Great Western Railway Company, and took down a little company of friends from London for the occasion; it included Mr. and Mrs. Price Hughes, Mrs. Sheldon Amos, and several of the Sisters of the People. A very hearty—not to say jolly—contingent from Oxford (whence our friend Nix hails) joined the party at Swindon. A drive of three miles from Stroud landed the visitors at the village, which is certainly set on a hill; the top of the spire of Bisley parish church is said to be nearer the sky than that of any other spire in England.

Luncheon, provided in the village "Court House," was the first acceptable item on the programme for the day. Then Mrs. Price Hughes unlocked the door of the neat and comfortable iron room, which was crowded in a trice. Mr. James Nix, of Oxford, offered what may be called the dedication prayer. Mrs. Hughes addressed the villagers and the visitors in very hearty and sympathetic terms. Her womanly words conquered the hearts of the people at once. Mr. Hughes had some timely and helpful words to say about the exigencies of village life, and about the aims of Mr. Nix and his friends in placing the building at the disposal of the people of Bisley. He stated that the expenses of removal were some £150, and in the name of Mr. Nix he appealed that this amount should be wiped off, so that the place could start fair and free. Mingled with his remarks were much Gospel appeal and exposition, and the opening meeting was in every way a genuine success.

A steady rain had in the meantime set in, but that did not prevent the hall being crowded again for the evening meeting, when Mr. COX, of Leicester, presided. Mr. JOSIAH NIX made a statement of the leading facts connected with the planting of the Convalescent Home, the work of Sister Amelia, and the securing of this "People's Hall." He told his village friends, to the tune of rousing and repeated cheers, that the place was meant to be used for the benefit of the whole village, without fee, and without any restriction, excepting such as might be necessary for the common welfare. If the church or chapel people wanted the hall, it was at their disposal; if the village clubs or benefit societies wanted to meet in it rather than resort to the public-house, they would be made right welcome; if the natives desired to meet and discuss any questions affecting their temporal or social or spiritual well-being, the People's Hall was at their service. Let it be used, and used all the time. Of course Sister Amelia will now meet her mothers there, and there will be plenty of Gospel work and temperance work and such other sorts of work for the good of the Bisley folk as Christian ingenuity may suggest. It is evident that Bisley is not going to be allowed to go to sleep this coming winter, as so many of our quiet country villages will do. An earnest desire was expressed that the five public-houses should all come to grief, and to this end it was also desired that all the publicans should be converted at an early stage of the hall's history. We feel, somehow, that strong faith will be needed to bring about such a consummation, but there is nothing of the impossible or the Utopian about it.

During the evening Mr. COX, the chairman, was frequently on his feet, but never without letting pearls of poesy drop prodigally from his lips; but he backed his words with gifts towards the debt, so that he was practical as well as poetic. Other friends spoke, among them Mr. PRICE HUGHES, who was in excellent form. He kept the crowded audience in the best of humour as he descanted on the special advantages and necessities of village life in England; or contrasted it with the deeper problems that present themselves to the Christian reformer in London; or acted the part of debt collector, in which latter capacity he has become so audaciously famous. Before the time for closing arrived, Mr. Nix was able to announce that the whole sum asked for had been given or promised, with a few pounds to the good; then the excited gathering flung up its collective cap, and it was felt that the Bisley People's Hall was fairly launched on its mission of love and mercy.

The Convalescent Home adjoining has received and sheltered some 130 of the Soho poor during the bygone season. Many of these have declared that Wesley House was to them the very gate of paradise; some have been so extravagant in their praise as to say it was heaven itself; and, for those whose lot is cast in the dreary purlieus of some parts of Soho, such heresy is perfectly pardonable. The house has accommodation for some twenty-five residents, and it will be partly used in the winter months as a place of rest for weary workers.

The London-cum-Oxford band, that had travelled down to Bisley in the forenoon amid bright sunshine, drove back in the evening to Stroud through a howling tempest of wind and rain; but the conviction that they had assisted in the inception of a splendidly promising institution made them light of heart, despite all the fury of the elements. We sincerely wish that each village in Great Britain had a man of great heart and robust faith like Mr. Josiah Nix to cater for its welfare. We believe he has some further schemes for the benefit of the Soho poor simmering in his head. For one thing, he is anxious to get a Seaside Home for the children; no doubt at the proper time God will move some generous heart to give it.

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

THE Figueras Mission has just celebrated a joyful event in the opening of the new hall and schools. Through God's goodness a "House of Prayer" has been provided in which to worship Him in "spirit and in truth," free from fear of expulsion, such as in times past was brought to bear by Roman Catholic landlords. This Mission has long made great efforts for the progress of the Gospel in Figueras, and in the surrounding villages. The services and schools have had a good and regular attendance, but one great obstacle stood in the way—the hall and schools being situated on the outskirts of the town, which circumstance prevented results being in proportion to the labour spent. All efforts to obtain buildings in a central position proved unavailing. But now have been secured a fine hall and schools, in an excellent situation, to be the property of the Mission, thus removing necessity in future for English friends to pay yearly rent to the Romanists for either building or ground.

The edifice consists of a substantial hall and schools. It is well lighted with fine large gaslights inside and at the street doors. Both hall and schools were pronounced by an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society to be, as regards architecture, solidity, and capaciousness, unsurpassed by any Protestant place of worship seen by him in Spain.

The dedication service took place on the evening of October 30. Converts from Vilabertran, Cabanes, Castillon, Rosas, San Pedro Pescador, Cruellas, Bisbal, Espolla, Llansa, Junquera, and other parts of the province, were present at the opening. In spite of heavy rain (unusual in this climate), the doors were no sooner open than the building was filled with an interested congregation. Don Luis Lopez Rodriguez opened the solemn service with prayer, entreating the Divine presence and blessing. He then explained the object of the gathering, and read messages of congratulation, and regret of unavoidable absence, from Revs. G. Gulick, of San Sebastian, C. Carlos Araugo, of Saragossa, Empaytaz, and Brown, of Barcelona, Martinez de Castillo, of Reus, and other friends. Don G. M. Gonzalez, who represented the Barcelona Christians, gave an address on the sufficiency of the Gospel, followed by Don Juan Morenza on the difference between the doctrines of the Church of Rome and the Church of Christ. Don Francisco Cortadellas dwelt on the importance of Christian education for the young. Don Alejandro Lopez Rodriguez spoke of the living power of God's Word, and Pastor Lopez-Rodriguez closed with an address on Salvation by Faith in Jesus only. The intervals were filled up with special hymns printed for the occasion in book form, with an engraving of the hall. The singing was wonderfully good, and the audience were delighted with a chorale, sung by the school children, accompanied by musical instruments. Notwithstanding the crowd in the street, perfect order was maintained, without the aid of two policemen (incognito) kindly sent by the mayor in case of disturbance. Over a thousand persons were present, and crowds outside were driven away by the rain.

All classes were represented, from the judge, lawyers, and bankers, to poor townspeople and humble mountain peasants. On leaving, they inspected the schools, and received copies of Testaments, El Heraldo, tracts, and illustrated leaflets for children.

The Evolution, a Liberal paper, has thus referred to the opening of the hall:—"On Thursday night was celebrated, in the presence of a large assemblage, the inauguration of the new evangelical hall and schools. Addresses were delivered by several pastors, and there was fine hymn-singing between. The new building is very spacious and well appointed, the architecture being in good taste."

The Weekly, a Roman Catholic newspaper, said:—"The Protestants inaugurated last night, with great solemnity, their evangelical chapel that, at considerable cost, has been constructed in the centre of the new street, on ground bought from a Roman Catholic! For some time they have held day and night schools in the upper part of the building, and these are very well attended. The Catholics, who have it in their power, have been backward, in not opening a free school in front of the Protestants, as they have done in other towns of less importance than Figueras."

The sum of £680 is still required to complete payment of contract. It is of the first importance that the debt should speedily be paid. The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Rev. J. C. Stewart-Mathias, Cossington Rectory, Leicester.

THE BRIAR AND THE ROSE.*

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit...Ye must be born again."—JOHN iii. 6, 7.
"With his stripes we are healed."—ISAIAH liii. 5.

A BRIAR growing in a wood
One time we haply found,
Transplanted it to goodly soil,
In cultured garden ground.

Alike through autumn, winter, spring,
We tended it with care;
The Briar firmly set its roots
And throve and flourished there.

The struggling branches reached afar,
The leaves were young and green;
And presently the early buds
Came peeping out between.

Yet, notwithstanding all the care,
And watchful, patient skill,
The summer blossoms plainly told
It was a Briar still.

Wild Roses, sweet and large indeed,
The healthy branches bore;
With shame and sorrow we confessed—
"Wild Roses, nothing more!"

* * * *

Yet close beside it, all the while,
The choicest Rose-tree grew;
Sweet scented, of luxurious bloom,
And delicate in hue.

A bright example, there it stood,
In all its native state;
Alas! the Briar did not heed,
Nor could it imitate.

Culture, example, failed alike
Old nature to remove;
New life they never could impart,
They only could improve.

* * * *

At length the Master came. He took
A keen and sheathless blade,
And in the peerless Rose-tree first
A sharp incision made.

And next the Briar's branches, too,
His hand of power must feel;
They fall before Him, one by one,
Who wounded but to heal.

Yet once again—the self-same hand
Must be in grace applied,
Within the Briar's bleeding stem
A bleeding graft must hide.

* * * *

O wounded Rose! O blessed Hand!
Thy sacred secrets tell,
And teach our hearts to understand
The living parable.

* * * *

We came again. O vision fair,
Which dawns upon our sight!
The Briar crowned with tender leaves,
And Roses pure and white.

O wondrous change! Each tender bloom,
To rich perfection brought,
Bears witness to the mighty work
The Master's hand hath wrought.

Yet all the grace and beauty flow
Not upward from the root,
The comeliness belongs alone
To the engrafted shoot.

New blossoms on the gentle breeze
Unwonted fragrance threw;
New beauty and new grace were seen,
Because the life was new.

And evermore, the laden boughs
Bend lower to the ground,
As if with deep humility
Their loveliness were bound.

E'en now, if from the ancient stem
A sturdy sapling spring,
We find it, even as before,
A prickly, worthless thing.

And quickly must it be destroyed.
The Roses will not thrive;
If wilful negligence consent
To keep the thief alive.

At first 'tis easy to remove,
But should it long remain,
The blessed Master needs must come
And take the knife again.

But, wholly yielded to his will,
The tree in beauty grows,
Till none the Briar-life discern,
But only see the Rose.

* * * *

O patient Master, even thus
Thy work of grace is done;
Two natures, even to the end,
And yet the life is one.

The prickly thorn, subdued by Thee,
Will waken into flower,
And, even through infirmity,
Will magnify thy power.

The self-life at its secret root
A Briar still will be;
But grace and glory both are ours,
Through union, Lord, with Thee.

MR. WILMOT BROOKE, of the Niger Mission, has been down with fever. He and Mrs. Brooke have gone to the Canaries for the benefit of their health.

KENSINGTON Y.W.C.A.—Miss Vigo, the hon. secretary, reports much good being done at 93, Earl's Court-road, by close contact with young women in their needs, difficulties, and dangers. Social evenings are tending to deepen the interest of members in missionary effort. A bright flower, with verse of Scripture attached, gains admission to workrooms, where toilers seem truly grateful for a kind word amid hurry and bustle. The financial burden often presses heavily upon those who would gladly give individual attention to spiritual work.

BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL is intended for friendless and homeless sick members of evangelical churches in that city and its neighbourhood, and for foreigners who are not Roman Catholics. Among other cases which might be mentioned as showing how the hospital is valued, is that of a young Swiss who, after months of suffering from consumption, died, leaving a good testimony of having found Christ as his Saviour. The sum sent for the aged poor has been carefully distributed. Additional details and copies of the report may be had from Miss A. Thackrah, 33, Woodbury-grove, Finsbury Park London, N.

FOLKESTONE "HOMES OF REST."—The demand upon the accommodation afforded by Pembroke House and Rhoda Lodge, Guildford-street, by female servants, ladies with failing health and income, young governesses with no real home, and others advanced in years, weary and worn with struggle and anxiety, increases every summer. Physical health has been regained, and spiritual life imparted through the Homes. It is proposed to anticipate future need by building a larger and more convenient house, concerning which information may be obtained from the treasurer, Mrs. F. W. Moore, Flores House, Shorncliffe-road Folkestone.

THE BRIGHTON CONVENTION.

MEETINGS for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life were held in Brighton, Nov. 3rd to 8th. The convention opened with Communion service in St. Margaret's Church, Cannon-place, when an address was given by the Rev. E. W. MOORE, of Wimbledon, on "The call of Abraham," as described in Heb. xi. 8. The chapter, he said, has well been named the Westminster Abbey of the Bible. He noted three thoughts specially suggested: faith hears, faith obeys, and faith never fails of its reward. Like Abraham, we must "get out" from all that hinders if we would draw nearer to God in the consecration of faith. Are we as ready to obey God's commands as Abraham was?

In the afternoon a sermon was preached in Emmanuel Church, Hove, by Rev. HENRY SHARPE, of Hampstead, who took for his text 2 Kings iv. 6, 7, the subject of the widow woman's obedience to the word of the prophet Elisha to fill the empty vessels from her pot of oil. Here, too, we have the obedience of faith, trusting God in the dark. Special emphasis was laid on the words, "And it came to pass." All is sure to come to pass to them who trust God and wait his time. Speaking of the great sin of the Church as intermittent belief and idleness amongst Christians, the preacher said Jesus Christ went about doing good: some present-day Christians go about getting good. We are not saved merely to rejoice in our own emancipation, but to serve the Lord. It was urged that for true sanctification the peace of God must rule in the heart. In the evening, an address was given at the Countess of Huntingdon's church, by Rev. F. Baldey, of Southsea.

The room engaged at the Pavilion was so crammed at the morning meeting on Tuesday, that numbers had no chance of a seat, and the Dome was forthwith taken for all the succeeding meetings. Mr. ROBERT WILSON, chairman of the Keswick Convention, presided. The first speaker was Dr. WHITE, whose subject was "Fellowship." Taking the words of 1 John i. 3 as his keynote, he struck at once the full tri-chord of fellowship with God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, by the power of the Holy Ghost. Sin and darkness prevent full fellowship with God. We must have the light of the Holy Spirit shining in our hearts, if we would enjoy a sense of God's presence. We must, however, be willing to put all into God's hands.

Rev. EVAN HOPKINS based upon 2 Tim. ii. 21 an address having three main points: Our present spiritual condition; the blessing we are seeking; and the way in which it is to be sought. The blessing is a state of soul-harmony with God, a fitness of service—spiritual equipment. Justification puts one in the right position; sanctification puts one in the right condition. Those who put themselves into the hands of Christ will not be long before they witness that He is a Saviour who can save from the power as well as the penalty of sin.

In the afternoon, Rev. CHARLES NEW spoke from Colossians ii. 10, on the completeness which may be obtained in Christ. If Jesus received all fulness, it was for his redemptive work. There is nothing we want but the complement is in Him. When we fulfil the conditions of the branch, He will fulfil the conditions of the Vine.

Rev. W. HOUGHTON delivered an address on 1 John iii. 22. There is a close connection between hearing the Word and doing those things which please Him. There is nothing which makes prayer so impossible as some secret sin.

The various meetings were full of inspiration for those who attended them. On Wednesday, Dr. ELDER CUMMING spoke on Isa. xxvi. 3, in which, he said, we have the peace, not of standing, but of walking, on the part of those who have surrendered all to God. Rev. F. B. MEYER dwelt upon the life of God stored up in Jesus Christ, as intimated in John v. 26. We may receive the same life from Christ, and thus have an abundant vitality. Rev. E. W. MOORE set forth the privilege of being a friend of Jesus, basing his remarks on John xv. 14. There are conditions. Abraham, the Friend of God, obeyed the command in regard to Isaac, fully believing that God was able to raise the lad even from the dead. Rev. EVAN HOPKINS, from 2 Cor. xii. 9, spoke of the all-sufficiency of the grace of God, showing that St. Paul's thorn in the flesh was a counterpart of his having been caught up into the third heaven, and was given to prevent undue exaltation. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. H. Sharpe and F. Paynter.

On Thursday Dr. WHITE showed that God hides his face from his children when they worship idols in their hearts. Rev. FOSTER PEGG, from Amos iii. 3, pointed out that the secret of acceptable walking with God is keeping in the light, not struggling or striving, but yielding to God. Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE brought his hearers face to face with life's every-day battles. Jesus Christ is not only a Saviour for the past and the future; but, as between Calvary and the Second Advent there is a life to be lived, so He is also a true and full Saviour for the present. Ps. xxxi. shows that David trusted God all through, and was enabled to say, "My times are in thy hand" (15). Revs. Dr. Elder Cumming, Evan Hopkins, and F. B. Meyer also spoke.

Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE was the first speaker on Friday, his subject being the possibilities of life. These were shown to depend upon our willingness to do God's will. Rev. F. B. MEYER pointed out that the unwilling might pray to God to make them willing. The afternoon meeting on Friday was devoted to testimony, and many—more men than women—told of blessings received at the Convention. In the evening the speakers were Revs. Foster Pegg, Barnes Lawrence (who dwelt upon Christ as the Shepherd of the sheep), and Evan Hopkins. On the following day a praise-meeting was held in the Pavilion, and subsequently a missionary gathering, addressed by Messrs. Eugene Stock, Orr Ewing, and Spencer Walton.

THE BIBLE IN BRITTANY.

WE have on several occasions of late referred to the interesting Bible work in progress in Brittany. A faithful version of the complete Bible in Breton has been published by the Trinitarian Bible Society. Rev. Dr. Bullinger, secretary of the Society, writes to us:—

"The entrance of this Bible into Brittany has given rise to great opposition on the part of the Romish Priests. This opposition has taken various forms, one of which is the cheapening of that popular work, 'The Lives of the Saints.' Our Committee thought at first to meet this by reducing the price of the Bible from 3 to 1½ francs. But they have now gone further, and to the root of the matter. So far as Brittany is concerned, they have adopted the principle of free distribution to the extent of 4000 Bibles. They trust that those who value this principle will come to their help, and enable them, if it should be the Lord's will, to extend this work."

THE PLYMOUTH STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, which has existed for forty-one years, recently held its annual meeting. It was reported that the 89,000 visits of the past year to homes of misery in the slums of Plymouth had revealed deep distress and dense darkness; but men and women, crushed in the struggle of life, had been convinced that there is a brighter day in store for them, as they welcomed friends who, after the pattern of the Master, seek to do good to bodies and souls. Mr. W. R. Thomas is general secretary of the Society.

Never Had a Chance!

BY T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

IN Night and Day Dr. Barnardo writes, under "Personal Notes":—

There are not a few lads on the streets of London who, in their own sadly expressive phrase, have "never had a chance." Charley O'Malley had met his misfortunes early in life, and never got his head clear above their buffetings up to the time that I first met him. At two years of age he was found deserted in the streets near Dulwich, and he was thereupon admitted to the workhouse. Nobody knew his father and mother, and they were never discovered. From the workhouse he was sent to the District Schools, remaining in them for a number of years, and eventually he went to sea, simply because an opening on board ship presented itself. Unfitted for the life, and thoroughly disliking it, he soon found himself back again on the London streets, and quickly fell into that round of half-work and half-loafing which demoralises so many young lives. He could only obtain casual employment, and, of course, he had not got a single friend. He steadily sank lower—down—down—into the slums, those great quicksands of the city, and at the age of 17½ he found himself among the vast army of London roughs, to whom all life is narrowed down into the bread-and-butter question, "What shall we eat?" His was the class which, by the simple process of being let alone, supplies England with its paupers, its criminals, its unemployed, and half-employed, its blacklegs, and its doss-house population.

CHARLES O'MALLEY (aged 17½).

It was at this juncture, when Charley was often in a state of starvation, without a shelter at night when out of work and having only casual shifts and odds and ends to do, that he heard, with a leap of hope in his heart, that he was not too old to be helped; and, coming to my door, found in the Labour House for Destitute Youths the helping hand he needed. I learnt that he had weathered the storms of his shiftless life well, and, after admission, he soon began to qualify himself by steady industry for the career of an emigrant in our distant colonies. I have him with me now, and I hope ere long to give Charley his great chance. Of course the young fellow knows he has to work hard while in the Home, being at it early and late; but he and his companions are stimulated by the thoughts of a future from which blessed HOPE is not excluded. The workhouse and the streets, those dread alternatives, are far behind him, and nothing save his own deliberate misconduct can bring them to the front again. It is interesting to know that £10 will cover the total expenditure incurred upon this youth while in the Home; and another £10 will place him in an independent position for life in Manitoba. Could £20 be more profitably expended, with a surer return for the capital? Surely no better object than this rescued waif could be found for the golden and gracious gift of Christian sympathy.

CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—A very blessed season was spent at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel in Ratcliff-highway last Thursday. The place was well filled with seamen, who were addressed by Mr. W. H. Seagram, Captain Dalrymple, Rev. G. J. Hill, Mrs. Hill, and Miss Messer. Many converted seamen testified to the advantages of a sober and godly life. Long after the meeting closed the workers were engaged with anxious inquirers, of whom some were brought into the light and liberty of the children of God.

The National Protestant Congress.

[CONCLUDED.]

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Home and Foreign Missions.

As fully set out, the subject was, "Home and Foreign Protestant Missions, with special reference to the dangers arising from Romanising influences, and the best means of counteracting them." The chairman, Mr. DONALD MATHESON, in some opening words, referred to the persistency with which Rome has held down the truth, and the cruelties she has visited upon those who have refused assent to her erroneous dogmas.

The DEAN OF ACHONRY, whose ministry in Ireland has extended over a long period, showed from his own experience the blighting influence of Rome upon evangelistic endeavours. He told of bullets having been fired at himself, of having been stoned, and of witnessing the burning of copies of God's Word. Missions to Roman Catholics are an urgent necessity, and such as are in operation should be liberally supported by the Protestant community. What the people everywhere want is the old Gospel, and, as this is proclaimed, there will be small inclination for Romish fooleries.

Bishop SUGDEN who has laboured in India, said that emissaries of Rome in that country have not only discouraged, but have injured and withstood all workers who would not follow their own corrupt practices. The system is a falling away from the truth, and of necessity alien to the spirit and mission of Christ. Canon law and not the law of Christ regulates the system, in which, moreover, a human priesthood supplants the Lord Jesus Christ. Converts from heathenism are perplexed, and churches assailed, by the rival claims and sensuous worship of Rome. The speaker said: I vividly recall, in my own sphere of labour, the hostility of the Papal system, its disparagement and denunciation of all evangelistic effort, even to the stirring up of the heathen to oppose us. But I am not afraid of Rome. She will be destroyed, more miserably than Carthage of old. The Lord Jesus will destroy her; but in the meantime we may no more give place to Rome than to the devil. It becomes us to concentrate our Protestant forces, and to moderate and tone-down, or rather tone-up, our controversies, with Christian love.

GENERAL HUTCHINSON,

of the Church Missionary Society, in the course of an interesting paper, said that Rome's vigorous and pertinacious propagation of error extends beyond Europe to the heathen, the Mohammedans of Asia, and the Indians of America. Immediately a Protestant mission is established in any field, the Papal emissary is seen directing his efforts, not to the bringing of the heathen into his church, but to the spoiling of Protestant converts, the acquisition of political ascendency, the destruction of Protestant missions, and the extinguishment of Gospel light. Thank God, Rome is not always victorious. In the Krishnaghur Mission, Bengal, the native converts of the Church Missionary Society number about 5000. The late Rev. H. Williams wrote: "There is not a single congregation professing to be Romanist which did not originally belong to our Church. Money is freely used to attach to themselves the leading man in a village. What must outsiders think when they see such demoralisation?"

Rev. A. J. Sauter testifies that the Romanists do not attempt to evangelise the heathen. "They make no secret of their real aim, but establish neat little chapels on village outskirts, to receive any who, through pique or quarrel, forsake our communion." The late Rev. H. Williams wrote of the more than ordinary desperation of the attack made in 1886, when they added public controversy to the use of money. The result was that Gospel doctrines were more clearly understood by contrast, while the defenders gained strength by standing together. On this occasion the Native District Church Council did good service while their leaders were away. The priests' attempts to do mischief were completely foiled by the members of the church committees. The native pastor at Bollophpur, Rev. H. C. Biswas, gives an account of a discussion which took place in the presence of Hindus and Mohammedans. The superintending missionary said that the pastor of the church would take part in the discussion, but the priests wanted to argue only with Europeans. They were told that, as they attempted to destroy his church, they must hear the pastor's voice. On an appeal to the natives they emphatically declared that the appeal must be to the Bible. The challenge of the superintending missionary, naming ten chief errors of Rome, was then read, and the priest was asked if he were ready to defend them from Scripture. After three hours' discussion, the priest, unable to defend his position, was silenced. The perverts began to return.

As to South India, Archdeacon Caley, the missionary, writes that the Romanists and Syrians energetically play the part of Elymas. Another says that at Ramapuram the to the heathen, while drunken orgies in the church compound went unreproved. At Evattapetta, hundreds of heathen mingle with the Romanists at their annual festival in honour of St. George, with not a word about the love of Christ. At Katampakal, it was sought to break up the congregation by firing the school, and sixteen houses of the people. Upon recent aggressions in the Punjaub, Bishop Matthews remarks, "Had the heathen, and not our converts, been the object of their zeal, this particular spot (Lahore) would not have been selected for first operations, in a province which, alas! still offers abundant scope for the evangelist, among Hindus, Sikhs, and Mussulmans; but the presence of a common danger has served to unite the missionaries of the different Protestant societies."

Two hundred years ago, the Chinese Emperor held Romish missionaries in high esteem, but in 1724 decreed their expulsion, because the "Christians" whom they made recognised no authority but that of Rome. Before the Queen's accession the Government of China, knowing Christianity only through the Jesuits, vigorously forbade it; but it has signalised the Queen's jubilee by a proclamation calling upon the people to live peaceably with missionaries, because they teach righteousness.

As to Japan, Rev. F. C. Warren says that those who have seen both rituals marvel whether Buddhism is a child of Romanism or Romanism of Buddhism, or whether both must not have some common origin. The Christianity which Francis Xavier presented to the Japanese, leaving no Bible, was banished for 230 years, by a notice which appeared by the side of prohibitions against crime. In 1869, Rev. W. A. Russell, of the C.M.S., reported there was no opposition against Protestant Christianity. When the door was opened, Romanists again entered, finding more than 20,000 descendants of former converts. The veteran Mr. Warren says, "With such rivals, will Protestant Christianity eventually commend itself to the national mind? or will the marvellous changes now in progress result in the adoption of a less pure form of Christianity, a mere name without life?"

In N.W. America, the very docility which makes the Indians an easy prey to the winner of souls, exposes them the more to the enticements of subtle men. Bishop Bumpas writes from the Mackenzie River, "Our work is a constant struggle with Popery." In New Zealand the tactics of Rome are directed to secure, at all hazards, the adhesion of the Maori women, knowing the men must follow.

Palestine, in the large centres, swarms with Romanist workers, specially sisters of charity, for Rome is fully alive to the IMPORTANCE OF FEMALE AGENCY.

The modes of working are nowhere spiritual, but political and educational. The only remedy is the light of the Gospel; for Rome fears nothing as she does the Bible.

In Africa, Papists employ similar methods at Onitsha, Lokoja, and Abeokuta. Stanley's invitation of missionaries to East Africa led the Church Missionary Society to send out eight in 1876; and in 1879 Romanists began to arrive. The voice of the late Mr. A. Mackay still urges us to reap this field white to harvest: "Rome is rushing in with salvation by sacraments, and her religion of carnal ordinances. We want men who will preach Jesus and the resurrection."

Thus it is seen that in foreign lands Rome works for political ascendency. Everywhere she shows the same lust for power. Her action in seeking to destroy Protestant Missions reminds one of the spider which spins its web in the track of the unwary fly. Watch her persistent efforts to strangle at the birth the infant Church of Uganda. From the whole Protestant field the cry arises against Rome as one of the greatest enemies to Christ, as a destroyer of Gospel light.

In opposing her, the spirit of Christ must govern all our efforts, recognising fully the many high qualities exhibited by these propagators of error. While we bear witness to their zeal, we are bound to say that they have made the Word of God of none effect by their traditions.

The remedy is the Gospel; but how is it to be proclaimed and taught without teachers? Let every Protestant church redouble its efforts to send out more missionaries, men and women, to spread the glorious Gospel. Be sure that the Church which does most for the heathen abroad will do most for those at home; and that if you check Romanism in our Protestant Mission-fields, you will do very much to check it at home.

Roman Catholic Missions.

REV. DR. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Little is known among Protestants with reference to Roman Catholic Missions, yet their study is most instructive, and ample materials exist for its prosecution. The stream of Romish missionary action must be considered in connection with its springs and its results. The roots, the visible tree, and the fruits of Romish missions—such briefly is our subject.

First, the roots of Romish missions extend far into the past. Protestant missions are recent in their origin; Rome's go back to the Middle Ages. Protestantism, as its name implies, is a reformation. The cleansing of the Church rather than the evangelisation of the world, was the work which it sought to accomplish. In its endeavour to cleanse the Church it was sadly hindered, and at times terribly thwarted by the warfare of Romish opposition. Hence the long delay in its accomplishment, and the inability of Protestants during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries to turn their attention to the needs of the heathen. The overthrow of Romish power in the French Revolution set the Protestant Church at liberty to evangelise the world. The practical effect was immediately apparent, and the last hundred years has seen the rise of more than a hundred Protestant missionary societies.

In comparing Protestant missions and Roman Catholic, it is important to remember that Rome has had the start. For example, Rome was at work in China for 250 years before Protestant missions had commenced in that land; and whereas in Japan Protestant missions only date back to 1860, Romish missions began there in the time of Xavier, more than three centuries ago. During the short time of their existence Protestant missions have grown with such rapidity that they have already, on the whole, more than overtaken those of the Church of Rome. They have surpassed them, and have everywhere produced results of a purer and more permanent nature.

In the study of Romish missions it is necessary to distinguish the action of two opposite principles. Two streams commingle their waters—the one spiritual; the other carnal. On the one hand, there is the faith and devotedness of individual missionaries, the flowing of a half-buried stream of life, like the flow of subterranean waters beneath some great glacier; and on the other hand there is the grinding movement of a vast governmental system guided by the boundless

AMBITIONS OF A RULING HIERARCHY.

The moral earnestness of many Romish missionaries is undoubted. The name of Francis Xavier stands high on the missionary roll, and can never be forgotten in the story of the evangelisation of India and Japan. It is impossible even to glance through the many volumes of the "Lettres Edifiantes," describing Romish missionary labours in the Levant, in America, India, and China, one and two centuries ago, without being profoundly impressed with the existence of a true Christian spirit in many individual Romish missionaries—a spirit which constrained them to undertake the most arduous and self-denying labours for the spread of religion, and which sustained them under trials and sufferings of an extraordinary character. We rejoice to pay this tribute to their memory—a tribute which we render with the utmost sincerity—and attribute the secret of their devotedness not to the errors and superstitions of their church, but to the grace of God, and the vitality of Gospel truth—that imperishable seed, which fructified in spite of the stones and thorns of its unkindly soil. Romish missionaries have never been wanting for the most difficult and dangerous undertakings. They have gone to the most distant parts of India and China; they have penetrated the most unhealthy regions of Africa, and multitudes of them have laid down their lives in the prosecution of their work.

On the other hand, the annals of the Romish propagation of the faith exhibit throughout the action of a spirit of ambition and domination, striving for the conquest of the world, in the interest of the Papal Hierarchy and Latin Church, and employing force, fraud, and often cruelty for the attainment of this end. Viewed from the standpoint of their direction and management, Romish missions are characterised by comprehensiveness of plan and unity of action. In this they present a striking contrast to Protestant missions. The whole machinery is managed from a single centre. The spectacle is not that, as with Protestants, of a number of independent missionary societies, with rival or clashing interests and operations, but that of a group of dependent associations and co-operating efforts, directed by a single supreme committee—the "Congregation," as it is called, of the Propaganda, meeting in Rome—and acting under the oversight and control of the sovereign Pontiff.

The scheme underlying Roman Catholic missionary effort is that of universal domination; its aim is to bring the whole world under the absolute rule and direction of the Papal priesthood. This aim is pursued in the name of Christ and of God, but not in the spirit of Christ, or according to the Divine Spirit, and the methods of evangelisation set forth in the Scriptures.

For example, there is the question of the employment of force in the propagation of the Gospel. Our Lord emphatically declared that his Kingdom was not of this world, and refused to allow the sword to be drawn even in his own personal defence. The Church of Rome has notoriously for the propagation of the faith, and has not scrupled to use the sword of persecution in its so-called defence. Even Xavier, "the missionary apostle of India, after he had abandoned all hope of converting the natives by his sermons, wrote to King John of Portugal, on January 20, 1548, urging him to issue a mandate that, by the power of his secular rulers, rather than the preaching of missionaries, his subjects in India must be converted. He went much further than this, and even importuned the king to take 'a solemn oath' that he would punish severely the governor of any town or province in which few neophytes were added to the church, the punishment to consist in close imprisonment for many years, and all his goods and possessions to be sold and devoted to works of charity."

Rome has never contented herself with the use of spiritual means. She has constantly employed the political arm in the prosecution of her missionary work. She did so in India, as the sad story of the famous mission of Goa plainly tells. She did so in Japan, and procured in consequence her own expulsion. She has done so in Tahiti and in Uganda, and elsewhere in our own time. "Why," asks Dean Vahl, "have the Roman Catholic missionaries been hated in China, in Annam, in Tonquin, in the eighteenth century and in our days? Because of their connection with French politics. In the South Sea Islands, in West Central Africa, in Madagascar, we see the same."

Everywhere it is the same story, reminding us ceaselessly of the correctness of that striking Apocalyptic figure which represents the Church of Rome as a Woman seated upon a wild Beast. Everywhere we have the mournful spectacle of coercion, persecution, and compulsion, exercised in the name of faith, hope, and charity. But these methods defeat their own ends. The Beast in time throws off the Woman, and turns against her. Rome leans on the staff of Egypt, but it only breaks under her weight to pierce her as an avenging spear. Rome has not scrupled further to employ in her missionary work. Some curious statistics exist in relation to this practice in China. Dr. Perrocheau, apostolic vicar in that country, writing to the annals of the Propagation of the Faith as to the number of Chinese baptised, when referring to a diminution in the number, accounts for it in the following way;—"The diminution arises from your having been compelled to reduce your alms. As soon as it will be possible for you to afford us more, our number will rise in the same proportion. I therefore entreat you to be so good as to allot to us an annually increasing sum. By means of £4 given to our baptisers, we can regenerate three or four hundred more, two-thirds of whom go almost immediately to heaven. Urge earnestly the rich to open their purses. Tell all those who desire to draw large interest for their capital to send their money to Si-tchuen, where twenty sous produce annually the redemption of two souls. It was not our salaried baptizers alone that conferred baptism upon 94,131 children of Pagans here in danger of death—we have not sufficient resources to pay so many co-operators. The number of neophytes exercising the art of curing infants procure for us a good number of baptisms." In Si-tchuen in 1849, 99,800 Pagan children were thus baptised by Romish missionaries, and in the same year 5,000 in Cambodia, 4,000 in eastern Cochin China, 13,000 in eastern Tonquin, 12,000 in central Tonquin, and more than 9000 in western Tonquin.

In considering Rome's employment of carnal methods it should be rembered that she accommodates the Christian religion to the views and practices of the heathen by altering and largely paganising its character. Romish rites and ceremonies strongly resemble those used in Pagan lands, and in some cases are identical. The likeness between Buddhism and Romanism has often been commented upon. The Buddhist has his rosary, his endless repetitions in prayer, his convents and monasteries, his doctrine of purgatory, together with the most monstrous and revolting exaggerations in relation to future punishment; his mass chanted for the living and the dead, his practice of celibacy, fasting, shaving the head, his asceticism, and gross externalisation of sanctity; his temples, idols, officiating priests, processions, &c. The Buddhist monks number hundreds of thousands, and repeat their prayers by rote in an unintelligible language, which in China degenerates into a complete jargon. They have their holy water, the worship of relics, their adoration of the Queen of Heaven, and employ a monastic habit resembling that of the Franciscan monks. The Lama who is at their head in Thibet is a spiritual sovereign closely resembling the Pope. Such is the resemblance between Romanism and Buddhism that certain Roman Catholic priests have been driven to the conclusion that the devil had practised a trick in the matter, in order to perplex the emissaries of the Pope. The likeness between Romanism and heathenism has smoothed the way of Romish missions, which in reality have only sought to induce the heathen to exchange

ONE FORM OF IDOLATRY FOR ANOTHER.

Turning now from the means employed by the Church of Rome in her missionary work, we will glance for a few moments at the extent of her operations in the missionary field. The number of Romish missionaries and converts, though large, is by no means great, considering the centuries during which Rome has been at work, and the enormous resources in men and money at her disposal. She has had the absolute command of the services of a vast body of educated men for many centuries. What has she done with her forces? We have ample information on this subject in works published by Roman Catholic authorities. Among these a valuable conspectus has just been issued from the press, both geographical and statistical, by a Jesuit named Werner, entitled, "Orbis terrarum Catholicus," presenting a view of the whole Roman Catholic Church throughout the world—eastern and western—and embracing the missionary field. Its information confirms and enlarges that afforded by previously published works. The total number of missionaries employed by the Church of Rome is under three thousand, and the total number of her converts under three millions. In a summary of Roman Catholic missions published in "Missiones Catholicæ," in 1886, the number of European missionaries is stated as 2800, the number of adherents in the different missions as nearly 2,800,000, the number of churches and chapels as 7500, native missionaries 750, elementary schools 4500, and scholars 110,000.

The converts or adherents are distributed in this way: 1,180,000 in India, over half-a-million in Indo-China, nearly half-a-million in China, 210,000 in Africa and its islands, and over 100,000 in Oceania and America. A few words now with reference to these statistics. First, as to the distribution of converts. Of the two-and-a-half million converts, a million are in India, and another million in Indo-China and China, and nearly a quarter of a million in Africa. Romanists have consequently twice as many converts as Protestants in India, and ten times as many in China. While this is the case, the total number of adherents of Roman Catholic and Protestant missions is about the same, or 2,800,000. Against 2800 Roman Catholic missionaries, Protestants have about 3500; and against 4500 Roman Catholic elementary mission schools, Protestants have about 14,000. In India Rome employs ninety-three native priests, whereas Protestant missions have nearly 3000 native preachers, lay nd ordained. The difference is very striking. Rome

nd ministry, whereas the object of Protestant nissions is to plant native churches which shall ecome self-extending.

In considering the large number of Romish onverts in India and China their character as to be taken into account, and also the fact hat in India Romish missions started three enturies ago by incorporating about half a nillion of native Christians in Goa and outhern India, descended from churches lanted in early Christian times. In the in-orporation of these Rome employed the arm f the Inquisition.

As regards Roman mission schools, it should e noted that the Church of Rome invariably neglects education save where it can be em-loyed as an instrument of propagandism. For example, on comparing together the islands of Mauritius and Madagascar, we find about 00,000 Romanists in Mauritius, and 84,000 in Madagascar. Among the former there are ixty-one schools and colleges, whereas there are no fewer than 580 schools and colleges in Madagascar. Rev. James Johnstone, in commenting on this fact, asks: "Is it only an accident that a larger number of schools are in the island where the Protestant schools are so strong, and almost none where the example and competition is absent?" He adds that this is a phenomenon often met with in our survey of the mission fields of the world. In India, where Protestant missions are numerous, Rome has greatly multiplied and improved her educational establishments. The same thing is observable in Palestine, where the Roman Catholics are treading closely in Protestant steps. Dr. Post, of Beyrout, mentions that when Protestants established a medical college there, the Roman Catholics did the same. "Then we established," says Dr. Post, "large schools for girls. Immediately the Roman Catholics began to establish female schools all over the country, although, following Oriental bias in this respect, they had hitherto neglected female education."

In spite of the resources at her command, and the unfair methods she employs, the increase of Romish converts is much less in proportion than that of Protestants. In the five years from 1880 to 1885 the rate of increase of Romish converts in India was only 3½ per cent.; while Protestant missions in the same period increased at the rate of 9 per cent.—a result which shows the superiority of the methods employed by the Protestant missionaries, whose reliance rests on the power of the truth and of the Spirit of God, and on the influence of men and women who are truly temples of the Divine Spirit.

A very few words now, in conclusion, as to the fruits of Romish missions.

WHAT IS ROME ACCOMPLISHING

by all this mass of missionary machinery? I answer chiefly three results—two in the foreign and one in what may be called the home field. The mission work of the Church of Rome is carried on not only in heathen, but also in Protestant countries. In the former, Rome is producing upon a large scale what cannot but be regarded as a heathenised form of Christianity. She is introducing a semi-paganised Christianity to Pagan lands. Her doctrine is not the apostolic Gospel. Her ritual is idolatrous. Her converts are not spiritual. Her churches have a name to live but are dead: and as such are subjected in a very striking way to the law of dissolution—they speedily rot, and and perish from the face of the earth. Romish missions, for example, in India and China had sunk at the commencement of this century to a very low mark. In Japan they had been annihilated. In Africa—in the Congo region, where four hundred years ago the whole population, from St. Salvador to the sea, had been led to adopt the profession of Christianity—scarcely a trace remained when Protestant missions were commenced thirteen years ago. The results of Romish missions in Mexico, of which I could speak from personal observation, have been equally deplorable. The same holds good with South America and many other parts of the world.

To this salient fact of the production of a semi-paganised form of Christianity in pagan lands—a form which has no vitality, and hence no true permanency—must be added the sad fact that Romish missionaries in heathen lands have strenuously opposed the work of Protestant missions, to the detriment and even in many cases to the destruction of the latter. Copious and mournful evidence of the truth of this statement lies within easy reach. The story of Tahiti might be mentioned, of Madagascar, of Uganda, and of many another mission field in which Rome has striven only too successfully to paralyse or destroy Protestant missionary work.

And to all this must be added the fact that the Church of Rome is carrying on an aggressive mission in Protestant lands, that she is labouring with singular persistence and ability and at immense outlay, to undermine and destroy Protestantism in its central stronghold in England and America. Rev. James Johnstone, in his work entitled "A Century of Christian progress," states that the Church of Rome spends "far more money and effort on the conversion of Protestants in England and America than on the heathen in India, China and Africa. The souls of Saxons have a peculiar value—they have not only capacities of enjoyment in another sphere, but they have special uses in this world, as a great force for the maintenance and extension" of what Rome considers to be the true and only Church.

In "Missiones Catholicæ," the authoritative year-book of Roman Catholic Missions throughout the world, published by the press of the Propaganda, is included among the missions of the Propaganda, and what is more, is placed first; and of the five Cardinals named in that report as appointed by Rome to be moderators, or general superintendents of missions, four have charge of the conversion of Protestant England, Australia, Canada, and the United States, and only one has charge of the conversion of the heathen! Our country, then, is part of Rome's mission field, and stands foremost in the divisions of that field, of which fact we already feel, and have yet further to feel the effects.

ROME'S WORK IN ENGLAND

I cannotclose without referring in a sentence to the chief contrast between Protestant and Roman Catholic Missions. Protestant missions have given to the millions of the heathen what the Church of Rome has never given them—the word of God. Protestant missionaries have already translated the Scriptures into nearly three hundred languages spoken by the millions of India, of China, of Oceania, of Africa. They have bestowed upon these millions that priceless gift, and who can estimate its effects?

Lying off the continents of Asia and Africa are the islands of Japan and Madagascar. Three hundred years ago Rome's converts in Japan numbered many thousands, but Rome gave them no Bible. What became of that mission in Japan? Persecution broke out, and it was annihilated. Sixty years ago Protestant missionaries planted a church in Madagascar, and gave the people the Bible. Persecution broke out as bitter as that in Japan. Was the missionary work annihilated? No! Madagascar is a Christian country to-day.

Let us, then, go forward, by the grace of God, and fulfil our mission, recognising, as Mackay, the missionary, said, Christ as the sole Head, and His word as the only guide! Let us go forward in the name of the Lord, straining every nerve to give the nations the light which Rome has never given them, the word of God, which liveth, which quickeneth, and abideth for ever.

Rev. JOHN WILKINSON, from the point of view of one interested in mission work among the Jews, declared the best means of counteracting Romish havoc in Protestant missions to be:—Preach the second advent of our Lord to all converts. This may not recover those who have already apostatised; but we believe it will prove the best counteracting influence against Ritualism and Romanism, and, indeed, against Rationalism also. When the heathen are "turned to God from idols to seek the living and true God," teach them also "to wait forth is Son from heaven"; so that they may "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Dr. BARNARDO spoke on Rome's work among neglected children. In the East of London there has, during recent years, been a considerable increase of Roman Catholic centres of influence. The proselytising zeal shown is very strong, especially among the young. Rome does nothing to look after waif children, but she claims as hers all who can be shown to have had one if not both parents members of her community. Children received into workhouses are often registered as Romanists, simply because entered by relatives professing the Romish faith. Once so described, a child is, so to speak, branded for life, being claimed by Rome on the ground of such registration in the absence of any better proof. Dr. Barnardo urged those who are able to check this practice to exert themselves, if only for the good of the young.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

In the evening the subject was "The Priesthood of Christ and the Priesthood of Believers." Gen. Sir ROBERT PHAYRE presided, and, referring to Ps. cx. as supporting the fundamental doctrine of the divinity of Christ's priesthood, said that Protestant testimony is a continuation of Christ's conflict with the Pharisees on that point. In ver. 4 Christ is addressed as a priest "for ever." There was no room for Aaron in the Transfiguration; but the Saviour, as the fulfiller of the law, summoned Moses and Elias to join Him in witness to the truth. When the Lord comes to judgment He is called "the Word of God." Let us not dissociate the Living Word from the Written Word; if we hold fast the sword of the Spirit, none can stand against us. In John xvii. Christ consecrates Himself and his people unto God; that is our authority for our priesthood. The Apostle Peter also shows us as a chosen generation. In the consummation (Rev. v.), the glory and dominion are ascribed to Him who bears the marks of an accomplished work of redemption. Let us remember that the saints of old overcame Satan by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of his testimony.

PASTOR FRANK H. WHITE

read Heb. i. 1-3; ii. 10-17; vii. 24, 25. He said there must be controversy as long as there is error in the earth. Paul does not condemn warfare unless it be merely carnal. We have every weapon that Paul had; and it was only when the truth of God was not involved that he would be all things unto all men. The monthly letter of the Evangelical Alliance, which every Christian ought to have, shows the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford congratulating his brethren on the favourable temper and attitude of the Established Church; but the great danger is in Protestant indifference, the tendency to decry doctrine, and consequent unpreparedness to withstand Rome. Loose views on the authority of Scripture lay us open to the attacks of Rome and Rationalists, as seen in American efforts to exclude the Bible from schools.

Those who are feeling after God must have authority; and if the Word be taken from them, nothing is left but Atheism or Rome. Hebrews is a "hold fast, draw near" epistle. If it does not allow perfection through the divinely-ordered Levitical priesthood, what place has that of Rome? She is right in saying priesthood is essential to salvation, but she preaches a dead Christ; whereas the Holy Spirit lays stress upon his risen life for us. The distinction which we sometimes hear, between being saved and being perfectly saved, is a false one. All who accept Christ's substitutionary work, and draw nigh unto God by Him, are perfectly saved, though the results of perfect salvation are not yet realised. Go to no place of worship where there is not a clear sound upon the priesthood of Christ; for while all truth is vital, this is the heart of truth.

REV. A. J. BAXTER said the priesthood of believers belongs exclusively to no one class of men, and has no external form except prayer and thanksgiving; Rome's 330 motions in the celebration of mass are, on the contrary, a dull routine with no vitality, bringing no good to the souls of men, and nothing but dishonour to God and his Christ. There would have been no persecutions of the early Church by pagan powers but for the instigation of a pagan priesthood. A man-assumed priesthood, whether pagan or Papal, has always been the enemy and oppressor of the human race. Cardinals Newman and Manning, in leaving the guidance of Scripture, found no more unity among the Fathers than there is now among the sects.

REV. DR. CLEMENT CLEMANCE

maintained that, simple as the statement of believers' priesthood appears to us, it is challenged on every hand in the sense in which we believe it. A book has been recently published entitled, "Continuity or Collapse." It means "no church but ours can show its continuity in the succession of priests, therefore, every church but ours must collapse." But we really see the collapse of continuity. Christ showed that where there is moral divergence, historical continuity is worthless. God has made you a Christian that, by you, He may save another. You are to live for God in living for your brethren. So far as the body and blood of Christ were sacrificed, they were given to us once for all when Christ died on the cross: and so far as they are our meat and drink, they are given to us by the living Saviour in heaven. If we could get them only when the pretended priest happens to be accessible, what starvelings we should be? Whatever souls need, we as Christian people ought to be ready to show them. If all pretended priests are to go, are Christian people prepared to fill the blank, and prove their capacity as priests unto God, to guide the people into heaven? By forgetting the true meaning of our office, we may throw men into the arms of the very priesthood which we hate.

REV. NEWMAN HALL

said that sacerdotalism is the test of Popery; the sole mediation priesthood of Christ, and the common priesthood of all believers is the standard of Protestantism. The Epistle to the Hebrews plainly showed that Christ was "perfected" as the High Priest of the Church, as Sacrificer, Sympathiser, Absolver, Intercessor. If so, there needed no supplemental sacrifice of the mass; no superior sympathiser in the Virgin Mary, for Christ's tenderness was more than that of all the tenderest women combined; no human confessor when Christ and He alone forgives, by the blood which "cleanseth from all sin;" no intercessors in the saints when He who ever lives to intercede "is able to save the uttermost." To supplement his work by human priesthoods is to declare his own incomplete, and to contradict the plainest teaching of the Bible.

All who cling to the one High Priest, the only and all-sufficient Saviour, are members of the one Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic, New Testament Church; while all who interpose human mediators between the sinner and the Saviour, are Romanists, whether they acknowledge the Pope or not. If a priest claimed to be able to perform the stupendous miracle of transubstantiation, to have authority to absolve from sin, and to influence the condition of the soul after death, I, for one, said the speaker, if I believed his claims, should be inclined to bow down before him, and implicitly receive his teaching and obey his commands. The New Testament Epistles were never addressed to the Church with its priests, but to "the Church with its bishops and deacons," while the whole membership, men, women, and children, are the holy priesthood.

REV. FULLER GOOCH

urged a personal and practical recognition of every believer, wherever found, as a fellow-priest. We are apt to feel this only on platforms, and not to carry it out in our intercourse one with another. While we must beware of the spurious charity which goes outside the Word of God, a sectarian brotherhood will never win the battle of truth against error. A united Rome is not so dangerous as a disunited Protestantism, with the spirit of compromise. If we live out our practical relations and responsibilities to Christ, we shall soon make an inroad upon the advances which sacerdotalism has already made; but the unity which gives a status to error, helps that which is not of God. Mal. ii. 5-7 shows the priest's duty to maintain the completeness of God's Word, and to bow implicitly to its authority.

Rome is being helped to-day by the loosening hold of Protestantism upon the Word of God. It is for us to grasp this sword of the Spirit, and never sheathe it, but wield it everywhere with "It is written" as the rule of all our beliefs and actions. And we must live under the influence of the anointing which priesthood necessitates. Protestantism without spiritual life is useless. With the old priesthood there was atoning blood, holy garments, anointing oil, filled hands. There are ministers in our pulpits who hate to talk of atoning blood; but we need to live under its power every day and hour. Then, the holy lives of Christians are a power which evil cannot withstand. It is easy to say that when the time of persecution comes we would rather die than yield to error; but we shall only do it in proportion as the Spirit of God anoints us and fills us with power.

WHITTINGTON AVENUE Y.M.C.A.—The agencies of this City Association are increasing in number and activity, and the membership is steadily growing. The rooms are surrounded by offices and business houses, and the highest good of the young men is studiously considered. On Thursday evening last a member of our staff looked in, and heard a vigorous and faithful Gospel address and appeal by Rev. W. R. Mowll. The audience consisted for the most part of Stock Exchange clerks, and the attention was very marked. Immediately afterwards there was a foreign missionary meeting, at which Mr. Archibald Orr Ewing gave some account of evangelistic work in China. The story of devoted labour in the cause of Christ was very impressive, and will, it is hoped, not be without its influence upon the lives of the members of the Association.

BISHOP RYLE in his triennial visitation of the clergy of Liverpool last week, said:—Let me charge you to hold fast the great principle that Christianity is entirely true, and the only religion which God has revealed to mankind. Hold fast also the authority, supremacy, and Divine inspiration of the whole Bible. We must not give up the subject of inspiration in despair because it contains things "hard to be understood." Inspiration, in short, is a miracle; and a miracle would not be a miracle if it could be explained. I thank God for the revival of the old apostolic plan of "aggressiveness" in religion, and the evident spread of a desire by all means to save some. Let me charge you to hold fast the old doctrine of the Church of England about the sanctity and right observance of the Sabbath Day. Tell the working classes that if English Sundays are ever turned into days of play and amusement, they will soon become days of labour and work. I beseech you to realise the painful fact that the Protestantism of this country is gradually ebbing away, and I entreat you, as Christians and patriots, to resist the growing tendency to forget the blessings of the English Reformation. So long as the Church of England sticks firmly to the Bible, the articles, and the principles of the Protestant Reformation, so long I advise you strongly to stick to the Church.

THE WORD OF THE KING.

Innumerable are the cases in which God makes use of his own Word in the great work of conversion, quite apart from every human instrumentality, abundant proof of which will be found in the testimony of many distributors of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. At Copenhagen thirteen sailors in the Bethel ship, and five in the hospitals have given good evidence of being truly converted, while others have left for sea under deep convictions.

A parcel of Scriptures was sent to a Piedmontese town which is wholly under the influence of the priests, and where most illegal persecution is continually suffered by a zealous Christian, who in vain appeals to the authorities. In such where public preaching is impossible, the Word of God wins its way silently into many a home. A poor woman begged Count Campello to give her a Bible, and on her promising to keep it, read it, and not give it away to the priest, he did so. After a time the priest called and told her she must give up the Bible, it was not fit for her to read. She refused, saying it could not be a bad book, for it had taught her about Jesus, and it had made her so happy! "Besides," she added, "ever since it has been in my house my cupboard has been always full, while before it was often empty."

Dr. Hastings Burroughs writes from St Etienne, Loire, "Your grant of New Testaments has been a great boon to me, as I have so many opportunities of giving them away in my medical mission, and in our evening Gospel meetings. They reach many distant homes and are read with great eagerness. France is now in a better condition to listen to the Gospel than for many years past. Those of the people who are seriously-minded are are delighted to hear the Gospel preached in its purity and simplicity."

Miss Bartlett says: "There is a real spirit of inquiry among the young men and youth of Amritsar (India). One lad said to me, 'I cannot tell you why I come, because I don't want to be a Christian; but somehow I can't forget the words I hear from your Book—they are such simple words, and they seem to have such power. Why is it? Why do you people who read the Bible so much have such bright happy faces?'" Similar testimonies come from other lands.

The hon. sec. of the Association is Mrs. A. E. Robertson, Chesils, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W.

THE NEEDS OF CHINA.—"Nine hundred Walled Cities and no Missionary," is the title of a telling appeal on behalf of China from the pen of Miss Geraldine Guinness in the current issue of Regions Beyond.

THE SAILORS' ORPHAN SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND reminds us that, with the approach of winter, there is usually an increase of loss of life at sea. The Society assists those who have recently been made necessitous widows. First of all employment is found for the women, then their earnings are supplemented by a monthly grant for one or more of the children. Thus aid does not pauperise, but encourages those who have the will to help themselves, and prevents painful separation between mother and children; though the Society takes entire charge of the children, where the nature of the mother's employment necessitates that course. In all cases voluntary Christian supervision is exercised. All the funds, except a small sum for printing, postage, &c., go directly to the support of the widows and orphans. Communications respecting the work may be sent to Mr. Richard H. Hunter, 2, Park Circus, Glasgow.

For the Young.

DOLLS FOR HINDU CHILDREN.

REV. WILLIAM M'CULLOCH, of the Free Church of Scotland Mission, Hugli, India, in a recent letter to this country, gave an interesting account of the work among Hindu children. He says:—

"I should like you to send me six hundred dolls before next April. They are more needed in the country schools than in the town ones, for this reason, that while in the towns very many Hindu parents have become really anxious about the education of their daughters, parents in the country are quite indifferent. They may permit girls to attend school, that is all; they will not trouble about sending them regularly. Hence we must make school attractive to our little pupils, otherwise they will not come. One of our means of doing this is the yearly prize distribution, which is quite an event in the life of a Hindu village girl. On these occasions, besides prizes to the best pupils, little gifts are given to all. A yearly supply of gifts sufficient for all the girls' schools here would be a very great help to us. I shall be very thankful if you make an effort to get such for us. The thirteen schools are flourishing at present."

We have no doubt that many of our young readers will be glad to respond to Mr. M'Culloch's interesting appeal on behalf of his dusky scholars. Let them collect all their spare dolls, or buy new ones, and send them on to Mrs. Cleghorn, 26, Queen-street, Edinburgh, before January 31 next. Let them be sure and mark the parcels "For the Mofussil Mission."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Nov. 16, Exod. xxxii. 25—35; Mon., Nov. 17, Exod. xxxiii. 1—11; Tues., Nov. 18, Exod. xxxiii. 12—23; Wed., Nov. 19, Exod. xxiv. 1—14; Thurs., Nov. 20, Exod. xxxiv. 21—35; Fri., Nov 21, Exod. xxxv. 21—35; Sat., Nov. 22, Exod. xl. 17—27.

MR. NEWTON JONES has completed a fourteen days' mission in connection with the Hull S.S. Union. The power of God was manifestly at work amongst the young people. The adult meetings for teachers and senior scholars, also the Bible readings, were well attended, and proved to be a service of great spiritual refreshment. A public farewell tea was held the closing night, when more than two hundred sat down.

BARNSBURY.—A very bright and hopeful mission has concluded in St. Andrew's parish by Mr. Lewes Sayer. Parents were entreated to consider their responsibilities. Elder scholars were nightly addressed after the young people's meeting, and on these gatherings great blessing rested. Already the mission has had the effect of stirring up the zeal of my workers, a band of whom, assisted by many helpers from St. Jude's, Mildmay, thoroughly visited the whole district prior to the mission. A. J. BRIDGMAN, Vicar.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Town Hall, Chester, to Nov. 19; Waterloo, Liverpool, Nov. 23 to Dec. 3. Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Clement's, Nechells, Birmingham, to Nov. 14; Sheldon, Nov. 15, 16; Gorton, Manchester, Nov. 23—28. Mr. James S. Tyler, Kirkby Lonsdale, to Nov. 14; St. George's, Bolton, Nov. 16—20; Coupland-street, Manchester, Nov. 23—28. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Havering, Nov. 16; Public Hall, Romford, Nov. 16—25. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Brockley, Nov. 17—21. Mr. George Goodman, St. Thomas' Schoolroom, Lambeth, Nov. 22—30. Mr. E. Hughes, St. James' School, Bermondsey, Nov. 17—22. Mr. E. Collier, Trinity Hall, Battersea, Nov. 23—28.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.—The Ladies' Sunday-school Extension Committee is an outcome of the International Bazaar held last year by the Sunday School Union. Its aim is to diffuse information about the needs and progress of Sunday-schools in Continental and heathen countries, to promote country home and registry work, and generally to forward the work of the Union.

ONE of the greatest hindrances to his work Mr. Mackay found to be the prevalence of witchcraft. Describing an interview at Court with Mtesa, King of Uganda, he writes:—

"I began by asking if it was now his pleasure that I should cease teaching the Word of God at Court on Sundays. He said, 'No, not by any means.' I said that now he and his chiefs had made up their minds to bring to stay at Court the lubare, whom he (Mtesa) allowed to me the other day to be a deceiver, I had no further right to interfere with his orders or whom he chose as his guest; only this visitor, for whom preparations were made, was no ordinary guest, but was looked up to by the people as possessed of powers which belonged to God alone; that we could not mix up the worship of God Almighty with the worship of a man who was the enemy of God. Mtesa listened attentively, and then said to his chiefs, 'Do you hear what Mackay says? He says that we cannot bring the lubare here without offending God.' One of the chiefs replied that the lubare was only coming with medicine to heal the king. I replied that the lubare was not merely a doctor, but was looked up to by all as a wizard, and as being able to heal people by enchantment...I took my stand on the Word of God, which said that all who used witchcraft were enemies of God."

Later on Mr. Mackay records:—"To-day was a scene in which the heathen raged, and the people imagined vain things. They have instead of the Lord of Glory. It is heartrending to think of this result of more than two and a half years' teaching of Christianity at this Court. To-day the chiefs followed each other like sheep, and I am convinced that several present would have chosen quite the contrary were they not afraid of each other. The Lord will bring good out of evil, and this decision of to-day will only redound to the firmer planting of his kingdom in this land. I do not feel discouraged, only disappointed for the time. No power can stand against that of the Cross of Christ."

The following indicates the discouragements to be faced:—

"Any man can pull down, or, as Carlyle calls it, unbuild, in a day what has been the work of centuries to erect; but to build anew, in the place of the ruin, a better and nobler structure, that will be a work which no talk of an hour can accomplish. All the roots and trunks of the old trees are there, and fresh shoots cannot but be ever sprouting. The old carnal, evil human nature remains, with all its enmity to God and to all that is good. This has to be changed, and it is not in the power of man to do that. But there are the means. We come with the Book of the revelation of the love of God to men in our hands, and we try to teach its glorious precepts. One day they listen, and another day they say, 'We want none of your teaching; we have a religion of our own, which we like better than the white man's religion. If you want to teach us anything, show us how to make gunpowder and guns, and we will give you band and slaves.' Thus, up and down, in and out, flows the tide. One day we are friends; the next day the enchanters prevail, and we are condemned as the cause of all drought and disease.....

"I might write pages describing my journey from the capital of Uganda to this place—how we had to spend a week going from island to island trying to get canoes; how the head man of each canoe refused to take almost any of our things on board, each one trying to get off as lightly as possible; how we spent some thirty days in these frail, tiny barks, made of roughly-hewn boards, sewed together with twigs; how each day, in starting, the captain of the fleet held out a banana on the point of his paddle, and, after a prayer to the spirit of the sea, dropped the offering into the water to satisfy the appetite of Neptune; how one day I purchased a great and potent charm, and after giving all the crowd about me a serious lesson on the worthlessness of such an idol, and the power and love God above, I asked them what was in the charm. 'The lubare' some said; while others said they believed it all a lie, and that there was no lubare (or spirit) in the thing. 'Will it burn?' I asked. 'Oh, no; the lubare does not burn.' 'Is not this charm mine? Did I not buy it?' 'Yes, it is yours,' they all said. 'Then I can do with it what I like?' 'Oh, yes.' 'Very good,' I replied; so, taking out of my pocket a small lens, I made fire in a moment with the sun's rays, and, bidding my little boy gather a bundle of dry wood, of which there was any amount lying on the beach, I soon had a brilliant blaze. 'Can your great witches make fire out of the sun like I have done?' I asked. 'No, no.' 'Then, you see, I am cleverer than these gods whom you worship.' 'Yes, you make magic,' they said. 'Well, you say there is magic in this charm which I have bought?' 'Yes.' 'Well, let us see;' so, putting the great charm into the heart of the fire, it was reduced to ashes in a few moments, half of the bystanders running away in horror, the rest standing round, hoping every moment that some terrible judgment would come upon me for my sacrilege. 'Now the devil is dead,' I said; 'and you all see that I have told you true—that there is no saving power in charms, and that God alone can save us!'"

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

RELIGION IN GERMANY.—Statistics recently published show that the population contains 29,369,847 Evangelicals (comprising members of the Lutheran, Reformed, and United Churches); 16,785,784 Roman Catholics; 125,673 other Christians (comprising Moravians, Baptists, Methodists, and other independent communities); 563,172 Jews; and 11,278 of no religious profession.

CRIME IN FRANCE.—The Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom writes:—"There is a fearful increase of crime, contradicting strikingly those who hoped that 'schooling' and 'good behaviour' would go together. The 'schooling' has increased, and juvenile criminals have increased in vast proportions. Fifteen years ago youthful criminals who could read were 68 per cent.; at present the percentage has risen to 78. The evident failure, in a moral point of view, of education without religion is throwing weight into the Roman Catholic scale; children are crowding their private schools. Schools without religion in a country where homes are without God can but raise up a godless generation! It is a most serious outlook, and calls loudly on every Christian filled with the Spirit to be up and doing."

FATHER HYACINTHE has begun a campaign throughout France in favour of a national church. His first address, delivered in Paris, was a vigorous attack upon clericalism, and full of warnings against the encroachments of Romanism. The Republic, he said, is firmly established, but after leaning toward atheism she is now in danger of lapsing into clericalism. The pupils of the Jesuits are beginning to swarm in the military colleges. The Republic is threatening to become a Clerical Government after the most bigoted pattern of South American Republics. "We cannot," he said, "remain under the rule of a foreign priest, the subject of King Humbert and Signor Crispi. War will not kill us, for we can measure ourselves with our neighbours, nor will the social question; but clericalism will kill us, unless we be watchful."

THE ANTI-SEMITIC MOVEMENT IN GERMANY.—The Grand Duke of Hesse recently gave an audience to some leading members of the Jewish community, who complained strongly of the anti-Semitic agitation which had taken a firm hold upon certain classes of his subjects, and appeared to be tolerated, if not encouraged, in influential quarters. A rescript has since been issued in which it is stated that the Grand Duke has seen with regret the growing agitation against the Jews, and expresses the hope that all reasonable Christians will render their best assistance in putting a stop to it. His Royal Highness adds that all Jews in Hesse will be fully protected in their constitutional rights. Court Chaplain Stöcker, the well-known anti-Semitic leader in Berlin, has resigned his office. His influence against the Jews is likely now to decline.

The Gospel in Spain.—2.

BY J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

TANGIER.

So closely allied in many ways to the spread of the Gospel on the Peninsula is the work carried on at Tangier, just across the Straits of Gibraltar, that it will not be out of place to introduce a brief account of what is being done there, especially as it is there the writer has obtained his initial experience of the Spaniards and their bearing towards the truth.

During the last decade a large Spanish colony has been steadily forming on this point of the Moorish territory, and, owing to its proximity to the home-land and the extra-territorial jurisdiction each power has over its subjects in Morocco, it may almost be considered a Spanish settlement. Some six thousand emigrants, mostly masons and labourers, have been attracted to the spot by misleading ideas of the amount of work to be obtained and the cost of living. The consequent influx, notably during the last four or five years, has decreased the one and increased the other. Now, as a natural result, wages are low and victuals dear, rents being abnormally high. All this produces a great deal of misery and tends to crime.

Though still under the rule of their own Government, through a minister, consul, and a staff of nine other officials, and in the charge of a body of Franciscan friars and nuns, the settlers are in a far better position to be reached by the Gospel than when they were in Spain. The friars, however, maintain their hold upon them by the distribution of doles to the needy, by the education of both boys and girls, and by means of a hospital for the sick, all being under the subvention of the Government, which also pays the two doctors. They have, too, erected a number of wooden sheds, which they let out to mechanics at a high rental—four shillings a month for a box 14 ft. by 8 ft., with no conveniences, or even water—though a low one in comparison with others charged. Those who attend Protestant services, or show any leaning towards them, in which [illegible] are soon

Up to within the last few years no [illegible] attempt was made to reach these people, the only evangelical workers on the spot being fully engaged among the Moors or the Jews. During the summer of last year, however, some of the members of the North Africa Mission and other friends were brought face to face with the necessity for labourers among them, and special services for Spanish-speaking people were opened. These soon began to demand so much attention and care that Mr. N. H. Patrick, a student from, and supported by, Mr. Spurgeon's College, though working under the direction of the North Africa Mission, felt called upon to give up Arabic for Spanish, and devote his energies entirely to this task.

After a while the Mildmay Mission to the Jews sent out another labourer, Mr. Paulus Dressler, and together they were enabled to rent a place which had hitherto been a notorious dancing and gambling establishment as a centre of operations. They have since been joined by [illegible]—Mr. Turner, who came out to become Mrs. Patrick, and Miss F. B. Brown. An excellent Christian couple from Bale having been found to take charge of the place, a café and dispensary were opened, the latter department being in the hands of the North Africa Medical Mission.

Here a steady, if uphill, work has been carried on ever since. Numerous baptisms have already crowned the efforts put forth [illegible] have been caused here as elsewhere by backsliding and yielding to the enemies of which none has manifested [illegible] The [illegible] difficulties of a work like this are hardly realised by our friends at home. Those who have engaged in systematic effort among the poor around them well know what they have to encounter there, but abroad there has to be added the obstacle presented by an unknown tongue and the fierce opposition of the priests of the religion attacked. It is beyond a doubt that in accordance with the measure of light enjoyed by any creed, so is it more difficult to deal with, and in Romanist and Mohammedan lands—about equal in this respect—this point is well exemplified.

Here is a task for which both consecrated souls and consecrated funds are as urgently needed as anywhere. Will not our brethren and sisters at home bear it and those engaged in it in prayer before the Throne, and testify to their sympathy practically as well as verbally?

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.

AFTER another year of Christian testimony among their fellows, the members of this Union met last week at the Memorial Hall for a season of mutual encouragement. The attendance was very fair, considering that Christian medical students are as yet a little flock. One cheering feature was the presence of a good number of younger students. On this occasion the president was Dr. Pearce Gould.

MR. M'ADAM ECCLES' secretarial report spoke of the blessing that had attended the special mission to medical students, last November, by Dr. Grattan Guinness; it had strengthened the cause of Christ in the hospitals, and had bound the Christian men more closely together. There are now three Medical Missionary Societies connected with the hospitals in London, one having been formed at St. Thomas's Hospital during the past year. During the year now entered upon four inter-hospital meetings are intended to be held, in which students from another hospital will address the students in the hospital where the meeting is held. This effort, it is hoped, will be productive of much blessing.

In a brief but earnest address the CHAIRMAN exhorted his young brethren, just entering on the study of their profession, to begin well by taking a bold and decided stand on the side of Jesus Christ. At such a critical period of life there is special need for guidance and wisdom, in the avoidance of that which would mar their best prospects, in the choice of right associates, and in the cultivation of right habits. On these and other obvious grounds, Dr. Gould urged young students to enrol themselves definitely on the side of Christ at the very outset of their career. Such a step would not rob life of any of its real joys, but would, on the contrary, ensure at once a happy and useful course. Let the surrender to Christ be full and unreserved, and the blessing experienced would be in proportion.

The principal address of the evening was by Captain ROBERTSON, who made a most earnest, brotherly, and skilful appeal for decision on the part of those who had never come out on the Lord's side. The solemn issues of life and death were plainly and faithfully set forth and pressed home. A good proportion of the young students present accepted the invitation to stay for personal converse on spiritual matters, and before leaving several indicated their resolve to be out and out for Christ. This anniversary meeting of young medicals was felt by many to be a most fruitful and profitable time.

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—There was a muster of seamen and others at Miss Child's Welcome Home, Ratcliff-highway, on Tuesday week. Miss Child very much regretted not being able to commence the soup suppers for the destitute [illegible] lacking the funds for them. After- [illegible] gave the text for the month. "What [illegible] have not to do?" Sir C. R. Leighton, Bart., gave a practical and very hopeful address on the words, "Wait on" and "Wait for."

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

THAT there is to-day a remarkable spirit of hearing among the Jews is a fact of common knowledge in the Christian world. Interesting evidence of the fact is afforded every Saturday afternoon at the meetings in connection with the Barbican Mission to the Jews, in the room in Albion-place, London-wall, E.C. Audiences of from thirty to seventy, according to the season and the weather, assemble to hear of God's salvation. A few of them have confessed Christ, but for the most part the men are inquirers. As they attend regularly, and listen with marked attention to the expositions of the Old Testament prophecies and the arguments from Israelitish history, it is easy to believe them when they profess to be desirous of learning something of "Jesus and the resurrection"—of Him who is set forth to them as the Messiah of ancient promise. These audiences include many respectable men of the working class; they assemble quite spontaneously, and in spite of the opprobrium which is heaped upon such as are suspected of sympathy with "apostates."

The missionary, Mr. C. F. Lipschytz, is much beloved by those of his people who have come under his influence. He does not hesitate, in his public addresses, to drive home the fact that "God hath, in these last days, spoken unto us by his Son;" he boldly declares that He whom Jew and Gentile combined to reject was the Saviour of sinners, "God with us." If it cannot be said that his brethren "hear him gladly," it can certainly be affirmed that they listen with an interest which cannot but be regarded as full of significance. It seems as if God is preparing to repeat in these last days the wonders of grace which characterised the Church in its infancy when multitudes of the Jews became obedient to the faith. It is a great joy to hear the men sing such hymns as "The Light of the World is Jesus," and "What can wash away my stain? Nothing but the blood of Jesus." Every Saturday some [illegible] friend delivers an address.

What with visiting his brethren in their homes and haunts of business, and holding [illegible]-classes and meetings for instruction throughout the week, Mr. Lipschytz finds his hands well filled. His wife, a true helpmeet, interests herself in the Hebrew women. From first to last the work is beset with difficulties. One of these arises in the looking after converts. The missionary endeavours to place converts under good Christian influence, whereby they are at once delivered from cruelty and temptation, and put in the way of growth in grace and the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. A short time ago a youth came to England from Galicia, to find three brothers who had left home some time previously. Finding that they had confessed Christ, the lad dared not go home, and on subsequently taking a like step himself, he became an exile in a strange land. It was obviously the duty of the missionary to help the young man, after, by hard sufferings, he had shown himself a true disciple. Kind friends have just made it possible for this convert to be apprenticed to a highly respected barber in a town in Devonshire, and it is sincerely hoped that he will develop Christian graces as he grows in Christian knowledge.

There never was a time when work among the Jews was so full of promise. In proportion as Christians generally understand it, they will sympathise with it. Hebrew Christians must preach the Gospel to their brethren, and as they speak for Christ they will not speak in vain. Mr. Lipschytz has been greatly blessed in his exertions, and we trust still better times are ahead. Copies of the last report may be had from him at Barbican House, 11, Stavordale-road, Highbury, N.

Rev. Prebendary Gordon Calthrop,

Vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury New Park.

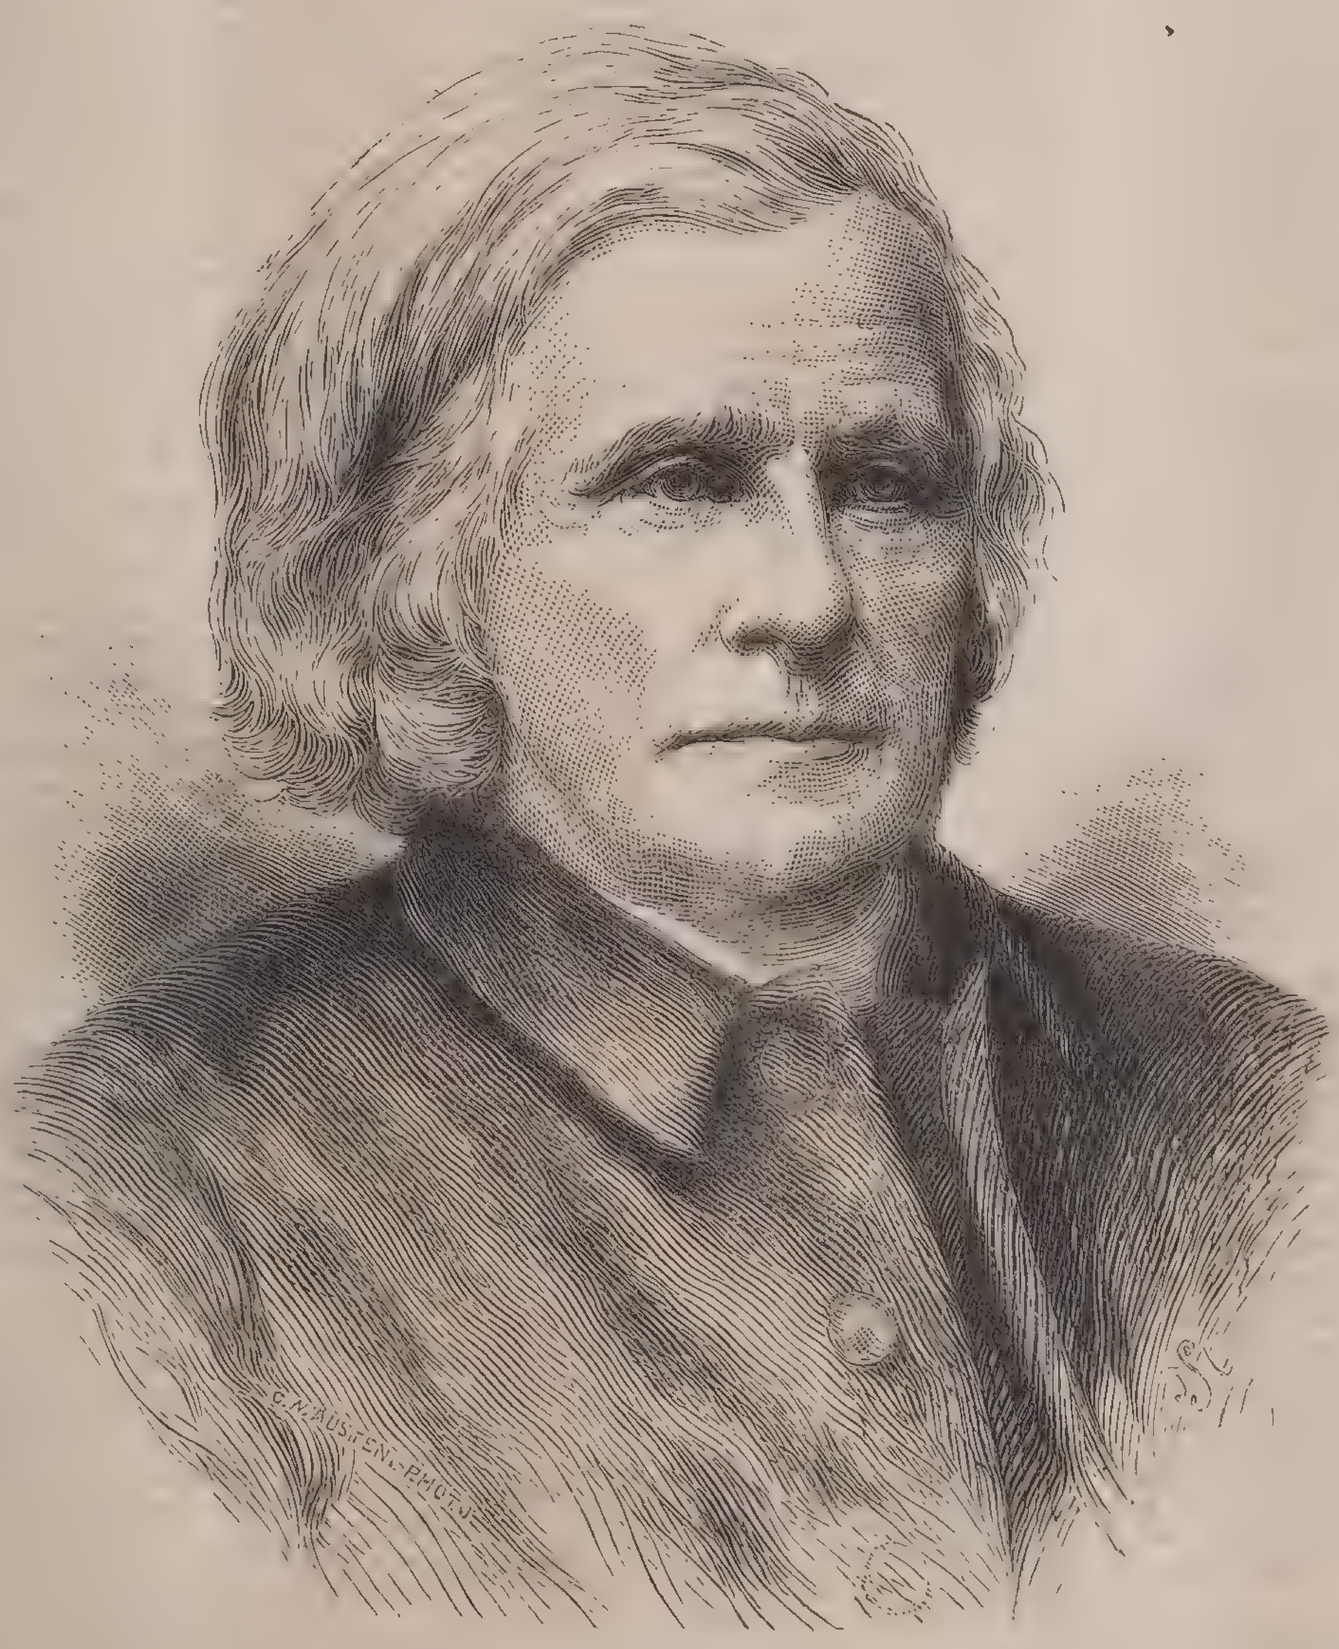
FOR nearly a quarter of a century, Rev. Prebendary Gordon Calthrop has been the popular vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury New Park. The neighbourhood possesses some of the ablest ministers of other denominations, and in the neighbouring church of St. James's, Holloway, the names of such popular preachers as the late Rev. W. B. Mackenzie, or Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, the present Bishop of Wakefield, as former incumbents, show that there was especially needed at St. Augustine's a preacher thoroughly able, both intellectually and spiritually, to deal with the great questions of the day. The district parish of St. Augustine possesses absolutely no poor, and therefore Mr. Calthrop has led the large congregation over which he presides to minister to several poorer neighbourhoods. So many wealthy Jews have taken up their residence in Highbury New Park that it has been facetiously nicknamed "The New Jerusalem." These naturally attend their own synagogue, but some who formerly professed the Hebrew faith now attend St. Augustine's. Mr. Calthrop has long been specially interested in the conversion of the Jews. Not long since no fewer than five young men, from twenty-two to twenty-five years of age, publicly renounced the faith of their fathers, and were baptized at St. Augustine's into the name of Christ.

Mr. Calthrop is a cosmopolitan. Himself a staunch Evangelical and an attached member of his own communion, he is very tolerant in his views, for his life is full of love. The keystone in the arch of his ministerial labour may be said to be the well-known rule:—"In essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty, in all things charity." His ministry is a practical illustration of the lines:—

Though varying creeds may sever,
Or different sects divide,
No power shall sunder ever,
Hearts that in Christ abide.

Mr. Calthrop leads men to Christ, a living personality, One whom the soul can love, worship, and obey; and hence the results of his ministry are a practical demonstration that Christian life is at least as undeniable as physical life.

As a preacher, Mr. Calthrop's sermons are admirably adapted to a popular auditory. Not recondite or abstract, they are yet scholarly in their simplicity; short, practical, and homely. The majesty of his thoughts often stands in striking contrast with the simplicity of his language. As his discourses abound with metaphor and illustration based upon a solid foundation of logic, his hearers are often unconsciously aroused and the attention of the listless riveted in spite of themselves. Mr. Calthrop is not afraid of present-day objectors to Christianity. In his parish, we should imagine, there must be many who are tinged with the various phases of modern unbelief. Equally, we should say, those whose lives are blighted by the subtle intellectualism of modern scepticism find in Mr. Calthrop one who can appreciate points of difficulty, treat them with candour, and manifest a tender sympathy with the doubts and perplexities of unsettled minds. Every controversy is fought on the battle-ground of Calvary. Mr. Calthrop leaves on our mind an abiding impression that the chief argument for the Divinity of Christ is his humanity. With a kindly earnest sympathy with the trials of men, and a keen practical insight into their needs, it is small wonder that his utterances are thoughts that go down into the soul. We have heard him called "the common-sense preacher."



(From a Photograph by Mr. Geo. Austen, 15, Highbury Place, London, N.)

Mr. Calthrop took high honours at Trinity College, Cambridge. His first curacy was at the church of St. Giles', Reading. Three years later, we find him at St. Mark's, Brighton, working under Rev. E. B. Elliot, the author of "Horæ Apocalypticæ." Thence he was called to a wider sphere in London, and he became one of the metropolitan secretaries of the Church Missionary Society. Two years later, in 1858, he accepted the living of Holy Trinity, Cheltenham, where he remained until 1864. He then accepted the offer of St. Augustine's, which church it was proposed to build in the New Park, Highbury. The services were for some years held in a commodious iron church, but in 1870 the handsome Gothic structure was consecrated. The church holds upwards of a thousand persons, and here Mr. Calthrop preaches to a large congregation.

In 1874, Mr. Calthrop was chaplain to the Lord Mayor, and more recently he succeeded Canon Fleming as the Whitehead Professor at the London College of Divinity. That college is facile princeps the evangelical theological college for candidates for the ministry of the Church of England. The success of the college is, humanly speaking, due in a great measure to the influence and presence of such men as Mr. Calthrop.

In 1889, Mr. Calthrop accepted from the Bishop of London the offer of a Prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. Calthrop is a familiar figure in the pulpits of St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey, and occasionally in the Chapels Royal. But what will interest our readers more is his evangelistic work at the London theatres, where he has been a most acceptable preacher; and his unsectarian efforts amongst the masses. He used to preach at Shoreditch Townhall on the Sunday afternoons of one month in the year for nearly ten years. These packed gatherings were a sight to see.

Of his work in connection with the Young Men's Christian Associations, or his vigorous support of numerous unsectarian evangelistic and philanthropic agencies, we cannot now speak. But, in spite of his simple, unobtrusive character, and his retiring and unostentatious methods, such work cannot be hid. As President of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, he assists an interesting London work.

Mr. Calthrop is a voluminous writer. His articles in The Quiver, Clergyman's Maga- zine, Church Sunday School Magazine, and other periodicals have made his name a household word in many a circle. With regard to his many books we cannot particularise. That he may long be spared to continue his services to literature and his ministry for the Master, may well be the prayer of every reader of this brief sketch.

Leith Christian Fellowship Union.*

THIS Union, instituted in 1870, has within the last year displayed an activity in the work of soul-saving which is full of promise for the future. In a year the membership has increased from 377 to 530, and the funds have doubled themselves again and again. If the churches cannot unite under their ministers in aggressive Christian work, the young men belonging to these churches are uniting; and in this blessed union of life and work are making their influence felt in quarters hitherto neglected by the churches, or approached in vain. It will be a grand thing, not only for Leith, but for Scotland, if our Christian young men refuse to be silenced by the indifference or the opposition of our churches, and in the strength of God, and with such gifts as they have, make for sinners as did the converts of Cyprus for those of Antioch in the days of old.

Before this year the Union did not engage in any special work beyond the distribution of tracts. It was impressed upon the committee appointed for this year that some aggressive effort should be engaged in. As the work was new to the young men, they asked God's guidance and got it. The way was opened up. Mr. J. M. Scroggie was secured to conduct a fortnight of evangelistic services. The meetings were largely attended from the first, and grew in interest and power night by night. There were decisions for Christ every night of the mission. Many believers were quickened and cheered. The names and addresses of those who professed to receive blessing during the mission were not taken.

The social meeting of young converts and workers at the close of the mission was a right happy one. It was proposed by one in the audience that a band of open-air workers should be formed to conduct meetings at the Docks, and thus attempt to reach the class of people who spend the Sunday in pleasure sailing. About twenty signified their willingness to engage in this work. These workers commenced their meetings on the following Sunday, and carried them on every Sunday afternoon until October 5. In spite of opposition from various quarters, the young men were regularly at their post, distributing tracts, singing solos, giving short addresses, and dealing personally with souls. Sometimes three hundred persons might be seen at these meetings, evidently interested.

The office-bearers of the Union decided to hold weekly prayer-meetings for young men and young women. Beginning with twelve, in the house of the president, Mr. P. Fraser, the number rose to forty, and many more would have attended had there been room. A hall was engaged for the young women's meeting, which was even more largely attended than the young men's. Under the wise and enthusiastic guidance of Miss Stewart, whose singing has been a great power for good in evangelistic work here, many young women testify to having received great blessing at these meetings.

The second series of evangelistic meetings commenced on October 5, and extended over the remainder of the month, Mr. Scroggie again being the evangelist. The services were held in three churches in different parts of the town. If the shifting from place to place decreased the attendance somewhat, it may safely be said that a larger number heard the Gospel, and that as much good resulted from this mission as from the one in spring. Over two hundred gave their names and addresses as having experienced definite blessing at the meetings.

One pleasing feature in connection with both the missions is the large number of young people brought into the kingdom. The Union means to go forward in the good work, taking God as their Captain, and "Leith for Christ" as their motto.

I have said practically nothing of Mr. Scroggie's preaching and methods, and nothing of him as a man. He is a tried and honoured servant in the work of soul-saving. He does not seek to prosper as an evangelist by pointing out the imperfections of the churches. Always thankful to God and man for the presence of ministers on his platform, he makes it abundantly clear to all that his aim is to save souls. Ruin by sin, redemption by the blood, faith in Christ in order to salvation, and practical holiness the outcome of the faith-union, are the themes on which he delights to dwell.

A NEW DEPARTURE IN AFRICA.

A NEW worker for Christ in Africa is Dr. Johnston, a native of Huntly, in Scotland, and for many years engaged in Gospel effort at Brown's Town, Jamaica. Having built a tabernacle he entered upon dispensary work among the people, thus founding the Jamaica Evangelistic and Medical Mission. Dr. Johnston is now projecting a journey through Africa, and hopes to start at the end of January, accompanied by a band of young men from Jamaica.

The Jamaica Post says:—"In London several Americans and Englishmen will probably be added to the party. They will then proceed to Benguela and make their way into the interior of West Central Africa, hoping to cross the continent towards Mombasa. The object of the expedition is to establish undenominational mission stations in entirely new fields, to be carried on by a combination of American, English, and Jamaica laymen; also to aid some of the unsectarian and solitary missions in the Garenganze and other vastly populous, but hitherto almost unknown, regions.

"This matter, we believe, has occupied Dr. Johnston's thoughts for years, but the Jamaica mission has hitherto required his constant supervision. Now, however, it is so large, so firmly established, and contains so much assistance within itself, that he feels he can leave it for a year or two."

SWITZERLAND.—During 1889 there were 1069 applications for divorce in Switzerland, and in 865 cases the decree was actually pronounced. This is a proportion of 1·80 per thousand marriages. The canton of Geneva holds first place in this unenviable distinction, but it has been pointed out that in many cases the parties to the divorce proceedings have been foreign residents.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION IN PARIS.

NOVEMBER 1 being All Saints' Day, Miss de Broen's workers, as usual, sallied forth to distribute tracts to the thousands who flock to the cemeteries with their floral offerings on that day. The newspaper reports estimate the number of persons who entered the great burial-places of Paris as 58,355. It will be seen, therefore, how large a field of labour for the dissemination of Gospel truth was afforded.

A grant having been given by the French Tract Society, a selection was carefully made by our evangelist. At an appointed hour all the workers and outside Christian helpers connected with the Mission assembled for prayer, earnestly seeking a blessing upon their effort to win souls.

Other workers were of course upon the scene; but there was room enough and plenty to do for everyone. We plied our labour of love at the principal entrances, and met with few refusals. As a rule, the people receive tracts readily, and hands are outstretched on all sides for their reception. A few of the more respectable class, who 'have a religion,' pass coldly by, but these form a small minority. Fully 8000 tracts were given away by our band, and our hearts were cheered, when passing through the cemeteries afterwards, by coming upon several persons, here one and there another, diligently reading the words which could "make wise unto salvation."

This wholesale tract distribution is one of the many methods of evangelisation which surprises a stranger. Men are not ashamed to receive and read our papers on the tops of omnibuses or under the shade of trees in the Bois, and it never evokes a smile. Women will purchase Testaments or Gospels on the outside of a tram-car. All seem ready for an influx of truth.

But we need more sowers. We are straitened for want of means and workers. "Great doors and effectual" are open. Will our friends lay this matter to heart, and communicate with Miss de Broen, or myself?

(Mrs.) E. E. HORNIBROOK.

CONVALESCENT AND HOLIDAY HOME FOR THE BLIND (21, St. Peter's-road, St. Leonards-on-Sea).—This Home has recently been opened, in order to meet a long-felt need. The object is to receive, at a small weekly payment, blind patients recovering from illness or hospital treatment; children from the various blind schools during their holidays, or when needing change of air; and blind persons (teachers and Scripture readers especially) requiring rest and the benefit of sea air. The Home will be partly self-supporting, but the necessary expenses of rent and furnishing have to be met. Further particulars will be gladly supplied by the Lady Superintendent at the Home.

CHILD MARRIAGE AND MATURITY IN INDIA.—A telegram from Calcutta states that fifty-five ladies practising medicine in India have presented a memorial to the Viceroy, praying that the age of consent in marriage may be raised to fourteen. In the course of a lecture to Hindus, delivered in a public hall in Bombay, on the 11th ult., on child-marriage, Mrs. Pechey-Phipson, M.D., a well-known lady doctor in that city, made a remarkable statement as to the period at which Indian girls arrive at maturity. Before going to India, she said, she had heard and believed that Indian girls reached maturity at a much earlier age than those in cold climates. But her practice in native families had taught her that this was a mistake. "Judge, therefore, of my surprise to find that, so far from Hindu girls being precocious in physical development, they are much behind in this respect; that a Hindu girl of fifteen is about the equal of an English child of eleven, instead of the reverse; and that the statements which had been made to the contrary by Englishmen, who have no opportunity of becoming acquainted with Hindu family life, were totally misleading."

LONDON FACTORY LADS.

ON Saturday evening the second annual meeting of the London Factory Lads' Christian Home and Institute was held in Hampstead Vestry Hall, Haverstock-hill. The Home and Institute has been established to meet the case of lads from thirteen to seventeen who, on leaving school, are cast upon the world to seek their own livelihood. The Home provides bed, board, and food, at very moderate rates mitigated in amount in the case of the more necessitous. Although this Institute has been in existence but a short time, it has done a very cheering work. Of late, the number of residents has so increased, that the building at 331, Kentish Town-road, has proved to be too small, and larger premises have had to be taken in Patshull-road, a step in advance which will require an additional outlay of £500.

Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart., M.P., who was in the chair, delivered an eloquent address on the object of the Institute. It has been ascertained that from the common schools of London there are annually sent forth 70,000 lads, without any guardian, to enter on the battle of life. If that occurs in London, the number sent out to shift for themselves throughout Great Britain must be great indeed. Much has been done to reduce the perils to which lads were exposed during the impressionable period of from thirteen to seventeen years of age. Evening classes have been opened, and other means employed. But these are not sufficient. The exigencies of the case demand institutions such as this managed by Mr. and Mrs. Markham, where the religious and moral, as well as the intellectual and physical, welfare of the lads will be the concern of the best substitutes for parents or guardians. The speaker contended that this Lads' Institute was but the beginning of what should become a great national movement, first displaying its beneficent influence in the metropolis and then affecting the whole country. Let the work of succour and saving go on. Let the distress which cannot be removed entirely be at least alleviated, and the way be prepared for Christ to reign on earth.

Mr. T. H. WILLIAMS said he became aware of the existence of this Institute through a change he observed in the deportment of one of the boys he had in his establishment. In a humorous speech based on sound maxims, Mr. J. A. Groom, of the Flower Girls' Mission, commended the Institute, and said he had no doubt that the necessary £500 would soon be forthcoming. Dr. Evershed stated that during the year thirteen fresh lads had been admitted, mostly orphans. All in the Home were doing well. At the present time there were seven in the Home, and about 200 passes to the Institute had been issued to lads who in the aggregate had made nearly 10,000 visits. The Institute was open every night. Messrs. T. J. Wood, C. W. Startin, and Markham also spoke. The chairman subsequently announced that he accepted with pleasure the office of president for the ensuing year. Among those who were unabled to be present, but who sent letters of sympathy, were Messrs. Collard and Brinsmead, who have factories in the locality, and Mr. George Williams.

THE LORD'S PRAYER UNION.—Rev. Charles Bullock, Coomrith, Bournemouth, writes us respecting this organisation. He explains that each member, husband or wife, undertakes, unless prevented by special cause, to offer the Lord's Prayer in the home morning or evening, with sons and daughters able and willing to be present. In households where family worship has been perhaps unknown, it is thus introduced in a not too formidable way; and, doubtless, special family and individual petitions, as in time of sickness and trouble, will be gradually added. It is suggested that a sermon from every pulpit in the land, on home worship, would be likely, under God, to prove a great blessing.

WORK AMONG THIEVES.

DIMINUTION OF CRIME.

THE new report of the Directors of Convict Prisons continues to bear gratifying testimony to the falling-off in the cases of serious crime. The efforts for the reclamation of criminals in connection with the St. Giles's Christian Mission, are making their influence felt throughout the country. To give several breakfasts every morning to discharged prisoners at various centres in London, and then to follow up the good impression there made by giving further advice and help at the central office in Brooke-street, Holborn, is an arduous and costly service, but it is a successful one. In their report the Commissioners tell us that the number sentenced to various terms of penal servitude in England and Wales during 1889 was 918; that total was only eight higher than the total of 1886, which was the lowest on record. The other surprising main fact of the report is that the inhabitants of our convict prisons (5944) is little more than half what it was ten years ago. What the public will still better understand is that the maintenance of such prisons costs fully £200,000 less per annum than was the case a short time ago.

The number of men and lads discharged from the Metropolitan local prisons in the course of a year exceeds 21,000, and more than three-fourths of these will go in to breakfast, while over 5000 will sign the Temperance pledge. About half of those who go in to breakfast are assisted in one way or another, the greater part being relieved with money or tools to enable them to begin honest work, while many emigrate or go to sea. The stream of applicants who are daily attended to by Mr. W. Wheatley, at the Home in Brooke-street, Holborn, make up one of the most extraordinary studies in real life which even London can present. Mere lads, who have been the dupes of others, young clerks who have made a false step which they find it terribly hard to retrace, others more hardened, and who know more of the world, and who, having found that the way of transgressors is hard, desire to take a turn towards honest ways—these, and even the wives and children of offenders, who have themselves done nothing amiss, are helped and encouraged.

The energy devoted to the work of saving the lads has been attended with most blessed results. Three homes for the training and reclamation of such are now maintained. Instead of punishing lads who have been entrapped, magistrates now often hand over such to the St. Giles's Christian Mission.

This work becomes more and more effective year by year, but, it must also be added, it becomes more and more costly. Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, is the treasurer. The hon. superintendent, Mr. Geo. Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent's-square, though still far from well, is able to take an oversight of the work.

FAITH AND WORKS AT HULL.—During a recent visit to the town of Hull, says a writer in The Sentinel, it was my privilege to call on a Christian woman who, though suffering from cataract in the eye, rendering her at times nearly blind, still carries on the work to which her life has been given; she has been instrumental in saving hundreds of lives from shame and disgrace. In her own household are young women as servants whom she has rescued from sin; and scarcely a day passes but someone to whom she has been an earthly saviour calls to pay her a visit. So successful has this devoted Christian worker been that the magistrate very often commits cases to her care, for different terms, rather than sentence them to imprisonment. Unaccompanied she goes down into the worst dens of sin and infamy in that town (where the police dread to tread), and is greeted by the roughest with "Bless you, Mrs. Ham." In closing houses of ill-fame situated in the most respectable part of the town, the resort of the wealthy debauchee, she has been most successful.

CAMBRIDGE NOTES.

BY A GRADUATE.

WITH the closing of the Chapel Royal at Whitehall has ceased the Whitehall Preacherships of Oxford and Cambridge. In George I.'s reign this opportunity was offered for the learning of the Universities to be applied to the Metropolis. Since 1837 each University sent one preacher, who held office for one year. Before that date twelve divines from each University enjoyed that privilege year by year. The list of those who have held the preachership since 1837 contains many names of notable clerics, who subsequently filled high offices:—H. Philpott (Bishop of Worcester), C. Merivale (Dean of Ely), G. Currey (Master of the Charterhouse), C. A. Swainson (Lady Margaret Professor), C. Hardwick (Archdeacon), J. Allay (Bishop of Hereford), F. Gell (Bishop of Madras), E. H. Perowne (Master of Corpus), J. B. Lightfoot (Bishop of Durham), J. B. Pearson (Bishop of Newcastle, Australia), J. J. S. Perowne (Dean of Peterborough and Bishop-elect of Worcester), A. F. Kirkpatrick (Professor of Hebrew), J. J. Lias (Vicar of St. Edward's, Cambridge), V. H. Stanton (Ely Professor of Divinity), G. H. Whitaker (Chancellor of Truro).

Delegates from Sheffield, Doncaster, Rugby, Melton Constable, Stratford, Margate, Colchester, Lowestoft, Yarmouth, Tivetshall, Huntingdon, Bishop's Stortford, Leicester, and London are to speak at the Conference of Railway-men to be held here on November, 15, 16, 17. The meetings will be conducted by Mr. R. Nixon, General Secretary of the Railway Mission. On the first evening of the Conference twenty-three members of the Mizpah Band are to be present and sing.

The annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society is to be held in the Guildhall on Monday. Rev. Dr. Grattan Guiness and Rev. A. H. Kelk will speak.

Dr. Moulton has been preaching in Cambridge. Dr. Allon is advertised to preach in St. Andrew-street Chapel on Sunday next.

WHY I AM NOT AN AGNOSTIC.

BECAUSE I know that, though I cannot see
The great First Cause whence come all things that are,
Nor trace those secrets of existence far
Removed from ken; nor find inborn in me
A wholly-conscious power that is free
To grasp the wide domain of thought and will:
There none the less is present with me still
An undercurrent of glad certainty
That God reveals Himself somehow, somewhere,
Reflecting in the mirror of the soul
Some part—at least, so much as I can bear—
Of his most wondrous light. To view the whole
We are not able. Can, then, man know God? [trod.
Yes! from that blessèd hour when Christ this earth first

A NEEDLEWOMEN'S CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION exists at 4, Carteret-street, Westminster, London, S.W., where fair wages are paid direct to the workers, thus freeing them from the oppression of the sweating system. The women work from nine till six in healthy rooms, and orders of all kinds are carefully executed at a reasonable price.

MR. ISAAC PITMAN.—An illustrated biography of Isaac Pitman, of Bath, inventor of Phonography, by Thomas Allen Reed. will be published on Dec. 1 by Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co. Mr. Pitman still presides over the Phonetic Institute at Bath, which he has superintended uninterruptedly for more than half a century. He is in his 78th year, yet he supervises a correspondence of 20,000 letters a year, besides editing The Phonetic Journal, and compiling the numerous books which he annually publishes. He is a staunch vegetarian, teetotaller, and non-smoker, and is to be found at his desk every morning at six o'clock.

LONDON'S BITTER CRY.

SIR,—A pamphlet just published by James Clarke & Co., of Fleet-street—"Darkness Chased Away"—shows what has been accomplished by the London Congregational Union during the six years which have passed since the publication of "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" in 1883. The emigration work started by the London Congregational Union, and now carried on by the Self-Help Emigration Society, is conclusive as to the efficiency of the organisation and to the large measure of success secured at very small cost. Some fifty or sixty honorary agents and correspondents in various parts of Canada have rendered invaluable aid to the 3500 emigrants sent out by the Society. With existing agencies, the good accomplished might be multiplied fifty or a hundred-fold if the necessary funds were forthcoming for meeting some portion of the cost of passage and outfit of emigrants.

The same with the children's breakfasts, &c., provided out of the Outcast London Fund of the London Congregational Union. The necessary machinery for carrying on this work on a much larger scale already exists in connection with churches and mission-halls all over London. The only thing lacking is adequate funds. In proportion as this lack is met the work will go forward. One fact alone—viz., that over 200,000 garments have been supplied to the poor of London during the past six or seven years by the London Congregational Union—is in itself proof of active interest on behalf of the necessitous.

Fuller particulars will be gladly furnished by Rev. Andrew Mearns, whose earnest labours have contributed so much to the improvement of the condition of the poor of London, or I shall be pleased to supply information to any friends who feel an interest in the work.

Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

AN EAST-END BANQUET.

WE passed the building in which the new Lord Mayor was entertaining his guests last Monday night, and made our way to the Great Assembly Hall in the Mile End-road, in time to find Mr. F. N. Charrington scattering his 150 voluntary workers all over that commodious building, in readiness for the reception of 3000 or more poor folk previously invited by ticket, about two-thirds of whom were dockers and their wives. When the time came for admission, a staff of twenty policemen failed to keep back the surging crowd, which literally besieged the gates. By dint of great effort, the women among the crowd were conducted to the front and admitted first; but, when free ingress was allowed, the excitement of the inflowing human tide led one to earnestly wish that those who composed this huge crowd might manifest equal eagerness to obtain the bread of life.

To each man and woman was served a pork pie, a pound of cake, two apples, and a mug of tea. These good things were provided at a cost of about £130, and among the contributors to that sum were Sheriffs Harris and Palmer; but, unlike some of his predecessors, the Lord Mayor had not seen fit to send a donation.

The Crusaders' Band made acceptable music while the provision bags were being emptied. Captain Hamilton had something to say about the benefits of total abstinence and emigration; Mr. Thomas Richardson discoursed upon Dick Whittington and Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's story of John Tregenoweth, both subjects being illustrated by dissolving views, with some additional pictures. Then Mr. George Nokes told the old, old story of Jesus and his love, we trust not without good effect upon many of those who listened.

Thus among the varied Christian agencies of this Hall, and for the fourth time in as many years, a hopeful effort has been made in the way suggested by Christ Himself, to win for God those whose hard lot must, by contrast, cause vivid remembrance of the kindly influences which, for one night at least, have been brought to bear upon them.

"THE BRIDGE OF HOPE."

THE annual meeting of Miss Steer's "Bridge of Hope," Ratcliff Highway, which we briefly mentioned in our last issue, took place on October 30. It was one of the most interesting meetings we have attended in the little mission-hall, aforetime one of the worst dancing saloons in Ratcliff Highway. The earnest spirit and keenly sympathetic tone was sustained throughout the evening, and must have greatly encouraged Miss Steer and her fellow-helpers.

Mr. JOSEPH HOWARD, M.P., presided, and expressed warm approval of the admirable way in which the whole work was conducted, and commended the report to the attentive consideration of all. Miss STEER touched on some of the discouragements, and many of the encouragements, of the past year, the former throwing the latter into bright relief. Never had there been a time when they were so surrounded with difficulties, and for the last few months even the supply of means for necessary food had come day by day; but she testified to God's faithfulness, who had always sent enough to prevent their running into debt. However difficult and trying the work, or however isolated they sometimes felt, neither she nor her workers would wish to be anywhere else than in Ratcliff Highway. Earnest prayers followed, and we were pleased to see several clergymen and ministers from the district, whilst the neighbouring missions were well represented. Mr. R. C. MORGAN spoke encouragingly of the report, and remarked on the combined spirituality and common sense, the law and the grace, the severity towards wrong-doers, and the tenderness towards the wronged, which characterised its pages. In it Miss Steer had said: "The pathos in life, however low down in the social scale, enters into our hearts every day." That was the very kind of life the Man of Sorrows lived, and the report gave many illustrations of Christ-like sympathy with the pathos in those ruined lives which, in so many cases, were restored, renewed, and regenerated.

Rev. HARRY JONES gave a very cheery account of the two days spent in visiting the various homes connected with the Mission, and Mr. F. W. A. ARCHIBALD illustrated his point with a thrilling story of an adventure in the Alps, when he had been one of a search party for two ladies, who had been lost in the snow. He had never so realised what it was to be lost—and found; and with much force he applied this to the lost sisters among whom Miss Steer and her helpers worked. Mr. PERCY BUNTING spoke upon the competitive condition of society, in which the weak must inevitably go to the wall. He knew nothing better of its kind than Miss Steer's work for picking up waifs and strays; but we must go deeper down, and inquire into the causes of the present condition of things.

The Rev. Mr. SCOTT, Spitalfields, gave some touching records of his own experience, and Miss CHILD, of the "Welcome Home," spoke of the great help the "Bridge of Hope" had been to her in her work in Ratcliff Highway. She had now always a shelter close at hand for the poor lost girls, and the sailors often helped her in bringing such within the kindly Christian influence which had been such a blessing to them. Rev. PETER THOMPSON, of the East-end Wesleyan Mission, spoke earnestly and forcibly upon the terrible hindrance the drink traffic is to all Christian effort. "Give us three years," he said, "aye, even only one year, without the public-house, and East London would be transformed indeed.

We would very warmly commend to our readers the twelfth report of the "Bridge of Hope," and a little sketch of this most interesting work from its commencement, which is just printed. Its careful reading would doubtless help on the faith of many, while the work remains a testimony to the faithfulness of God amid untold difficulties. A visit to the Refuge would well repay any little time and trouble which might be expended. Few realise the growth of the work.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF, E.

AT the monthly workers' meeting, on Friday last, Mr. FINLAY GIBSON gave a valuable and most Scriptural address on "God filling, furnishing, and finishing"—all from, by, and for Him. Those present felt that the speaker was all too short in setting forth the precious truths of the all-sufficiency of our gracious God and Father.

Mr. GLENNY, hon. sec. of the North Africa Mission, gave a sketch of how God had for many years been preparing the peoples of Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli, for the preaching of the Gospel; how the work of the Mission had spread from the Kabyles to the other Berber races, from the Ishmaelites to the Israelites, from the Semitic races to those of Europe—Spaniards, French, Italians, and others.

He gave an interesting account of Abraham, a converted Shleugh of Morocco, who spoke to Mousa, and he to another of his race, who after a time left his home and travelled more than five hundred miles to Tangier to learn how he might get his sins forgiven. He was spoken to by the workers at Tangier, and they believe that he has truly found the Lord. His great desire is that Mr. Summers, one of the missionaries, should at once go with him to his people, who, he is sure, would all come to Christ in two years' time, should someone give them the message of salvation—a young believer's hopefulness of the conversion of others as soon as they hear of Christ. Praise and prayer were offered for the furnishing God had supplied and will continue to supply.

Mr. POPE, who represented several recently accepted workers for North Africa, spoke with fervour about God's "outfitting" for service. Mention was made of the need of a Strangers' Rest at Zanzibar, also of funds for the work at Ratcliff Highway. Mr. J. T. Isaacs, 163, St. George-street, London, E., the hon. secretary, would be glad to communicate with those interested in Strangers' Rests for sailors.

LECTURES ON PALESTINE.—We would invite London readers to attend an interesting course of lectures on Palestine, by Rev. James Neil, now being delivered at the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, Holborn, near Chancery-lane. The first was given last Friday evening on "Strange Scenes in Jerusalem," when the literal accuracy of a number of Bible references was marvellously and ably vindicated. These lectures are arranged by the Open-Air Mission, and will be continued each Friday evening in November, at seven o'clock.

VIENNA.—On Thursday, November 6, a Home for little destitute girls was opened in connection with the Wesleyan Church in Vienna by the local minister, Rev. G. F. Rösch, and Rev. S. von Bohr of Ulm. The dining-room was filled by about a hundred invited guests, many of them being persons of note. This Home has been opened at the expense of the Baroness von Langenau, who will support it with six inmates for a year. A matron and two deaconesses from Germany will take charge of it. It is hoped that this may not only be the nucleus of a much-needed institution which shall provide for boys as well as more girls, but that it may serve as a centre for Gospel work in this neighbourhood. J. E. B. MEAKIN.

Missionary Life:
ITS LIGHTS AND SHADOWS.

EAR SIR,—We feel that there must be a reat deal of attention drawn to the subject of oreign Missions by the appeal just made for a thousand missionaries in five years," and hat the Christians of more favoured lands ill be considering the matter; and our hearts' esire is, that none may respond to that appeal hom God has not chosen and fitted for the ork.

It seems to us that there is a danger of ome missionary addresses and periodicals utting too much prominence to the attractive de of missionary work, and that the gushing etters of some impulsive young missionaries ppeal too powerfully to that in our human ature which answers to what is novel and omantic, rather than call forth the deep esponse to the Master's call for labourers, rom faithful, consecrated hearts, who, realisng something of what it may mean to "follow nywhere," nevertheless lay themselves at is feet, and say, "Lord, send me." It is rue now, as ever it was, that China needs the Gospel. The people do not stand with outtretched arms to welcome the bearer of good tidings," nor are they, as some seem o represent them, thirsting for the Gospel. Alas! no. They are too much under the power f the god of this world, too much enchained y the fascinations of idolatry, too much enhralled by hoary superstition, and swayed by he base lies of those who pretend to be the guardians and leaders of the people, to be at all nclined to welcome those who come to them with what they stigmatise as a "foreign religion"; a veritable "doctrine of devils," in their estimation. The fact that the statistics for the year 1888 show an average of only proves that winning souls is not so easy a matter in China as some statements would lead us to suppose. There is a rather more widespread idea amongst the Chinese now than twenty years ago, that "western barbarians" are not quite so bad after all, and a little more toleration of their residence among them.

Travelling is not nearly as difficult as it used to be; but let a missionary attempt to reside in a new place, and see how the hatred comes out, how subtle are Satan's attempts to hinder his planting Christ's banner; how vile the reports that are circulated as to his purposes, life, and practices. His religion even represented as filthy and obscene; and, indeed, all his "good, evil spoken of;" and it is apparent that this is no "child's play," but a stern hand-to-hand combat with the powers of darkness, in a region where, from remote ages, the prince of darkness has held undisputed sway. The "intense interest," the open-mouthed wonder on the faces of the women who crowd around us to hear what we have to say, is not anxiety to hear our message, because it is the Gospel. It is in most cases wonderment at the colour of our hair and eyes, our complexion, &c., &c.; and they gaze at us, trying to make out what it is we are talking about.

Doubtless, here and there, in a heart prepared of God, some gleam of the light of life shines in, and a soul is won for Christ; but, comparatively, oh, how few! Therefore, while many listen to our oft-told tale, there is not so frequently the "rejoicing" over a sinner repenting; and the weary solicitous worker needs to turn for comfort and satisfaction to Him alone, whose promises are his staff in very deed. We need again and again, as Miss Ricketts said at the General Missionary Conference, "to turn away our eyes from human possibilities to the power of God and his purposes to save," in order to be kept from that paralysing discouragement which so many of us are apt to feel in our work amongst the heathen. Then, there is

LONELINESS AND MISUNDERSTANDING.

A young missionary lady, from a sheltered home, for instance, who has been surrounded by loving influences, and has glided along easily on the smooth current of religious life at home, with scarcely an adverse ripple, and propped up by all the aids to devotion and effort which are lavished so freely on workers there, finds herself alone, or almost alone, in a heathen city; at first, a mark for hatred, mistrust, suspicions of the basest kind; watched, jeered at, reviled; and the heart grows homesick and weary, and the hands "hang down," and if she has not already learned where her strength lies, and how to hide in the "secret of his pavilion from the strife of tongues," where will she be? The same applies, though, perhaps, in a less degree, to young men. Then there are

THE DANGERS OF THE CLIMATE.

The long, exhausting months of tropical heat, the possible weary days and nights of physical suffering, often unalleviated by the presence of skilful physician and sympathising friends—as in the case of a brother and sister lately arrived from the interior, where both were laid low together by dangerous sickness, and their only faithful native attendant stricken down with fever at the same time—the wasting fevers and other diseases, and, perhaps, as in many instances—some just recently—the life laid down in the prime and freshness of early manhood and womanhood.

Are we prepared for this? Have we counted the cost? Are we so fully laid on the altar that, come what may, there shall be, by God's grace, no wavering, no turning back, but a steady, unflinching purpose to go forward, even as the Master did when "He steadfastly set his face towards Jerusalem," though He knew it meant betrayal, shame, obloquy, and an agonising death on Calvary's Cross? You will say, perhaps, that we are going to an extreme, and painting the other side in

TOO SOMBRE COLOURS.

But it is not so. Experience has proved the existence of these and many other dangers and difficulties which lie in the pathway of those who wish to follow Christ in seeking out the lost among the heathen; and to those who are truly called of God to this work, imbued with the self-abnegating compassion for the lost which Christ had, and filled with the Holy Spirit, no amount of possible hardships, toils, privations, &c., would keep them back. The snows of Greenland, the fierce heat of India, the deadly climate of Africa, the cannibalism of the South Sea Islanders, the loathsome, contagious leprosy of Molokai, the fierce antagonism of Mohammedanism, the ancient conservatism and notable cruelty of China, have never yet kept back true-hearted souls and nothing that we can say will deter true labourers from saying, "I will go"; but it may send a few to their closets, it may cause deep heart-searchings, it may lead some to analyse afresh their motives in God's presence, and, being satisfied that they are right with God, to come forth with holier resolve and quickened purpose to follow him fully.

FOLLOWING WHERE HE LEADS;

God has been speaking lately. In the withdrawal from the field of old and tried missionaries, the changes that are taking place in our Mission circle, the return home of some who but recently came out with glowing hopes for the future, and the calling up higher of several others, we have heard his voice; and we want its vibrations to pierce other hearts in other lands, and to work out the purposes of his will in all future designs of aggregate effort and individual consecration. SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME AT GIBRALTAR.

SIR,—We have secured the public-house next door to our Home, Europa-road, Gibraltar, and I am to get possession on the 1st January, 1891, a lady having promised to make up that which was lacking of the £600 necessary to purchase it. The Christian soldiers are greatly delighted that the place which had so long been a snare to their comrades, and trial to the officers, was now to be a comfort and a home. It was good to hear their thanksgiving. About £250 will be required to make the necessary alterations and to furnish, but we have the promise that our God shall supply all our need.

The work is prospering in the Alamada; among the Spanish people there is a readiness to hear the word. Among the sailors in the Bay it is so, too. Our Bible Class and Gospel meetings are well attended, and though during the summer the numbers have not been so great, yet the blessing has been real, and, we trust, lasting. In January last a house was taken in the ancient town of Algeciras, five-and-a-half miles across the Bay.

In April a house, splendidly situated for our work, was offered to us for £580. A Christian friend lent the money, without interest, to purchase it, and, as the rent of the one we had was very high, we decided to purchase it and alter it to suit the work. We have a large hall which is crowded to overflowing every Sunday night. Many young lads come and listen so attentively while the Word of God is being read, and we are finding many who have a real desire to know the way of life. Three Spanish soldiers to whom I spoke the other day, said Spanish soldiers have no mother to care for them, and no home. Another, a mere boy, pressed the Gospel I gave him to his lips, and gave me many, many thanks. One sister has a class of children, whose parents wish them educated as Protestants. We need teachers full of faith and power to take up this work, as numbers of people want to send their children to us. There is a great need of a Medical mission, numbers of cases requiring such treatment coming before us. There are many towns and villages in this beautiful land which we would like to possess. I return to Scotland in a few days. My home address is, Rysland, Newton Mearns, by Glasgow.—Yours faithfully,

ALICE TODD OSBORNE.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Six days' special services at Lower Apsley-road Chapel, Bristol, from Nov. 15 to 20, by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, and Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud.——A united Gospel mission at Charlbury, Nov. 10 to 17, conducted by Rev. A. E. Foster, of Hastings.——Fifteen days' special mission at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, commencing Sunday, Nov. 6.——A mission at St. John's Church, Maindee, Newport, Nov. 9 to 23.——Gospel mission by Mr. Henry Thorne at Bristol, Nov. 23 to Dec. 8.——A twenty-nine days' mission at the "Speedwell," Portsmouth, by Mr. Herbert R. Francis, Nov. 23 to Dec. 21.——PRAISE: For blessing and answers to prayer during Mr. Elliott's mission at Potterne, Wiltshire.

WOMEN'S MISSION TO WOMEN.—In a circular letter of appeal, written on behalf of this branch of the work of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, Lord Aberdare says:—"It is not easy to exaggerate the extent of the evil with which the Female Mission to Women has grappled, nor the courage and self-devotion of those women who apply themselves to its care. They are certainly very great. For such work it is obvious that women are the best agents. They will best supply the sweet patience, the unflinching energy, the gentle love which will not be repelled by scorn, insult, or disgust. Upon women falls, and must fall, the brunt of the battle. But for the needful machinery—the homes, the hospitals, the work of emigration, the support of the missions, &c. &c., more help is indispensable."

WORK IN BUENOS AYRES.

MR. W. C. MORRIS writes to us from Buenos Ayres:—

"There are in this city about 500,000 inhabitants, all (with the exception of perhaps 2000 or 3000 Christians) either held fast in the meshes of Romanism, lying in the lethargy of indifference, or wandering in the intricacies of atheism. The part of the city in which the most abandoned live is the section known as the 'Boca del Riachuelo' (= mouth of the canal, or little river), situated in the south-east of Buenos Ayres. People from almost every part of the civilised world throng this neighbourhood, in addition to the native population, which is by no means small. Among these people sin in its very worst forms abounds, and, until very recently, no effort was being made to rescue them from eternal destruction.

"Impressed with a realisation of the terrible need and feeling that we were being led by the Lord, my wife and myself last year commenced a mission to these people, renting a hall in the principal street. We started with Sunday evening meetings in English only, then added an Italian branch, and afterwards opened a Sunday-school. Much has been done in visiting ships, lodging-houses, &c., and distributing Christian literature. We purpose opening a night-school for men and boys in Spanish (a nominal charge will be made); also Gospel meetings and Sunday-school, and general Christian work in same language.

"The Boca Mission cannot, for some time, be self-supporting, as the people among whom it is established are of the poorer class. Convinced that the work is of the Lord, we have decided to purchase a suitable plot of ground and erect a substantial building, which shall serve as a centre to the entire work. The estimated cost of site and building is about £3000. Here we enjoy religious freedom, and to this people the Gospel is news, and they hear it gladly."

Obituary.

MAJOR J. F. TRIST.

THE death is announced of Major J. Fincher Trist, of Tristford, near Totnes, South Devon, in ripe middle age. He was J.P. for Devonshire, and J.P. and D.L. for Cornwall. Death took place in London, whither the Major had repaired for medical treatment. One who knew him well writes: "He was ever planning means whereby he could benefit his fellow creatures. His thought for and sympathy with the poor and distressed and suffering of all classes was as wide as it was truly real; and rich and poor alike, deplore the loss of a kind and true friend. Many public institutions also have lost a ready helper."

REV. DR. TRESTRAIL.

Rev. Frederick Trestrail, D.D., the well-known Baptist minister, passed away on Tuesday last week at Clifton, at the age of eighty-seven. A native of Falmouth, and of Nonconformist parentage, he received his training for the ministry at Bristol College. As a student he had the privilege of attending Broadmead Chapel while Robert Hall occupied its pulpit, and among his other firm friends was the celebrated John Foster. His early pastorates were in London, Clepstone, and the Isle of Wight.

For four years he laboured in the south of Ireland, and for six years filled the office of secretary of the Irish Mission. In 1848 he became joint secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, holding the office until 1870, when failing health compelled his retirement. Resuming the oversight of his former church in Newport, I.W., he added twelve more years to his pastoral career. The last few years of his life were passed at Clifton, and he was a constant attendant at Tyndale Chapel, of which Rev. R. Glover is pastor.

A man of high principle and a powerful thinker, Dr. Trestrail exercised a strong and good influence in the Baptist body. His mind was vigorous to the last. He took an active part in the work of the Baptist Union, being president in 1880. A few years ago he published some entertaining "Reminiscences of Bristol," and it is stated he has left some autobiographical and other very interesting papers.

The Book World.

A Story of Spiritual Struggles.

SKETCHES OF THE QUIET IN THE LAND; or, Lights in the Dark Ages of Protestant Germany. By Frances Bevan. 5s. J. F. Shaw & Co. A work of peculiar interest. After depicting the state of Germany during and after the Thirty Years' War, Mrs. Bevan tells the life story of men who were no more satisfied with a dead Protestantism than with Papal error and corruption. Whether called Mystics, Quakers, Pietists, or "The Quiet in the Land," these men had in many cases broad and deep experience in the things of God. Voet and Labadie are among the outstanding characters in the book, but the life and influence of Tersteegen is presented at still greater length. We are happy to-day in the appreciation of spiritual truths which the Protestants of the sixteenth century did not disinter from the rubbish of ages, but which God's Spirit revealed in gracious measure to the reformers of Protestantism in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. With a generous sympathy Mrs. Bevan combines a very instructive method of treating her subject. We heartily commend the book as a charming recital of great spiritual struggles.

The Life Beyond.

OUR DEAD: WHERE ARE THEY? A symposium concerning the present condition of departed believers. Edited by T. H. Stockwell. 3s. 6d. Elliot Stock. Here are eighteen papers upon an attractive theme. That by Rev. J. Vincent Tymms, based on Divine revelation, is infinitely more powerful than Dr. Clifford's unsatisfying argument in support of a supposed law of personal continuity. The careful reader cannot but observe the persistency with which some of the writers describe the "present condition of departed believers" by means of Scripture statements regarding the yet future resurrection glory. Such a use of Scripture is surely unwarranted, and goes far to suggest the heresy that "the resurrection is past already."

DIVINE ROD AND STAFF IN THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW OF DEATH; or, Consolatory Thoughts for the Dying and Bereaved. By Rev. J. M. Anspach, M.A. 4s. Funk & Wagnalls. The author has brought much reading and observation to bear upon the ministry which his book is intended to serve. Death is spoken of from the very different points of view of those whose trust is in Christ, and those who are "without God and without hope in the world." Many illustrative incidents, collected during a pastoral career, are given, all showing Christ to be the "divine rod and staff." At the close are presented some "blossoms of comfort" in the form of poetical gleanings on "the life beyond."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SENTINEL (1d. Dyer Bros.) for November is unusually strong in its exposure and condemnation of the special forms of evil with which it does battle. All earnest and wholehearted social reformers ought to study this monthly, both to gain information and to imbibe something of the spirit of indignant wrath against wrong doing that shines out in every page.

THE MISSION OF METHODISM. By Rev. Richard Green. 3s. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room. This is the twentieth Fernley lecture, recently delivered at Bristol. The volume is a short history of Methodism, and much besides. A wholesome enthusiasm pervades the descriptive passages, and good judgment is shown in the statement of the mission of the denomination. This latter is held to consist in faithful adhesion to the following principles:—(1) Giving prominence to the spirituality of religion; (2) maintaining strict fidelity to Scriptural doctrine; (3) persevering illustration of the true fellowship of believers; (4) the upholding and expansion of home and foreign evangelism; (5) ceaseless efforts to promote social advancement. These might well be the principles of all Christian communities; and in proportion as the Church at large adheres to them, a testimony will be borne which armed host of adversaries "shall not be able to gainsay or resist."

The monthly part of GREAT THOUGHTS (6d A. W. Hall, 132, Fleet-street) is an extraordinar collection of selected literary material. Th "thoughts" seem to be culled from all quarter and all sources, irrespective of theological orthodoxy The Unitarian scholar, Dr. Martineau; the eminen novelist, George Meredith; the broad Churchman Kingsley, are freely drawn upon, and the briefe extracts are taken from poets, painters, musicians philosophers, statesmen, warriors, and other inde pendent thinkers of all climes and all kinds. Som echoes of the late Church Congress show that th compilers are up to date. There are many portrait and a full proportion of fiction.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS, 1890. 1s. Wesleya Methodist Sunday School Union. A bright volume containing many anecdotes, poems, and other item specially suited to the young. A high tone pervade the pages.

EARLY DAYS is a capital serial for the young The volume (1s. 6d.) would be a welcome presen to many. Some well-illustrated articles take th little ones "round the provinces," visiting Bristol Cambridge, Liverpool, Manchester, Plymouth, an York. (C. H. Kelly.)

FAITHFUL WORDS, Vol. xix. 2s. Holness. Th contents this year are fully up to the mark. Word of warning and counsel, encouragement and in struction, are well combined. The stories ar declared to be true. This Evangelical and Pro testant serial is likely, in volume form, to be favourite in village lending libraries. There i matter for young and old, and from first to last th aim is high.

THE WELCOME HOUR, Vol. XIV. An illus trated magazine of varied interest. The seria tale is "One Man's Golden Harvest; or, the Ca reer of Caxton," by Ellis H. Weaver. Dr. E. H Riches writes on "The Beginnings and Growth o History." "Agra" contributes articles illustra tive of well-known proverbs, and the general con tents are attractive. (1s. 6d. upwards. Marshal Brothers.)

"A1," Vol. III. This monthly makes an im posing annual. The serials include "Nolen Volens; or, the Adventures of Don Lavington," by George Manville Fenn, and "Hamilton, o King's," by Alice Price. Dr. Thain Davidson contributes a monthly talk; Mr. Frank Rede Fowk gives many a glimpse of the wondeful contents o South Kensington Museum; and Mr. Arthu Montefiore describes life in Central Africa. Thes pages will prove specially tempting to thoughtfu people. They are rich in instructive biography entertaining travel, and recreative scientific in formation, and the whole is admirably illustrated (8s. Partridge & Co.)

THE LEISURE HOUR for 1890. Among th specially interesting contents are a number of illus trated sketches of European monarchs, natura history notes and anecdotes, and papers on ancien and modern history. The serial is "Senior an Junior," by Leslie Keith, and there are severa short tales. Dr. Weymouth writes admirably o "A Day in Ancient Athens," and Mr. R. Scot Burn contributes "Brief Counsels concerning Busi ness." The notes on current science, invention and discovery cover a wide field, and the "Varie ties" include many matters of practical, everyda interest. The illustrations are numerous, an from first to last the pages are wholesome an attractive. (7s. upwards. Religious Tract Society.

THE SUNDAY AT HOME for 1890 contains a larg variety of Sabbath reading for every member o the family. Instruction and entertainment ar very happily combined. The serial story is "No by Bread Alone," by Isabella Fyvie Mayo. Ther are several short stories, also articles on "Faith Healing," by Dr. Alfred Schofield; Californian sketches, by Rev. Dr. Blaikie; and an account o Church life and work in America, by Dr. Aubrey Well-illustrated biographical sketches are a good feature. Rev. S. G. Green writes on Isaiah a prophet, poet, and statesman; and there are som very readable articles on foreign travel. Young and old of different tastes and capacities will find in these pages reading well worth their attention (7s. upwards. Religious Tract Society.)

MR. J. J. SCROGGIE has preached the Gospe every night during the past three weeks in the Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road, S.W. The meetings were not without tokens of Divine blessing. Severa were awakened and brought to professed decision Mr. Scroggie is now holding a mission at Gray's yard.

Letters to the Editor.

PROTESTANTISM AT CAPE CLEAR.

DEAR SIR,—A communication in THE CHRISTIAN of October 31 contained inaccurate statements in reference to the island of Cape Clear. As the clergyman in charge, I wish to lay the facts before your readers. It is not true that the Protestants there are becoming Romanists; as, during my connection with the place, of seventeen years' standing, only one has changed his religion. It is not true that during the above period any Protestant teacher has been withdrawn from the island.

No new chapel has been built; the present is an old one, and is the only one that ever has been in the island.

I visit Cape Clear regularly—considering that I have to cross seven miles of water, summer and winter, in an open boat, to reach the nearest point. I have paid twenty-five visits during the past twelve months, in each instance holding service and catechising the children.

I regret your correspondent was so unfortunate as to obtain unreliable information. I presume he is a stranger, and, if so, his is one of the many instances in which strangers are deluded by false statements respecting this country.

I remain, your obedient servant,
JONAS JONES (Rector of Tullagh).

Tullagh Glebe, Baltimore, co. Cork.

"THE LORD'S SUPPER."

DEAR SIR,—With reference to the correspondence in your columns on this subject, is it not of importance to keep in mind the passage in 1 Cor. xi., where it is said abuses had sprung up, and the Apostle adds in ver. 30: "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep"? May we not infer from the whole passage that the too frequent observance of this sacrament had led to the abuses complained of?

If so, is it not a warning to ourselves not to consider it as a part of the ordinary weekly service, but to give it in our minds a position of peculiar distinction, leaving it to each communicant to partake of this holy ordinance monthly, bi-monthly, or quarterly, as meets his conscientious convictions?—Yours, &c., NEMO.

SIR,—I must ask permission to say one more word on this subject.

Mr. Meyer raises an entirely incorrect issue when he says that I would "dilute the importance of the Lord's Supper, because it is not referred to in twenty out of the twenty-one epistles." I did nothing of the kind. Mr. Meyer asserted that it was "especially in the Lord's Supper that the inner life becomes replenished with grace." I asked for Scriptural proof of this assertion, and argued that if it were true, it was very strange that so "special" a means of replenishing our spiritual life should be conspicuous by its almost entire omission. This is not diminishing the importance of the ordinance, but questioning the truth of the statement that it is made to us a "special" means of grace above and beyond all other means.

In reply to my request for Scripture proofs of the assertion, and of the further statement that "the material act and the spiritual blessing are synchronous and simultaneous," Mr. Meyer professes to give three—(1) "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me . . . and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him." (2) "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you." (3) "He was known of them in the breaking of bread."

If these are all the proofs that can be adduced from Scripture, I submit that Mr. Meyer's assertion remains absolutely unsupported and unproved. Did I not know his guilelessness and earnestness of character, I should almost think he was trifling with the subject. The first two passages are altogether general, and have no reference whatever to the Lord's Supper, and the third can hardly be seriously urged as a proof that the ordinance is a special means of "replenishing the inner life." Indeed, not only is nothing of the kind asserted, but whatever spiritual blessing the two disciples received they expressly ascribe to the fact that Jesus "talked with them by the way, and opened to them the Scripture."

In the absence of anything which can be really called Scriptural proof, I maintain that the statement to which I have objected is devoid of authority from the Word of God, and I much regret that it should have been made by one to whose teaching we are many of us so deeply indebted. But having called attention, as I felt bound to do, to what appeared to me unscriptural and dangerous, I desire now to let the matter rest.

INQUIRER.

MR. MEYER'S REPLY.

SIR,—A very brief reply will suffice in answer to "Inquirer's" last letter. I still hold that, "especially in the Lord's Supper, the inner life is replenished with grace"; because in that ordinance our spiritual faculties are specially quickened in their action by the memories which cluster about the rite, by the analogy between the outward act and the inward feeding on his flesh and drinking of his blood, and by the specialness of the whole service. And as we thus obey our Lord's parting command, and are in a specially receptive condition, through the grace of the Holy Spirit, it is surely not unreasonable to believe that there is an especial, simultaneous, and synchronous communication from Him of Divine grace.—Yours,

F. B. MEYER.

Evangelistic Notes.

Sunderland.—A general Church of England mission was commenced in this town on Sunday last. Ten special missioners are at work, among them being Rev. W. H. Aitken.

Leith.—The Freemasons' Hall, Henderson-street, has been taken for evangelistic and temperance work. Upwards of a hundred persons have given their names as members of the congregation under whose auspices the work will be carried on.

Mr. and Miss Parker have just concluded missions at Shipley, Yorks, and Burnley, Lancashire. In both towns believers have been edified and sinners led to accept Christ. The new address of these workers is 8, Station-road, Portslade-by-Sea, Brighton.

Walthamstow.—Mr. Thomas Payne recently held nightly Gospel meetings for a fortnight, in connection with the Railway Mission. Sixty or seventy persons professed to trust Christ as their Saviour, and Christians were stimulated in their heavenward course.

Potterne, Wiltshire.—A three weeks' mission has been held in this village, conducted by Mr. J. Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings have been largely attended, notably so by those who never enter the usual places of worship. Great blessing has attended the preaching of the Gospel, and many conversions have taken place.

Leighton Buzzard, Beds.—A brief but none the less interesting mission has been conducted here by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the auspices of the local Y.W.C.A. All denominations of Christians in the town united in the mission. A number of persons gave in their names, either as converts or earnest seekers for salvation. Many hearts to-day are singing praises to the Lord who at the commencement of the mission were dumb before God.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith have held a nine days' Gospel mission at Fulham, at the request of the united Nonconformist churches of the district; all of whom joined very heartily in the work. The Congregational Church was the central place of meeting. Each evening inquirers have come forward to testify their faith in Jesus and their earnest desire to follow Him. At the close large numbers came to a special meeting in the Lecture Hall. Meetings for the children were conducted by Mr. George Goodman, of the Children's Special Service Mission, and were attended by gratifying results. The effect upon the churches generally has been most beneficial. The evangelists are now at New Court Chapel, Tollington-park, N.

Carrickfergus.—A fifteen days' mission, conducted by Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken, has been concluded at the Parish Church of Carrickfergus. The services (which included meetings for children, held by Rev. George Peters, Liverpool, and work amongst women by Mrs. Crouch) were largely attended, and have proved a source of blessing to many. The interest deepened day by day, until towards the close of the work the fine old church was taxed to its utmost to accommodate those who flocked to hear the Gospel message. At the after-meetings many professed to have found pardon and peace, while others had their doubts and difficulties removed, and were led to a higher level of Christian experience.

Rev. R. Balgarnie's mission at the Congregational Church, Worthing (Rev. R. Tuck, B A., pastor), has been attended with much blessing. The noon Bible-readings and evening services were well attended, many persons entering the inquiry-room. An invitation was sent from the St. Raphael's Convalescent Home to hold a service with the patients, which was accepted.

Rev. William Haslam arrived in Alexandria with Mrs. Haslam on the 30th ult., and stayed with Rev. T. R. Lawrence at Miss Robinson's Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute. A four days' mission, including two sermons at St. Mark's Church, were attended by almost all the British residents, as well as by a large number of the garrison, a few English-speaking Germans, and some Copts. The prayers of sailors and soldiers at the close of Mr. Haslam's evening addresses at the Institute, and the testimony which many of them gave at the after-meetings, were full of power and earnestness. The fruits of the mission are as much to be reckoned among the increased blessing upon the already saved, as in the return of backsliders and the conversion of the unsaved.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Nottingham.—It is with a sense of deep thankfulness to God that we record the labours of this faithful evangelist. He has just concluded a series of services in connection with St. Ann's Church. Truly these have been "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Many have been awakened and led to trust Christ fully; many more have been helped on their way to Zion. Gospel meetings were held for men only and women only on Sunday and Monday afternoons, with great blessing to souls. The afternoon Bible-readings during the week—full of teaching and pointed illustration — were very suggestive and spiritual. Mr. Thorne's bright, earnest words, and true testimony to the grace of God in the "story of his life," were also much valued. W. M. BUTCHER, Curate.

A PLEA FOR PORT SAID.

HAVING been compelled by unavoidable circumstances to stay some little time in this place I have become acquainted with a small band of workers, whose claims for sympathy and help I wish to bring under the notice of others. Port Said has now about 19,000 inhabitants, chiefly Mohammedans, Roman Catholics, or Greek Christians. The town is said to be increasing at the rate of 200 a year.

This population is chiefly dependent for a livelihood upon the coming and going of steamers through the Suez Canal, many of which stop here to take in coal. To supply these a large number of steamers are employed in bringing coals from Cardiff. Sometimes as many as twelve of these boats will be discharging their cargoes at one time. The temptations besetting the men when they go ashore are very great, and the counter-attractions very few! Among the latter is the Sailors' Rest, commenced eighteen months ago, Mr. and Mrs. Locke being the managers, and Mr. W. H. Taylor (agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society here) the honorary secretary. These are assisted in their missionary efforts by a Mr. and Mrs. Game and their son, lately come out from England.

Their work consists in visiting all the ships passing through the Canal, distributing tracts, selling Bibles, or conversing with the men. A mission meeting is also held on Sunday evening, which is usually attended by thirty to forty seamen. I feel persuaded that a good work is being done, and one which deserves the support of the friends of missions. Port Said is a dark place, as all can testify who know it, and it is cheering to see a little light kindled, which I trust may go on increasing in brightness. It is also pleasant to think there is a Home for our poor sailors there to which they can go instead of to those dens of iniquity which abound. The workers here, with the exception of Mr. Taylor, are unconnected with any home organisation, and are here in faith that the Lord has called them to the work, and will sustain them in it. The rent for the Home and residence of the workers is £61 10s. yearly, the total annual expense being about £180; but, as the staff is now increased, more will be needed.

William Beck, 3, Glebe-place, Stoke Newington, London, N., will receive any communication that may be sent him. ALFRED WRIGHT.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Canon G. H. Curteis is the new chaplain of the Savoy Chapel.

The Record hears that proposals are on foot for the publication of a new Church Hymn-book on distinctly Protestant lines.

Rev. Canon Eliot, vicar of Holy Trinity, Bournemouth, has been offered, and has accepted, the Deanery of Windsor. He is an earnest evangelical.

Services have been resumed in the nave of Norwich Cathedral, which partake of the nature of a mission. Laymen go out into the streets and invite the people in.

The Record says the total amount received by the treasurers of the Stanley Fund for a steamer on Lake Nyanza now reaches £3000. To secure the steamer for the C.M.S. about £800 more must be raised.

Dr. Smythies, Bishop of Africa, had an interview with the German Emperor on the work of the mission in what is now German territory. It was arranged that without losing their nationality the clergy, laymen, and ladies would be able to work on unmolested.

Bishop Smythies preached his farewell sermon, before returning to Africa, at St. John's, Red Lion-square. The Bishop will take with him three clergy and two lady nurses, thus raising the staff of the Universities' Mission to seventy persons.

It is resolved to erect a Memorial Institute at Eastbourne in honour of the late Canon Pitman, who was for sixty years vicar of that town. The carrying out of the scheme will cost about £2000. It will include literary and technical classes, a library, and a reading-room.

On Friday afternoon the Marchioness of Salisbury opened a new and commodious parish room and mission hall in connection with St. Paul's Church, Stratford. The building has large and small halls, accommodating 500 and 225 persons respectively, and a suite of rooms for various purposes.

At the autumnal conference of the Church Association at Hull, Rev. Talbot Greaves said that the line of the evangelical party should be one of very marked separation from worldliness and consecration to the service of Christ, and of warm sympathy with the great philanthropic movements of the day.

At the anniversary, a few days ago, of the Devon and Exeter Church Missionary Association, it was stated that the country had never done so much as during last year for the cause of missions, nor had the interest of the cathedral city ever been so keen. The total sum raised was £5123. The Bishop and Sir John Kennaway, Bart., presided over enthusiastic meetings.

METHODIST.

A meeting on behalf of the London Mission has been held at Hull. One of the most notable features was the number of ministers present.

Rev. William Burgess, Wesleyan missionary, Secunderabad, reports that he has baptized 200 natives this year, and expects before the year closes to report double that number.

A proposal, warmly favoured by Dr. Moulton, has been made to hold a weekly noon prayer-meeting at the Centenary Hall.

The Wesley Centenary Memorial, initiated a few weeks ago, and warmly supported by Wesleyan ministers throughout the country, is now making sure progress, and has reached £5000.

The new movement initiated by Dr. Stephenson some months ago, and known as the "Methodist Deaconess Institute," is now in working order, and bids fair to become a great success.

At Outgang-lane, Nottingham, upwards of 100 persons have professed conversion, the evangelist being Mrs. Evinson, of Brigg. Rev. J. Bradbury has also conducted a most successful mission at Bulwell.

Two thousand three hundred and forty pounds has been bequeathed by Miss Evans, of Newport, to the Calvinistic Methodist Connexion, South Wales, one-half "to be applied to missionary work among the Irish."

The secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society state that out of a prospective home income for the year of £100,000 they have received only £13,000; meanwhile they have to borrow at a high rate of interest to meet liabilities.

In connection with the West London Auxiliary Sunday School Union, Professor Beet is delivering a course of lectures to Sunday-school teachers on "The Gospel of Paul." A large audience attended the first lecture at Quex-road Wesleyan Chapel, Kilburn.

Mr. Councillor Duckworth, of Rochdale, who last year generously presented the denomination with a mission car, which is doing good work, has intimated his intention of presenting another car, with a view to increased effort to carry on evangelistic work in the villages and small towns.

The Methodist Council of Leeds, in view of the municipal elections, passed a strong resolution urging Methodists to use their influence with town councillors to secure the enactment of by-laws against betting, to take measures for the improved housing of the poor, and to enforce the laws against Sunday trading.

It is reported that the last Census shows upwards of 31 per cent. of the entire population of Canada to be Methodists. During the past five years the increase in the number of Church members of that body was 38,999, in Sunday-school scholars, 34,855, while the Church property increased in value, 1,000,700 dollars.

The "Orchard Mission," formed by young men of the Peckham Wesleyan Chapel, Blue Anchor-lane, has recently developed a Boys' Club, Girls' Club, and Young Men's Institute. The Mission has been in existence about three years, and has proved a great benefit to the people of this poor locality, which has been described as the "Seven Dials of South London."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Donald Fraser has declined an urgent invitation to undertake a preaching tour in Queensland.

Rev. J. McNeill has consented to conduct evangelistic services in Westminster Chapel on four Sunday evenings in December.

In reply to a representation from the Presbytery of Carlisle, the Chief Constable of Cumberland and Westmoreland has issued a circular to superintendents instructing them to make such arrangements as will enable the police to attend a place of Divine worship once each Sunday when not engaged on special matters.

Resignation.—Rev. D. Smith, Grimsby.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. T. C. Phillips, Abercarn, to Peniel, Penycae. — Rev. Lodwig Lewis, Aberdulais, Neath, to the churches at New Brighton and Seacombe. —Mr. W. G. Macfie to Pendleton Church, Manchester.

BAPTIST.

A prayer union for the wives of Baptist ministers and missionaries has been formed.

Mr. Spurgeon was seriously ill with rheumatic gout throughout the past week, but was sufficiently recovered to leave London at noon on Monday for Calais, en route for Mentone.

During Mr. Spurgeon's absence the Tabernacle is to be repaired and cleaned, and services will be held for four Sundays in the Lecture Hall, and in the Crown Baths, Kennington Oval.

Calls Accepted. — Rev. J. Crook, of Tyldesley, to College-park Church, Lewisham.—Rev. J. S. Johns, St. Ishmael's, to Bethabara Church, Crickhowell.

Resignations.—Rev. F. T. B. Westlake, Radcliffe, near Manchester.—Rev. D. Taylor, Chadwell Heath —Rev. W. Stokes, Pinner.—Rev. Daniel Edwards, Brymbo.—Rev. Geo. Hughes, Llanfair.—Rev. D. Hussey, Milford. —Rev. D. B. Richards, Pisgah, Talywain.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A succession of ministers will take the services at Streatham Town Hall up to the end of the year.

Darnall Church, Sheffield, has over 200 members of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon class, which has been carried on for eighteen months.

Rev. Edward White is lecturing every Tuesday in November on "The Holy Spirit in Relation to Scientific Atheism" (Merchants' Lecture), at the Memorial Hall.

Rev. Thomas Blandford has closed his ministry at Westgate-on-Sea, but continues to reside there, and hopes still to be useful as an occasional supply elsewhere, or in temperance work and other ways.

Dr. R. W. Dale preaching last week in Manchester on "The Ministry Required by the Age," insisted that a preacher should declare the Christian Gospel, should aim to awaken the sense of personal responsibility, and should insist on the true nature of sin; a Christian social order, he contended, was impossible except to a Christian people.

Resignations.—Rev. H. E. Radbourne, Broughton-park Church.—Rev. J. Shuker, Tottington, Lancashire.

Calls Accepted.—Rev. W. H. Chesson to Alnwick.—Mr. Edwin Legg, of New College, London, to Bexhill-on-Sea.—Rev. J. Sellicks, Newton Abbott, to Spencer-street Church, Leamington.—Mr. John Lewis, Llandilo, to South Bank Church, Middlesborough.—Rev. R. C. Scurrah, Malton, to Hessle-road Church, Hull.—Rev. H. E. Williams, Swansea, to Cilfynydd.

SALVATION ARMY.

Major Cooke makes an appeal for 100 female officers, from twenty to twenty-six years of age, to work in the slums.

Six new training garrisons are being opened in the East-end, in order to help in providing a force for the new social scheme.

A two days' Convention on "Practical Religion" is to be held in Exeter Hall on 24th and 25th inst. General Booth and others will take part in the meetings, which are timed for 11, 2.30, and 6.30 each day.

Mrs. Colonel Pepper, of Milford-hill, Salisbury, carries on a Servants' Registry, and gives the profits to the Army. She has just divided £16 between the Rescue and Slum work, and will be happy to bring Christian mistresses and servants together.

The Wellington Castle, off Upper-street, Islington, has only been opened five months, but about 600 persons have knelt at the penitent form, one a little servant girl, who has devoted all her leisure time to visiting in the slums and public-houses with signal success.

Miss Lucy Booth was to bid farewell to friends in Exeter Hall on the 13th inst., on the occasion of joining others for service in India, but upon medical advice, she defers her visit to India until after a stay in the South of France, whither she has gone, in hope of recovery from serious illness.

Rev. William Allen, Wesleyan minister, 25, Harringay-grove, Hornsey, N., suggests that a shilling subscription from every working man in Great Britain, who is in work, should be started towards the fund General Booth needs to carry out his scheme to rescue the "submerged tenth of our fellow creatures." Captains of corps would receive and forward the amounts.

The Army, which was started in Helsingfors, Finland, last year, could not, on account of certain formalities, get its statutes sanctioned by the Senate; but has, nevertheless, been tolerated by the authorities, as there was no doubt it was doing some good, especially to the poorer classes. Now, however, a prohibition against the activity of the Army has been issued, and executed by the police in a manner that will provoke every citizen, since not only have the public meetings been dissolved, but even domestic privacy has been invaded.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Branches of the Y.W.C.A. have been established in Omagh, Stewartstown, and other places in the North of Ireland.

Miss Milliken, of Belfast, is going out to India to enter on zenana work in connection with the Presbyterian Church.

The first anniversary of the Belfast City Mission was held on Tuesday week in Donegall-square Methodist Church. The report was a most encouraging one. Scores of drunkards had been reformed and hundreds of persons had professed conversion.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The death on Sunday of the venerable and well-known Dr. James Brown, of the U.P. Church, Paisley, will be mourned by many.

At the annual meeting last week of the Glasgow auxiliary of the McAll Mission in France, many testimonies were given as to the value of the work.

Rev. A. M. Bannatyne, of the Free Church, Aberdeen, announced his resignation of his charge at the Presbytery meeting last week; a committee was appointed to consider the case.

In recently referring to the proposed revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith, Professor Laidlaw said that a Church ought not to be the slave of a confession. At the same time addition and illumination was the proper course to pursue, not rejection.

A series of letters on the question whether the Free Church is on the Down Grade, are appearing in The Inverness Courier. They are written by a well-known Highland clergyman, and discuss the subject in a temperate and at the same time an earnest spirit.

At the opening of the Divinity Session of the Edinburgh University, Professor Flint discoursed on the subject of ecclesiastical and theological tests in the Divinity Halls of the Universities of Scotland. He had no sympathy with the objection that if the theological teaching in the Universities were not restrained by tests it would grow out of touch with the religious faith of the churches.

Under the auspices of the Glasgow Home Mission Union, nearly forty pulpits were occupied last Lord's Day on the principle of exchange, to preach the annual sermons of the Union in its north-east section. The exchanges and sermons were shared in by ministers of the Established, Free, United Presbyterian, Evangelical Union, Congregational, Methodist, and Baptist Churches. The Union in this section embraces five-sixths of all Evangelical Churches.

Miss Elizabeth Jane Dallas, a well-known lady at Nairn, has passed away at the age of eighty-five years. She was held in very high respect in Nairn, and was a great friend of Dr. Chalmers, Dr. Candlish, and other leaders of the Free Church, with whom she frequently corresponded at the time of the Disruption. A gentlewoman of great intelligence and wonderful memory she was the great authority on all matters of family history and traditions in the district in which she lived.

The annual meeting of the Grove-street Institute, Glasgow, was held last week. The institute is an undenominational organisation, carried on almost entirely by volunteer workers, about 200 in number, connected with the various evangelical churches of the city. The buildings embrace twenty-two halls and class-rooms which are occupied on Sabbath and every evening of the week in connection with religious, temperance, and benevolent efforts of the most varied kind. Each week about forty Bible-classes are taught, exclusive of the Sabbath-school. On Sabbaths upwards of 1000 children are instructed, besides which evangelistic meetings for young and old are held, and are largely taken advantage of by the working-classes.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. J. C. Leigh, Belvedere, Kent. — Mr. William Blewett, Carsola, St. Dennis, a Methodist local preacher for nearly fifty years.—Rev. John Roberts, for thirteen years pastor of the church at Glynneath.—Rev. R. M. Webster, Tasmania, formerly of Kelso.—The wife of Dr. Smith, of Mongolia (née Miss Jessie Philip), at Chefoo.—Rev. David W. Morris, librarian to the Theological Hall, Edinburgh.—Mrs. Collyer, wife of Rev. Robert Collyer, of New York.—Rev. William Cochrane, for over thirty years minister at Cradley.—Dr. John Edmund Cox, vicar of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate.—Rev. W. B. A. Raven, vicar of Christ Church, Streatham.—Rev. G. H. Whitaker, rector of Garforth, near Leeds.—Rev. T. J. M. Townsend, vicar of Searby-cum-Owmby.—Rev. John Brewer, Farningham.—Mrs. Malins, mother of the Grand Chief Templar.—Mr. J. Thornton, for twenty years deacon of Providence-place Congregational Church, Cleckheaton. — Rev. Evan Evans, Penybont, Trelech.—Mr. N. Tufveson, Swedish missionary on the Congo.—Mr. Edwin Poole, senior deacon of Graham-street Baptist Church, Birmingham.—Hon. Mrs. Trench, widow of the late Archbishop Trench, in her eighty-fourth year.—Rev. David Watson Morris, for about thirty years librarian of the United Presbyterian Theological Hall in Edinburgh.—Mr. Samuel Kay, deacon of the Baptist Church at Astley Bridge.—Mr. C. S. Tite (Towcester) in Vancouver's Island.—Rev. G. H. Whitaker, rector of Garforth, near Leeds. — Rev. Montague Ellis-Viner (Universities' Mission to Central Africa) at Mozambique.—Rev. John Aiken, Presbyterian minister of Bellasis, co. Cavan.—Rev. John Finlay, M.A., incumbent of Belleck, co. Armagh.—The wife of Rev. E. C. West, Methodist minister, Newtownards, co. Down.—Rev. Stewart Carse, Carland, Dungannon.

M. BOEGNER, director of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions, leaves Bordeaux on November 20 for Senegal, in order to inspect the work there in progress.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, NOV. 16.—Eccles. X.

THIS chapter is more disconnected than the previous ones.

1. The "little folly" which spoils the character of "him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour" reminds one of the New Testament teaching as to the danger of a "little leaven" (Gal. v. 9).

2. The "heart" in Scripture is not only the seat of the affections, but of man's deepest thoughts and of his inner life. See Prov. iv. 23. To keep the heart at one's right hand is to have it at hand for consultation before action. To keep it at the left, to be swayed in action rather by emotion and feeling than by deliberation.

4. Leave not thy place, i.e., of subjection; bear the injury rather than retaliate.

10. The first part of this verse seems an illustration. As the sharpening of his axe saves the woodcutter much superfluous exertion; so does wisdom, in directing one's course of action, save one from expending strength and energy in vain.

15. The city to which the fool cannot find the way with all his labour is that spoken of in Heb. xi. 10. We read, however, in Ps. cvii. 7, how the wise find their way to it.

16. Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child.—This word may be rendered "youth," and as such is used of Rehoboam (2 Chron. xiii. 7) at the time of his coming to the throne when he was about forty years old. It seems prophetically to anticipate that childishness or youthful folly which prompted Rehoboam to reject the old men's counsel and follow that of the young men.

19. The first clause of this verse is rendered by Delitzsch, "Meals they make into a pleasure." This gives the key to the whole. Meals, wine, and money have their use; but these self-indulgent princes (16, 17) abuse food to minister to their laughter and merriment, and, as for money, they treat it as a god and look to it for "all things." Nevertheless the evil ways of those in authority do not justify our cursing them (20).

MONDAY, NOV. 17.—Eccles. XI.

The selfish greediness of men of the world spoken of at the end of the last chapter is now contrasted with the bountiful character of the man of God who seeks the good of others rather than his own, and acts on the principle of liberality to others rather than on calculations of self-interest.

1. Cast thy bread upon the waters, &c.—The Speaker's Commentary explains this, "Show hospitality even though the corresponding return of hospitality to you seem improbable; yet be hospitable in faith." But others "understand by bread the seed by the produce of which bread is made. Seed cast upon the fertile soil flooded by the early rains would be returned to the sower in autumn with large increase."

2-6. The thought of coming evil makes the man of the world selfish, as he thinks only of how the coming evil may affect him; but the man of God is exhorted on this account to be bountiful, leaving results with God. He sows and reaps regardless of what wind and sky may threaten, for they are subject to God's direction not to his.

5. Our Lord had this verse in his mind when speaking to Nicodemus (John iii. 8), for here, as there, the same word is used for both wind (4) and spirit (5). The allusion, too, here, to the mystery of natural birth (5) corresponds with the allusion to the new or spiritual birth in John iii.

8. Let him remember the days of darkness.—To the believer in Christ, "life and incorruption (R.V.) have been brought to light through the Gospel" (2 Tim. i. 10); so to him this has no application, though it represents the bondage spirit of the old dispensation (Heb. ii. 15).

TUESDAY, NOV. 18.—Eccles. XII.

The chapter should begin at xi. 9, with the words, "Rejoice, O young man," &c., as there the subject begins which goes on to xii. 7. It is an expostulation with the young to remember, in the midst of all their self-enjoyment, that judgement lies before them. Therefore they are exhorted to remove sorrow from the heart, not by drowning it in present pleasure, but by making provision for the future before the evil days come, and that by turning to God, for such is the meaning of "Remember thy Creator." Then follows a highly figurative description of the burdens and weaknesses of old age, leading up to a description of death itself (5-7), which is not spoken of as annihilation, but the return of the spirit to God who gave it.

8. A repetition of the theme of the book as stated in the beginning (i. 2), and now coming in most appropriately at the close, after a description of the decay and death of man at his best estate.

9. The preacher...set in order many proverbs.—The writer seems to identify himself with the author of the Book of Proverbs, who, we know, was Solomon.

13, 14. The concluding words sum up the lesson which the revelation of the vanity of life contained in the book tends to teach—viz., the fear of God and the observance of his commandments as being that which concerns every man. This fear is not dread, but includes faith, hope, and love, as we read (Prov. xiv. 26), "In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence, and his children shall have a place of refuge." This and the following verse go beyond the hitherto Israelitish standpoint, and announce the fear of God and the coming judgment as common to all mankind. "There comes out here for the first time, in the form of doctrine, that universal human view (of the coming judgment) which is continued in the announcements of Jesus and the Apostles."—Delitzsch. See Rom. ii. 16, as a New Testament echo of this passage.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 19.—Song of Solomon.

All attempts to find a literal or actual fulfilment of this mystical and therefore most holy book in the outward circumstances of Solomon's life are to be avoided. Its recognition in the Jewish canon has always by Jewish writers been connected with its allegorical and mystical character. The frequent allusions to it in the New Testament all take this for granted. Literalism here is little better than profanity.

Solomon, admitting him to be the author, stands here for the Prince of Peace—the Heavenly Bridegroom. It is a disputed point whether the Bride be Israel or the Church. The best answer is, it is the Israel of God, i.e., the people of God in Israel; "for they are not all Israel which are of Israel," not excluding even then such Gentiles as should "sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God." It is Israel in the inner sense of Ps. lxxiii. 1, "even such as are of a clean heart," those whom our Lord calls Israelites indeed (John i. 47). As He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom, it may with reverence be said, she that hath the Bridegroom is the Bride, or, to put it in the words of 1 John v. 12, "He that hath the Son hath life," and therefore belongs to the Church of the living God, which contains no dead members.

The structure of the book is viewed differently by different commentators. Delitzsch, whose division is mostly followed by modern writers, finds six main sections: i-ii. 7, ii. 8-iii. 5, iii. 6-v. 1, v. 2-vi. 9, vi. 10-viii. 4, viii. 5-14. Hengstenberg finds ten, but agrees in dividing his ten where Delitzsch does his six, at the end of v. 1. He calls the first part of the book the Union, and the second the Re-union.

Chap. i. opens with a striking contrast to the tone of dissatisfaction which characterised the previous book where all things savoured of vanity and vexation of spirit, and ended in death. Here a person is presented whose love satisfies the soul, and whose name, "as ointment poured forth," draws forth love. The Spirit's power draws the soul into communion with Him (4), and, while rejoicing in Him, a sense of its own blackness or sinfulness seizes it, though not separate from an assurance of the comeliness which has been put upon it (Ezek. xvi. 14.) This sense of sin is further connected with a sense of failure in tending the vineyard committed to its charge (6), and the soul expresses its longing desire for union with the heavenly Bridegroom and an interest in his shepherd care (7). The first words of the Bridegroom occur in ver. 9, and are generally supposed to denote no more than a comparison of the Bride with a beautiful horse; but Fausset in his commentary thinks the allusion is to "the deliverance from Pharaoh at the Red Sea," and that this accords with the allusions to the tabernacle (i. 5, iii. 6), and is "put rightly at the beginning of the elder Church's call." This thought is most suggestive in its bearing upon the mystic sense, for we know that the destruction of Pharaoh's horses and chariots at the Red Sea is a type of the Church's deliverance from her spiritual enemies by Christ's death. As the Bride has just confessed her sin (6) and unfaithfulness, what can be more appropriate than that the Heavenly Bridegroom should, in language taken from Israel's redemption from Egypt, assure her that all her sins were "cast into the depths of the sea." Comp. Exod. xv. 19. In other words, we have here a prophetic anticipation of the teaching of Rom. vi. 6, "Our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed," and the allusion to the ornamental "chains" which follows seems parallel to the teaching as to service which occupies the latter part of Rom. vi.

THURSDAY, NOV. 20.—Song of Solomon II.

To the seventh verse the Bride and Bridegroom exchange thoughts as to their appreciation of one another. The Bride for her deliverance from the intolerable rays of the sun (typical of God's justice) and for the rest and refreshment and "great delight" found under his shadow. The "slumber song" as it has been called (7) occurs again (iii. 5 and viii. 4), and is, as to its mystical meaning, well explained by Fausset: "He who would not lose (communion with) Christ and his Spirit, which is easily grieved and withdrawn, must be tender of conscience and watchful." Here, by common consent, ends the first section of the Song.

8. The voice of my Beloved, behold He cometh, &c.—There is much to be said for a mystical interpretation of this section, continuing to the end of the chapter, as pointing to the first coming of Christ. The mystery of Godhead veiled in flesh seems alluded to in ver. 9, "behind our wall," looking through the window, showing Himself through the lattice. The whole aim of our Lord's ministry on earth, to call out a people, who, in following Him, should be "partakers of a heavenly calling" seems to be set forth in ver. 10-13. The name, "dove," given to the Bride (14) points to a people indwelt by the Spirit, while the closing anticipation of coming daybreak, when the shadows flee away, points to the blessed hope of the Church as to the second coming of the Lord.

FRIDAY, NOV. 21.—Song of Solomon III.

"Until the day break" it is night time with the Bride. This chapter points mystically to the search for the Bridegroom "in the city," which, after some disappointment, ended in finding Him. Then follows a description of the marriage procession of the Bride, "coming up out of the wilderness," carried in the palanquin or litter (as used in the East on such occasions). The King's "bed" is further described as one made by Him for Himself, as made of wood (9), the pillars are "silver" (typical of redemption), the bottom of "gold" (divinity), the covering of "purple" (royalty), the midst thereof being "paved with love." All this points to the cross, and ver. 11 confirms this, having its historical counterpart in Luke xxiii. 28, where Jesus addresses the women who went forth to see Him crowned with the crown of thorns on Calvary, as "Daughters of Jerusalem."

But how could Calvary be to Him the day of the gladness of his heart? Let Heb. xii. 2 answer: "Who for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame." Of that day He had long before said, "How am I straitened till it be accomplished!"

"His mother" would seem to be the Jewish Church, as in Rev. xii. 1-5. She certainly was the procuring cause of his crucifixion, and her sin primarily (see John xi. 52, "Not for that nation only") the cause why "the curse was twined around his brow."

SATURDAY, NOV. 22.—Song of Solomon IV.

This chapter, viewed mystically, begins by celebrating the result of the death of Christ. Having cleansed his Church by "the washing of water," the Heavenly Bridegroom now describes how fair she is in his sight. These praises of the comeliness which He has put upon her occupy the first seven verses, when He repeats, "Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee," an echo of which we find in Eph. v. 27.

The absolute spotlessness of a believer in Christ as to his standing before God is a truth too little realised by those to whom this privilege appertains. Because it is abused, it is too little used. It is intended, when viewed in the light of the price at which we have been purchased, to inflame the soul with love to Him who effected it. It is not our holiness that makes us spotless, but our acceptance in Christ. A realisation of this is what will lead to holiness; but sanctification must not be confounded with justification.

8. Come with me from Lebanon, &c.—An exhortation to the Bride to "seek those things that are above where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God." "From the heights of these Alps, Solomon says, Shulamith shall along with him look down from where the lions and panthers dwell. Near these beasts of prey, and yet inaccessible by them, shall she enjoy the prospect of the extensive pleasant land which was subject to the sceptre of Him who held her safe on those cliffs."—Delitzsch.

9. Thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck.—The faintest look of faith to Christ, the smallest act done for his service, is to Him most precious.

12. A garden inclosed...a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.—If Christ so cares for the hearts of his people that He thus claims them for Himself, how jealous must He be of the time and attention they so often bestow on the world and the things of the world. See 1 John ii. 15.

Sunday Afternoon, November 23.

JESUS CRUCIFIED.—LUKE xxiii. 33-47.

GOLDEN TEXT: ISA. liii. 6.

THERE is no more wonderful or mysterious event in the world's history than this. Old Testament prophecy and type looked forward to it; the Incarnation was mainly in order to it (John xii. 27): on the Transfiguration Mount it was the subject of conversation between Jesus and the glorified saints; and in heaven itself the songs of the redeemed constantly look back upon it. To the outward eye it appears like the hopeless failure of the cause of Jesus; but, as the theme of Gospel preaching, it is "the power of God and the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. i. 24). Study it as the occasion when our sin was laid upon the God-appointed Lamb (Isa. liii. 6; John i. 29), and when full atonement was made.

The exact spot cannot be with certainty determined. It was outside the city (John xix. 20), significantly reminding us that he was our sin offering (Heb. xiii. 12; Lev. iv. 11, 12). The most probable conjecture is that it was on the north road, not far from the Damascus Gate, lying a little back from the road. Its name Calvary (Latin) and Golgotha (Hebrew) means skull; and refers doubtless to the rounded shape of the very slight elevation on which the crucifixion took place.

Crucifixion was a most inhuman mode of execution. Among the Romans it was used only for slaves, and for the worst criminals. It was usual for the criminal to bear his own cross, while a white board suspended from his neck proclaimed in large black letters his crime. The stupefying draught given to persons about to be crucified was a testimony at once to the compassion of the ladies of Jerusalem by whom it was prepared, and to the severity of the torture which this mode of execution involved. Jesus refused this alleviation of his sufferings (Mark xv. 23). "The crucified usually lived twelve hours, sometimes even till the second or third day. The fever which soon set in produced a burning thirst. The increasing inflammation of the wounds in the back, hands, and feet; the congestion of the blood in the head, lungs, and heart; the swelling of every vein, an indescribable oppression, racking pains in the head; the stiffness of the limbs, caused by the unnatural position of the body—these all united to make the punishment of the severest possible character."—Godet. And such was the cross which Jesus endured (Heb. xii. 2)!

Two malefactors were crucified with Him (33), with the idea of adding to the shame of his cross; but only fulfilling Isa. liii. 12. Luke relates three of the seven cries from the cross (34, 43, 46). The first of the seven (34) indicates Christ's unwavering confidence in his Father; his entire freedom from anything like resentment against his enemies; and his wonderful love which even their hatred could not quench. It was true that none of them knew fully what they were doing. Greatest guilt attached to those who knew most (John xix. 11); but even the priests and rulers knew not the full meaning of their crime (Acts iii. 17, xiii. 27). Was not the prayer answered by the forty years' respite, during which the Gospel was preached among them (Acts iii. 26), and many were saved? Four soldiers had charge of each cross, and to them the garments of the victim belonged. In casting lots for them they were simply conforming to their usual custom (34), yet even that act was another fulfilment of prophecy (Ps. xxii. 17).

Cruel mockings aggravated the Lord's dying agonies. The rulers made mockery of his Messiahship (35); the soldiers of his Kingship (36, 37). Both ask Him to save Himself. If He did not do so, it was not because He could not, but because He would not. He loved men more than his own life, and would sacrifice that in order to save them. The drink (36) was probably that stupefying draught which He had refused before. The superscription (38) was intended not so much to degrade Jesus as to insult the Jews. It was Pilate's revenge for having been forced to condemn an innocent man.

The conversion of the dying thief is a beautiful and significant outflashing of Christ's power to save, which changes his seeming defeat into a glorious triumph. It is the first of the conversions which He had predicted would follow from the uplifted cross (John xii. 32). The reply of Jesus (34) exceeded the thief's request. As soon as the agony of the cross ceased, he found himself in paradise in company with Jesus. Such results of blessing could the cross produce!

The three hours' darkness (44) cannot be explained by any natural cause. It was a mysterious phenomenon, and must have struck terror for a time into the hearts of the murderers. It was accompanied by the rending of the veil which hung before the Holy of Holies, intimating that the temple was no longer God's dwelling-place, and that the way into the holiest was now open to all (Heb. x. 19-22). The awful cry (Matt. xxvii. 46) was uttered as these three hours of darkness terminated.

His work is now finished (John xix. 30); and his last cry breathes the spirit of restful confidence (46). Not only the physical darkness, but the darkness from his spirit has gone. The utterance of the centurion (47; comp. Mark xv. 29) was another testimony to the power of the cross of Jesus.

LESSONS.

(1) What wonderful love the cross reveals! Let each one claim it for himself. "He loved me, and gave Himself for me."

(2) Why should God choose such a method of saving us? Because He would be "a just God as well as a Saviour." See Golden Text.

(3) What must be the guilt and doom of those who know, yet reject such an atonement!

The Temperance Cause.

THERE was laid, on Saturday, in Chicago, the corner-stone of the Temple which will serve as the national headquarters of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. The Temple, which will cost £250,000, is to be thirteen stories high.

A conference promoted by the Birmingham Ladies' Union of Workers amongst Women and Girls is being held in Birmingham on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, this week. Lady Frederick Cavendish speaks on rescue work, Mrs. Maclagan on working girls, and Lady Georgina Vernon, Miss Donkin, and Miss Stacey on other subjects.

At a conference of Cheshire and North Staffordshire Baptists, held at Nantwich, a resolution was ordered to be forwarded to Mr. M'Laren, M.P., Crewe, for presentation to the House of Commons in favour of the direct veto on the sale of intoxicating drink. The conference also passed resolutions expressing regret and alarm at the widespread evil of gambling.

Attention is again called by Mr. William Livesey to the appalling figures of the Irish annual Drink Bill. During the past twelve months there has been an increase in the consumption of 486,938 gallons of spirits and 113,963 barrels of beer in Ireland, the total revenue from excise being £4,693,116, which does not take in illicit stills. Public-houses are by far the most numerous in the most poverty-stricken localities.

Prohibition of the liquor traffic by means of direct veto is rapidly spreading in different States of America. In Georgia a recent Consular Report states that of 136 counties, over 100 have entirely prohibited the liquor traffic, with the best results. These results are testified to by the Judges of the State. Taking 75 counties in Mississippi, 40 of them are prohibitory areas under local option. Massachusetts also possesses the direct veto, which is largely adopted in the country portions of the State. In Texas many counties have declared themselves prohibitory by the local veto, and along the Texas and Pacific railroad, there is a stretch of country of over 400 miles which is almost entirely prohibitionist. In the State of Arkansas the number of districts placed under prohibition by local option is increasing, and in Alabama prohibition extends over several entire counties and over parts of 36 others.

The East-end Exhibition at Glasgow has be refused a licence.

A lively discussion took place last week in th Glasgow Established Presbytery on the questi of using intoxicants at ordination dinners.

At the Rathmines School, Dublin, of which Re C. H. Benson, LL.D., is head master, no less tha 89 per cent. of the boys are total abstainers.

The Brewery Corporation Assets Corporatio Limited, is another endeavour to bind the peop of this country to the liquor trade by promises good dividends.

A Dutch sailing vessel recently brought 24,0 jars of gin to Tangier. This is a seasonable ind of the spread of drunkenness in Morocco, bo among Europeans and natives.

For the second time, it is stated, in civic histor the Lord Mayor is a teetotaller. Mr. Savory do not drink wine himself, but he does not comp his guests to exercise the same self-denial.

Mr. Clarke Aspinall, coroner for Liverpool, ma an important suggestion when a case of deat from drinking came before him that involved th payment of club money—namely, that the manag ment of clubs would do well not to pay any mone to the relatives of people who died in drink.

The reports of the Yorkshire Women's Christia Temperance Union indicate vigorous and succes ful work done during the year; the accounts fro the branch associations also show that a good wor is being carried on in Yorkshire amongst police men, cabmen, railway servants, showmen, & Drawing-room, cottage, and other meetings a being held in many towns, with great success, an temperance literature is widely circulated.

Mr. Joseph Malins reports that Norway h reduced its consumption per head of intoxicants b more than one half, and thereby effected a vast r duction in intemperance and crime. Sweden has su pressed household distillation, and given local optio to town and county municipalities, which enable the Gothenburg Town Council to take over th drink-shops, suppress one half of them, enac Sunday closing and early week-day closing. Fro Christiania and other Scandinavian parts com equally cheering accounts.

The Government of Victoria has been defeate and Mr. James Munro, leader of the Oppositio and president of the Victorian Alliance for th Suppression of the Liquor Traffic, has been r turned to office. Since the "No Compensation struggle at home, a movement has arisen in Vi toria for the repeal of the limited compensatio clause in the local option law, which clause wa enacted during Mr. Munro's absence in Europ and it is thought his accession to office will facil tate the repeal. New South Wales is moving i the same direction.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Canon Scott Robert son has completed his annual summary of th sums voluntarily contributed and bequeathed t the work of foreign missions for the financial yea 1889. It shows that the total so given in th British Isles was £1,301,306. Although the tota —£1,301,306 for 1889—is rather less than that fo 1888, it is larger than the total for any yea previous to 1888.

COVENTRY.—A clergyman and his wife labouring at mission work in Coventry, where it i indeed needed, would be most grateful for hel towards a sale to be held in December. Even ol things would be very acceptable. A silk factor has been transformed into a hall where classes, drill and recreations of various kinds are carried on fo the good of the girls. The tide of evil is fearfull strong; but evident blessing has rested on th work. The girls themselves would make thing for the sale if they could get wools and materials Address, Mrs. Nye, Mission House, Coventry.

STRATFORD.—The Mission Church an Girls' Mission, Leyton-road, provides harmles amusement and suitable recreation with religiou and moral training for some of the thousands o young factory girls in this densely populated par of East London, and is carried on by unpai helpers, who give their leisure to it after business A good work is also going on amongst adults wh attend the services. In the winter months th place is often overcrowded, and there is always a good congregation. After seventeen years' hard wear, the temporary iron building much need repair, while the fund for a new building remains stationary. The work is superintended by Mr J. Dowding-Sansom Hazelmere, Atherton-road Forest Gate, E.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Appeals.

Chinese Girls' School at Singapore.—From the commencement of this School, Miss BORTHWICK, of Edinburgh, has sent out annually a box of work. She will be glad to receive any contributions in work or money, before the beginning of April. Address—1, Dean-park-crescent, Edinburgh.

Union Tabernacle, 515, Wandsworth-road.—Rev. D. CAMERON, writes:—"We are working amid the thousands of the artizan and labouring classes of this very needy district. With the winter before us we are crippled, because our funds are more than exhausted. We want about £50 at present to meet deficiencies."

Papers for Abroad.—Staff-Sergeant F. McKenzie, who is coming home from Quetta, writes to thank those kind friends who have sent him THE CHRISTIAN and other papers. He says that good reading is in much request among the soldiers stationed at that place; and requests that, in his absence, any further supply may be kindly sent to Staff-Sergeant McBAIN, of the Durham Light Infantry at Quetta, Beloochistan, India.

Stratford Marsh, E.—We are anxious to reach the many working lads around us, and have started a reading-room for them. Although it has only been open a few weeks, the room proves to be far too small. The poverty and distress around is very great, and we are very anxious during this winter to help those who cannot help themselves. Donations or parcels of illustrated papers, &c., sets of draughts, &c., for the reading-room, will be thankfully received by GEORGE F. RICH, 1, Cooper-terrace, Abbey Mills, Stratford, E.

Berlin.—The work of Dr. Stuckenberg among English and American students, recently described in these pages, requires substantial assistance. A correspondent tells us that, with the exception of the Sunday morning services in a Baptist chapel, the meetings have to be held in the pastor's house. For some time an effort has been in progress to build a church, but so far not sufficient money has been raised to purchase the needful ground. The work is deserving of cordial support. Dr. STUCKENBERG will be glad to hear from friends of the cause of the Gospel in the capital of Germany.

Anti-Infidel Crusade.—As infidels are flooding India and Ceylon with their literature, a postal and personal circulation of Mr. Hastings' and other publications has been extensively carried out in those lands; and, in pleading for a continuance and extension of this effort, Mr. John H. Mitchell (c/o Messrs. Marshall Brothers, 10, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.) mentions that personal friends are willing to give 10,000 copies of Mr. Hasting's "Will the Old Book Stand?" (50s. per 1000) provided that a similar number are subscribed for before Christmas. Mr. MITCHELL will be glad to include in his cases, carriage paid, grants of other suitable books and tracts.

Mr. J. B. Wookey, accompanied by Dr. Barnardo's musical boys, is at present making a tour through the East of Scotland. He has visited Kinross, Perth, Newburgh, Cupar, Cellardyke, and Anstruther. To-day (14th) he will be at St. Andrews; Kirkcaldy, 15, 16, 17; Leven, 18; Dunfermline, 19; Edinburgh, 20; Dalkeith, 21; Melrose, 22; Galashiels, 23; Peebles, 24; Galashiels, 25; Selkirk, 26; Kelso, 27; and Harwich, 28.

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

THE IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

THE CHURCH ARMY will send evangelists (working-men) to any clergymen on due notice, for short or long missions. Hon. Sec., 128 & 130, Edgware-road, W.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE EVANGELISTS' ASSOCIATION will send evangelists to any evangelical denomination in London. Hon. Sec., 5, Crown-villas, Kennington Oval, S.E.

THE COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION supplies qualified missionaries for work in the country. Apply to Secretary, 18, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

LEEDS CONVENTION FOR THE DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE, Nov. 18—20.—Particulars from Secretary, 1, Queen-square, Leeds.

"THE TEMPERANCE WORLD" has entered upon a new series under the editorship of Mr. F. N. Charrington, L.C.C. The object of the paper is to give a synopsis of the work of all the great temperance organisations, and to arouse the hosts of workers to renewed energy and enterprise. Mr. Charrington's name should command the interest of many friends, and it is hoped that his devotion will inspire some to fresh efforts to fight the destructive demon of strong drink. The paper is published at a penny weekly by Messrs. Marlborough & Co., 51, Old Bailey, London, E.C.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1890.

"Let us consider how Joseph fared in Potiphar's house. In the first place, though stripped of his coat, he had not been stripped of his character. See to it, young people, that no one rob you of that: everything else may be replaced but that! He was industrious, prompt, diligent, obedient, reliable. When sent to find his brothers, he had carried out, not the letter only, but the spirit of his father's instructions, and did not rest till he had traced them from Shechem to Dothan.

"And this was the spirit of his life. He did his work, not because he was obliged to do it, but because God had given it to him to do, and had called him to do it. He read the will of God in 'the daily round, the common task.' He said to himself, as he said in after-life, 'God did send me hither' (xlv. 5). He felt that he was the servant—not so much of Potiphar as—of the God of Abraham and Isaac. There in the household of Potiphar, he might live a devout and earnest life as truly as when he spent the long, happy days in Jacob's tent: and he did. And it was this which made him so conscientious and careful, qualities which in business must ensure success."—EXTRACT, Page 31.

AN ADDRESS TO MOTHERS

ENTITLED:

Home Duties, Home Affections, AND Home Influences.

BY

Rev. Dr. CULROSS

Author of "Thy First Love"; "John, whom Jesus Loved"; "Behold, I stand at the Door and Knock," &c., &c.

Tinted covers, 2d.; 3 copies free for 6d.

"Just think for a moment what a marvel of divine wisdom and loving-kindness the Domestic Constitution is. How wonderfully and how graciously God has bound us together, by ties of parental, filial, brotherly, sisterly love, that knit the closer for their very tenderness! I believe there are few things that bring out more clearly what is in the heart of God. If the heavens declare His glory and the firmament showeth His handiwork, the family constitution does so even more. In that constitution God has assigned you mothers a special place under Him, and has committed to you a special trust, in educating those children for eternity. In the mere sight of a child, if only we have true eyes, there is something awe-inspiring. That feeble, helpless thing—that draws its life from yours, that lies and nestles in your lap, folded round with your love and sheltered from every wind that blows—what it may one day become! You look down into its eyes, as it opens the fringed lids: what a world of mystery, and fear, and hope, is there! What possibilities of being! Can you guess what passions and forces are there in embryo? Can you guess what those little hands will do? Can you guess into what grandeur of glory or of woe that life may yet expand?"—EXTRACT.

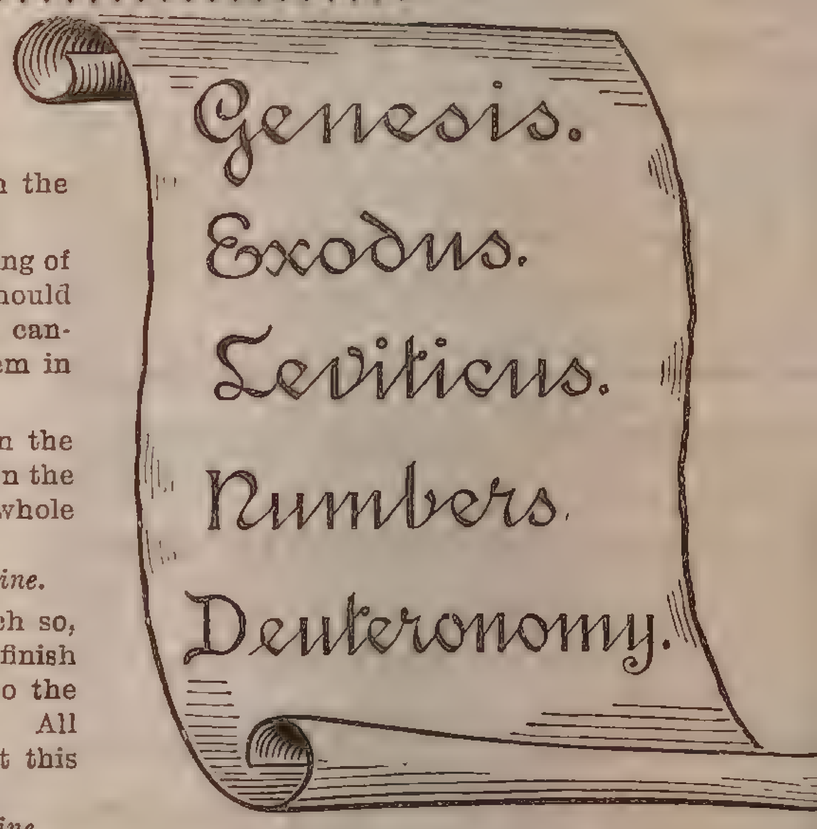
"This remarkably cheap volume is a reprint of 'Notes and Readings,' which appeared in the pages of 'THE CHRISTIAN.' For Sunday School Teachers who have little time and less money, nothing could be more welcome. A commentary of this sort is within the reach of every teacher."—General Baptist Magazine.

"A series of useful notes to accompany the reading of the Pentateuch. If any of our Bible-class friends should be thinking of studying this part of God's Word, they cannot do better than accept the guidance proffered them in this volume."—The Quiver.

"Industry and skill are evident on every page in the selection of the salient incidents for comment, and in the marshalling of really important information; while the whole is suffused with the evangelical spirit."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"We are quite charmed with this volume: so much so, that when we commenced to read it we were obliged to finish it; it was so fascinating. It is a valuable addition to the literature already published on the Old Testament. All who want to understand the Pentateuch should get this book and study it carefully."
Irish Congregational Magazine.



"The book is intended to be used by Bible readers as a work of reference, and appears to have been compiled with a good deal of thought."—The Bookseller.

"The 'Readings' are short, simple, and lucid helps to Bible study. Admirable comments for family worship and private devotion. Used well, they will give 'light on the daily path.'"
The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine.

"This book is the first instalment of a course of 'Notes and Readings,' which it is intended to continue through the whole Bible. This first part covers the five books of Moses. It combines the instructive with the practical, and while unpretentious in form, contains a great amount of information. . . . We can cordially recommend the work to preachers and teachers, and all who desire intelligently and profitably to study the Word of Life.—Primitive Methodist.

GALVANIC BELTS,

FOR the CURE of NERVOUS DISEASES,

HAVE RECEIVED TESTIMONIALS from over

FIFTY MEMBERS of the ROYAL COLLEGE of PHYSICIANS of LONDON, including

THREE PHYSICIANS to

HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

RECENT TESTIMONIALS.

GALVANISM v. SLEEPLESSNESS.

374, Beckwith-street, Birkenhead, Oct. 14, 1890.

DEAR SIR.—I have been wearing your Special Combined Band for Sleeplessness, and already I feel a great deal stronger. Before using your appliance I could not sleep, and did not know a night's rest, but now I can sleep well, and my nervous system is stronger altogether.—Yours respectfully. (Mrs.) A. MOORE.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. RHEUMATISM.

36, Friars-street, Ipswich, October 8, 1890.

GENTLEMEN,—We are pleased to forward you particulars of some marvellous cures by means of Mr. Pulvermacher's Belts which have come under our notice. Mr. Lockwood, of Whitton, purchased a Combined Band for rheumatism, from which he had been a great sufferer for years, and he is now able to get about, and says he is not like the same man. An elderly gentleman called at our office a few days since and expressed his grateful thanks for relief from Sciatica, which every other remedy had failed to cure. Another case of remarkable cure of Sciatica was reported to us of a young man quite disabled, but after wearing your Belt he is now able to play cricket, and, notwithstanding the violent exertion, has had no return.—Faithfully yours,

GOBEY AND SEAMAN.

Messrs. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. INDIGESTION AND NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Hildenborough, near Tonbridge, Kent, Oct. 6, 1890.

DEAR SIR,—I am pleased to inform you that I have enjoyed much better health since wearing your galvanic appliances, and I would strongly recommend them to any one suffering from indigestion and nervous debility.—Yours truly,

P.S.—Full name and address to any inquirer. S. H.

Mr. J. L. Pulvermacher, 194, Regent-street, W.

GALVANISM v. SCIATICA AND RHEUMATISM.

Gainesville Cottage, Osborne-road, East Cowes, October 3, 1890.

GENTLEMEN,—I am glad to say that your galvanic appliance in my own case has given great satisfaction, and I shall not fail to recommend your treatment to any one I come in contact with. You, no doubt, will soon be hearing from my friend, Mr. Hughes, for whom I got one of your Belts in May last; it simply acted like magic on him.—Yours faithfully, F. R. HARRIS.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION. LOSS of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of PULVERMACHER'S world-famed GALVANIC BELTS, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE (COMBINED).

A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in. in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

Packed in case free and sent to any address on receipt of 21/-.

Guy's Tonic
FOR Indigestion & Nervousness.

THESE troublesome complaints are cured more speedily by Guy's Tonic than by any known remedy, a few doses invariably accomplishing more than a prolonged course of any other treatment. Despairing invalids, suffering from the most obstinate forms, must not lose hope until they have given this excellent vegetable Tonic a fair trial.

For loss of appetite, pain after eating, and sluggish liver, Guy's Tonic is superior and preferable to all other preparations. For restoring nervous and debilitated constitutions, removing brain weariness, nerve waste, languor, and despondency, the most implicit confidence can be placed in this simple, safe, and efficient remedy.

Should you have failing health, no matter from what cause, don't hesitate, but procure Guy's Tonic at once. The most obstinate, chronic, and complicated maladies are yielding daily to this matchless medicine.

Dr. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., says:—

"This preparation is intended for use as a general tonic and restorative, and contains neither quinine nor iron, a fact which will render it acceptable to many persons with whom the drugs just noted are apt to disagree. The taste of this tonic is pleasant and agreeable. It contains certain drugs approved as tonic remedies, and included in the Pharmacopœia; while it is evidently well prepared, and will keep for a lengthened period in any climate in well-corked bottles. As a stimulus to weak digestion, Guy's Tonic will act admirably, while in cases of painful digestion and flatulence, it is also likely to prove of signal service. The merits of this preparation appear to consist in its being compounded of ingredients which are habitually used by physicians in cases of ordinary want of tone, and in its safe and pleasant nature as a family remedy."—Health, August 1, 1890.

GUY'S TONIC is sold by all Chemists at 2s. 9d. per Bottle. If you cannot obtain it promptly, send the amount (2s. 9d.) to GUY'S TONIC CO., 4. Ludgate-circus, London, and it will be sent by return, post paid. Insist upon having GUY'S TONIC. No substitute whatever should be accepted.

CHRONIC BRONCHO-PHTHISIS—A CASE of OLD STANDING DISEASE.

In June, 1889, I received a statement and letter requesting advice from Mr. JOHN SCOTT, then of 15, Moss-terrace, Liverpool.

The patient was employed by the firm of Lucas and Aird, contractors, and has worked hard (he says) with his brain. Three years before writing me he took cold when in Holland, and renewed it at Fulham, where he brought up a quantity of blood. His constitution had been weakened when a youth of 18, at which time an attack of inflammation of the lung coming on, the doctor bled him (they were more fond of the lancet then), and took so much from him that (he says) "they almost finished me."

He had (when first writing me) a very violent cough night and day, expectoration being streaked with blood, profuse sweats, pains in the side and tightness of the chest, appetite bad, and corresponding loss of flesh and strength. Had had medical advice for some months, and was no better, but rather worse. I advised him fully.

In less than a month he writes me full of hope: "Less cough, less expectoration; I feel better" (he says), "and get a good comfortable sleep now."

In July and August there was continued improvement. Before three months was so much better and stronger that he was able to take a little change into Scotland and he adds: "I am trusting that in a month or so I may be able to go to business again."

Correspondence continued all through last winter. The weather tried him, but after the winter had passed he was fairly well. Last May he writes me: "I have had a thorough medical examination, and my lungs are pronounced perfectly sound. I am glad to say I have taken a situation as inspector over a new station on the Cheshire Railway."

In reply to a letter of inquiry, Mr. Scott writes me (October 25 last), "I am truly thankful to God that I am in fair good health, thanks to your medicine."—JOHN SCOTT, DAISY BANK, IRLAM, MANCHESTER.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE ON BEHALF OF "Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

NOW SHELTERING, EDUCATING, AND TRAINING OVER 3,500 POOR WAIFS AND STRAYS.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., WOULD KINDLY MARK ON THEM THEIR VALUE, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

Friends willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End. Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold

IN THEIR OWN HOUSES, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they will be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Gymnasium of the Boys' Home in Stepney, E.

DR. BARNARDO earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

THE SICK AND SORROWING. — Funds are earnestly needed by the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, to provide nourishment, clothing, &c., for the afflicted patients. Contributions in money, coal tickets, warm garments, or material of any description are most earnestly solicited.

ROSA PEARMAN, Vice-President.

SIXTY-FIVE YEARS AGO

A Society was founded to assist poor Aged Christians over 65 years of age, living within five miles of St. Paul's, by granting annuities of 10s. per month. The Society is now urgently in need of funds to maintain the present pensions, and is unable to admit many deserving applicants. Will everyone over 65, enjoying the comforts of home, kindly send a contribution? and those who hope to reach 65 are asked to help in remembrance of those who 65 years ago founded "The London Aged Christian Society."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. J. T. BRISCOE, President of the London Baptist Association.

Some of the careers recorded in the numerous volumes of reminiscences published during the last year or two have not been very edifying, and it is therefore refreshing to read in the recently published Life of a well-known artist, Mr. Sidney Cooper, the following testimony :—

> I feel that I have risen to some distinction, and that I have a name which no gold could purchase nor parchment alienate. I have, moreover, found peace in the better knowledge of my Saviour, and grace which will comfort me for the rest of my life ; as well as trust, which will bear me through the dark valley when my time comes, and the blessed assurance that there is a glorious immortality, and that I shall one day see Him as He is.

Such words, coming from a man more than ordinarily successful in his profession, and recorded in a book likely to be widely read, may haply arrest the attention of those who would not be affected by any appeals from the pulpit or in the professedly religious press.

In the teaching and testimony with regard to holiness, which has been so prominent during the past few years, has not one main element been wanting? "When the Day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Taking all and yielding all has been pressed upon the individual, but the oneness of the body of Christ, the increase of the body, the edifying of itself in love by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, has been largely overlooked. Yet it is profoundly true that ONLY "with all saints" can we comprehend the breadth and length, and depth and height, and know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, and be filled with all the fulness of God.

Some of the best of ministers have rightly emphasised the importance of worshippers letting themselves be heard in defence of the faith, and for the good of the Church at large. In our last issue attention was called to the recent address of Professor Skinner on what he styled "The Critical Reconstruction of Old Testament History." That address disclosed a critical spirit which, though very fashionable, cannot be relied on for its results, or commended for its general tendency. On Sunday last, in view of the fact that a collection was to be taken in Highbury Park Presbyterian Church, on behalf of the College with which Professor Skinner is connected, Mr. Robert Paton, one of the worshippers, issued a letter, pointing out that as the Lord Himself accepted the Pentateuch as the work of Moses, his disciples will do well to pretend to no superior wisdom. The letter fitly concluded: "I desire humbly to take my place with Mary, who sat at Jesus's feet and heard his word, and so must refuse to contribute to the support of a Professor who sits in judgment upon the Word of God."

"There is much in the character and doings of even the best of men whom God raised up which cannot be reconciled with the testimony of the Christian conscience." This passage suggests the reflection that the very fact of the imperfections, the frailties, and the sins of the Old Testament patriarchs, prophets, judges, and kings, not being veiled or glossed over, does of itself constitute one of the strongest evidences of the truth of the sacred narrative. Is not this feature a powerful testimony to the fearless impartiality of Holy Writ? Had the saints and heroes of the Old Testament been painted as faultless, would not the sceptic at once have stigmatised the portraits as untrue to life? Moreover, these defects and failings of God's people are recorded, not by way of approval, or for our imitation, but to serve rather as beacon-lights. Ought we not, instead of criticising, to be thankful for the fuller light given to us in the New Testament, which alone enables us to recognise, and by the help of the Holy Spirit, to avoid, those errors which stained the careers of those less favoured ones of old time, upon whom the light had not shone in all its fulness and splendour.

According to an instruction of the Free Church of Scotland Assembly, the week beginning with next Sunday will be observed as a period of special intercession for foreign missions. The close of the week, or the last Sabbath of the month, will be thus observed by all the Missionary Societies of Christendom. Earnest attention to these proposals is called for. "Brethren, pray for us" is the increasing cry of foreign missionaries. The opening fields, the gathering promise, the demand for labourers, the awakened hostility of idolatrous powers, and the remaining supineness at home, give imperative voice to that cry. It was Jesus Himself who taught us to pray—"Lord of the harvest, which is great, and the labourers few, thrust forth labourers into thy harvest."

A bishop of a Welsh diocese has lately been uttering a few remarks on preaching. At a Congregational soirée in Manchester a leading pastor said :—

> He agreed with the bishop that the popular preacher of a generation ago—the man whose preaching consisted in saying extremely well what everyone agreed to—was now a thing of the past. A preacher who made no demand on the intellect of his congregation would not now be popular, and was not desired by the churches.

Because of the importance of such an utterance from two ecclesiastics, we may fittingly ask: May not such words mislead younger men? An Apostle declared that he would put those to whom he wrote in remembrance of great truths even though they knew them. The cry is everywhere heard for a more vivid realisation of what is agreed upon. The appropriation of old truths by Christians, and the gaining effect for them on the unsaved, are the matters now specially desired. As to preaching to the intellect, Daniel Webster—the American statesman — once said that the gravest mistake of the preachers he listened to was this: They forgot that men like himself had had during the week a prolonged strain on thought, and needed on Sundays truths that touched the heart, and sustained in the struggles of life. When the heart really grows the intellect will grow likewise.

During the time the subject is in its present stage, we are not prepared to pass judgment on the discussed horrors of recent African exploration. But the utterance of last Saturday's Spectator will be approved by all philanthropic persons, for it sums up much of feeling on the matter:—

> It is indispensable for the honour of the British name that some check should be placed upon the responsibility of British explorers, and that they should be made, like other men, directly responsible to law for their acts.

It is refreshing to turn from the recent revelations in regard to African horrors to the pages which tell us of the heroic self-sacrifice of Hannington or Mackay. In the one case the aboriginals appeared to have been regarded and treated as of far less importance and value than of wild animals; in the other, their welfare, temporal and spiritual, was the only object that moved the Christian heroes to accept the difficulties, the wearisome labours, and the serious risks, of the missionary's life. The difference, however, is easily accounted for, when we regard the motive power in each case. Commerce and civilisation are well enough in their way, but we have now another striking illustration of their inability to stir men to noble, unselfish deeds, such as are quietly done by the heroes who are led by the Spirit of Christ.

Although we are far from complete agreement with the "Veteran Missionary" who deals in The Asiatic Quarterly with the question of the failure of missions, we are certainly prepared to admit that some of the points that are urged are of a very telling kind. The writer, in drawing a comparison between East and West, asks :—

> Has the East millions of armed men daily trained in the best methods of slaughtering each other at a word, for an idea? Is drunkenness, except where you have introduced it, known in the East? Does unblushing vice openly parade its streets as yours? Do its prisons overflow with an habitually criminal class? Does it hunger and thirst after riches and deify wealth as does the West? Do atheism and unbelief and blasphemy swagger through the East in the disguise of science?

These surely are painful questions, but they point to the extension of evangelistic effort at home rather than to the cessation of mission work abroad.

From the recently published report of the Sanitary Administration of the Punjab for 1889, it is gathered that in some districts female infanticide is practised to a considerable extent. It is considered a disgrace to give birth to a girl, and therefore, in the words of the report:—

When female children are not absolutely starved, they usually do not receive the same care as boys. In times of scarcity girls are the first to suffer, and again in the cold weather they are not so warmly clad as boys are.

The consequence is that very many girls are allowed to fall victims to disease. There is an Act in existence for the prevention of this crime, but it is very frequently, if not generally, evaded. But neither legislation, however wisely conceived, nor police supervision, however stringently maintained, will prove an effective deterrent of this evil practice. Here and there are welcome signs that a brighter and better future is dawning for Indian women. Christian light is beginning to penetrate behind the purdah: before its noonday power, the present cruelties and degradation will melt away.

A matter to which an earlier attention ought to have been turned formed the subject of an anxious deliberation in the course of the visitation at Bowden of the Bishop of Chester. Sunday excursionists, as clergyman after clergyman bore witness, were bringing an alarming demoralisation on country parishes adjacent to large towns. Public-houses grow up near to churches, and, in one case, four to a small population of 300 inhabitants. The conduct of the trippers was described as an intolerable nuisance; in some cases they had been found actually dancing in empty churches. This growing evil is not confined to Cheshire and Lancashire. Dr. Jayne maintained, with justice, that with respect to such a public nuisance the clergy might sit down too meekly. They might fittingly remember Him who cleansed the temple when it was being defiled, and ought at least to call in the secular power.

The Salford Municipal Council is leading the way by a resolution to expend an instalment of £50,000 in the demolition of insanitary houses, this sum being the eighth of the amount, £400,000, which the scheme has been estimated as likely to cost. There is ground for fear lest in this rush of philanthropy, after years of inertness, the thing may be overdone in the direction of compensation to those who are to a great extent responsible for the wretched conditions of many of the localities of our large towns. We refused to sanction compensation to the publican, and the publican and the owner of the insanitary dwellings certainly have been working hand in hand in deepening our social degradation.

A writer in The Speaker, dealing with the subject of the much-needed reform of the Poor Law, protests vigorously against the returns of the Local Government Board, which show that in Great Britain paupers number only one in every thirty-nine of the population. He asserts that three and a half million individuals were forced to accept Poor Law relief last year, and that one in nine of our wage-earning classes is a pauper, as, indeed, are 26 per cent. of all the population over sixty-five years old, and 40 per cent. of all the population over seventy years of age. These figures are alarming, pointing as they do to the dark side of our vaunted civilisation, and the gradual widening of that "vicious circle in which poverty begets vice, and vice nourishes poverty."

It has been noted by various of our contemporaries, and must have been observed by all thoughtful people, that the past few weeks have been packed full of events of a startling and humiliating character. They say to us, "In the day of adversity consider." The awful accident on the Great Western Railway, and the loss of H.M.S. Serpent on the Spanish rocks, remind us that, in spite of all our scientific appliances and all our skill and precaution, there is but a step between us and death; and were it not for God's providential care, not a day would pass without its terrible catastrophe.

The savage murder at Hampstead; the unveiling of the man of mystery whose contemptible cowardice and aliases lend additional repulsiveness to his crime; the resignation of the Governor of Madras on account of proceedings against him in the Divorce Court; the exhibition of disgusting Rabelaisian pictures, for the legally ordered destruction of which we are indebted to the National Vigilance Association—these are straws upon the surface, indicating a forceful current of demoralised life, which should surely bring the nation to her face in humiliation before God.

We had hoped that the delivery of judgment in Dr. Barnardo's appeal, in the matter of the boy Roddy, would have enabled us to refer to and comment on the case. Judgment is still postponed, as we go to press, but we cannot defer alluding briefly to one part of the deliverance of the Lord Chief Justice in the court below. Lord Coleridge thought fit to say that in his opinion, and looking at the facts, Dr. Barnardo had rendered himself unfit to have the custody and care of the boy Roddy. To anyone who is but slightly acquainted with Dr. Barnardo or the magnificent work of rescue he is doing in connection with his Homes, this dictum from the Bench will appear to be nothing short of ludicrous. We are glad to find, moreover, that in the Appeal Court, during the hearing of the case last week, the Master of the Rolls took occasion to say that he did not agree with the severe personal strictures passed on Dr. Barnardo by the Divisional Court. In this remark, at any rate, the Master of the Rolls will have the approbation of all those who are fairly qualified to judge. Dr. Barnardo is no more infallible than is the Lord Chief Justice, but as to his unique fitness for the work, in which God has so remarkably blessed him, there is really no room for variety of opinion.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Mission at Packington Parish Church, near Ilminster, Somerset, by Rev. Walter and Mrs. Bradbury.——Gospel services in a barn at Erchfont, near Devizes.——A mission, by Mr. H. Lakin, to commence at Batley, Nov. 16 to 30, ——Special mission in Longston Hall, Eastbourne, Dec. 1 to 9, conducted by Mr. Gerald Coultas.——A mission by Mr. William Forbes, at Newhaven, to begin Sunday, Nov. 23.——The winter Sunday afternoon evangelistic services at Bournemouth, conducted by Captain Dawson.——Missions by Mr. Philip Cohen, this week at Nottingham, and next week at Cransley, near Kettering.——A five weeks' mission in Fraserburgh, N.B., by Mr. R. Cairns, of the Evangelisation Society.——A week's mission at Cubitt Town, by Mr. Waterfield.——A general mission to be held in Christ Church, Coventry, by Rev. A. E. Foster, of Hastings.——PRAISE: For blessing received at Great Chesterford, Essex, and villages around; and prayer that the blessing may further deepen and extend.

Sanctified in Christ.

A correspondent asks, with reference to the article on "The Gift of the Spirit," in our issue of October 31, what is meant by the statement that "we are forgiven, adopted, justified, sanctified, at once and once for all, when we are born again." An answer will be found to that question in the following chapter from THE BLESSED LIFE: HOW TO FIND AND LIVE IT. By N. J. Hofmeyr, Professor of the Theological College of the Dutch Reformed Church, Stellenbosch, Cape Colony. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This is a book which we warmly recommend.

(See Heb. x. 10: "By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." This sanctification is God's act, when we first believe. Progressive sanctification—i.e., our transfiguration into the image of Jesus Christ—advances according as Rom. xii. 1, 2, is believingly and obediently fulfilled by us.)

"Sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints."—1 COR. i. 2.

"Let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."—2 COR. vii. 1.

GOD justifies the sinner by absolving him from the guilt to which all mankind is subject. For what purpose? To sanctify him, that is, to set him apart for God's worship and service. Every one thus set apart is called a saint or a holy one.

Thus sanctification is as much a Divine act as justification. You are set apart by God Himself for worship and service. You are made a priest in God's sanctuary (1 Pet. ii. 5), a vessel in God's house (2 Tim. ii. 20, 21) a servant of God (Rom. vi. 22).

Your sanctification is coincident with your justification. In its nature, not in time, it follows justification. God cannot justify you without sanctifying you. Whom He pardons, He adopts; and adoption involves worship and service.

You are sanctified in Christ, just as you are justified in Christ. He is made to you both justification and sanctification (1 Cor. i. 30). You are both justified and sanctified in his name (1 Cor. vi. 11). If Christ were not the Justified One, you could not be justified; and if He were not the Sanctified One, you could not be sanctified. He was justified because of his cancelling by his death human guilt, to which He had made Himself subject; and having been justified He was sanctified—that is, set apart at God's right hand (Acts ii. 36; Col. iii. 1) for the position He holds as Son of God (Rom. i. 4. See the original, which has not "declared," but "ordained"). You are justified and sanctified by your connection with Christ. By being united to Him, you are raised in Him to the position of a justified and sanctified person.

When Christ, having been baptized, rose from the waters of Jordan, He was sanctified, or set apart by the Father for the work He had to do upon earth; and so, when He arose from the dead, He was raised by the Spirit of sanctification to the throne of God, and thus set apart, or ordained by God, for his heavenly work. Christ's justification and sanctification were the result of his mediatorial life, and death, and resurrection. But you start upon your Christian career as a justified and sanctified person. Your sanctification does not at all depend upon your growth in the Christian life. There is no Christian life possible without being first sanctified in Christ.

Paul calls all believers saints, even should their walk be at variance with the position they hold as saints. They sin as saints, and suffer for their sins as saints. So their bodies remain the temples of the Holy Spirit, though they should desecrate them by impurity (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17, vi. 19, 20). Though they should not behave as the justified, adopted, and sanctified should do, yet such a conduct, with all its evil consequences, cannot annihilate the Divine act of justification, adoption, and sanctification. Though their sins are most severely dealt with by God (1 Cor. xi. 32; 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18), yet they are not finally rejected by Him. This they owe to their union with Christ, just as they owe every other Christian blessing to their being united to Him.

But sanctification is not only an act of God, just as justification is; it is also, what justification never is, a Divine process. God sets the justified person apart for worship and service by entering into his heart through his Spirit as into his abode (Eph. ii. 22). God's indwelling Spirit manifests Himself in us as the Spirit of worship and service. He changes us into worshippers and servants of God, shows us what is incompatible with God's worship and service, and enables us to separate ourselves from it. He forms in us holy habits of worship and service, and deepens in us the spirit of adoration and obedience. Sanctification as a Divine act is due to the entrance of the Spirit in us; and sanctification as a Divine process is due to the indwelling of the Spirit in us. Peter calls our sanctification the sanctification of the Spirit (1 Pet. i. 2).

Does this process ever end in perfection here below? Never. In a relative sense we may be wholly or entirely sanctified (1 Thess. v. 23), if, as far as our light goes, we are enabled by the Spirit to consecrate, without any reserve, body, soul, and spirit to God. But we shall never be absolutely perfect in this life. The nearer we approach perfection, the more deeply we shall be conscious of our imperfections and of the need of Christ's cleansing blood.

Hitherto we have looked at sanctification from the Divine side; let us now look at it from the human side. God sanctifies those who by faith surrender to Christ. If I am conscious of having surrendered to Him, then I must hold to it that I am set apart by God for worship and service; that I am his priest and servant. Only by faith I enter into the relation of a sanctified person. It is not a faith which is added to, but contained in the faith which accepts pardon; just as the gift of sanctification is not added to, but contained in the gift of justification. Christ, and not justification or sanctification, is the object of faith; but He is a perfect Saviour; and so, by surrendering to Him, I obtain through Him, as an undivided whole, justification, adoption, and sanctification.

Being sanctified by God through faith, I must behave as a sanctified person. I must present myself to God a living and holy sacrifice, and yield my members to Him as instruments of righteousness (Rom. xii. 1, vi. 13). I must accept and maintain by faith the position of a sanctified person. Without this I miss the blessing accruing to me by the Divine act of sanctification. By doing this I grow in a life which accords with the position of a sanctified person. This attitude and life of faith, with regard to the Divinely finished act of sanctification, promotes within me the Divine process of sanctification.

By holding to it that God has set me apart for his worship and service, I can, by faith in the indwelling Spirit of sanctification, keep myself apart, and thus cleanse myself from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God (2 Cor. vii. 1). Living a holy life is nothing but acting out the faith that I am called by God to be holy. Faith holds that the sanctifying power of the indwelling Spirit is present, and must prevail, even though, in the hour of trial and conflict, nothing of this power should be consciously felt. It is not the faith which feels, but which rests, that prevails. "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength" (Isa. xxx. 15).....

We live a holy life, or do a holy work, or fight a holy conflict, only by trustfully looking to Christ.

Professor Drummond on Missions.

THE address of Professor Drummond, delivered before the students of the Free Church College, Edinburgh, was in some respects an instructive and practical talk—the result of his observations in various countries during his recent travels. While the address contains much from which we very strongly dissent, there is at least one point on which we are glad to find ourselves in agreement with the Professor, and to which we desire to give further emphasis.

We are not surprised to read his unfavourable references to the reproduction in the mission field of the miserable divisions in the Church at home. Referring to the workers in China, the Professor, with some exaggeration, says:—

> This band of missionaries is no steady phalanx set in a fixed campaign, but a discordant band of guerillas, recruited from all denominations, wearing all uniforms, waging a random fight...and possessing no common programme or method. Besides being confusing to the Chinese, this means great waste of power.

Japan is described as possessing "all the material and machinery of an advanced and rising civilisation"; but as having "within its borders representatives from every Church in Christendom prospecting for converts." The description is given in Prof. Drummond's interesting and humorous style:—

> Roman Catholics were there, Unitarians were there, Episcopalians of different degrees of height, Presbyterians of different degrees of breadth, Methodists of different degrees of heat, Baptists of different degrees of charity, Theosophists, Spiritualists—every sect, church, and denomination under heaven.

This description should humble the Church before God on account of the sin of its unhappy and useless divisions. Denominations which, at the commencement of their history, were professedly set for the defence of some special truth, cannot plead the same cause for their separate existence now. Vested interests have much more to do with perpetuating our divisions than doctrinal convictions. Must these be maintained at such tremendous cost? We know from the words of our Lord (John xvii. 21) that it is not the eloquence nor the scholarly abilities of our missionaries, but the manifestation of the Church's true unity, that will convince the world of the Divine mission of the Son of God.
